The extraordinariness of an event consists principally of its unusualness. When Lindbergh crossed the Atlantic in an airplane, he did that which no man before him had done—and he received world-wide acclaim for his exploit. Others have now not only crossed the Atlantic in similar manner, but also a voyage from San Francisco to Honolulu by air has been successfully completed. The wonder grows less as the journeys become more frequent. In all probability, the time is not far distant when a trip by airplane across the ocean will attract no more attention than a trip across the continent by train attracts now. So do men become accustomed to the most marvelous achievements. What a tragedy it will be, though, when men look upon the stupendous miracle of a newborn soul as a commonplace occurrence in human affairs! The wonder of it should never cease.

A HIGH PRICE.

A recent newspaper item: "The attempt of Samuel Klein and his father, Morris Klein, of Chicago, to beat the fastest rail time between their home city and Los Angeles in an automobile ended in disaster near Council Grove, Kans., when their machine left the road, killing the son and seriously injuring the father. Leaving Chicago at 3 o'clock Tuesday morning, they piloted their roadster to St. Louis without incident and roared through Kansas City at 2:11 p. m., four minutes ahead of the schedule announced for the 2,440 mile route. They covered the 551 miles to Kansas City at an average of approximately 55 miles an hour. Turning westward on the Santa Fe trail en route to Santa Fe, N. Mex., they maintained an average of about 45 miles an hour. As they approached Bushong, the road narrowed at a culvert, near which another car was parked. The roadster missed the bridge and hurdled a small stream. It landed on the bank of the creek and fell back into the water. When farmers and motorists reached the machine, Samuel was dead. His chest was crushed. His father was unconscious. He sustained a fractured skull, his left arm and right hip were broken, and his right foot was crushed. Physicians said he had little chance to recover."

Son and father paid a high price for what they desired—and what they desired was of little worth. What a pity that men will give their all for that which is worth nothing!

CONCERNING THE COLLECTIONS.

We hesitate to say anything concerning the Conference collections just at the time when so many of our people in the overflowed areas are either impoverished or are trying desperately to save themselves from financial disaster; yet it is this very situation that suggests the propriety of an exhortation to those who are not personally affected by the overflow to use all diligence to bring all assessments up in full. We have not the slightest doubt that at least some of the churches in the stricken territory will meet their obligations in full, and that many others will do nobly; but by the very nature of the case, some of them will be unable to do all they have been accustomed to do and that they would do this year if they had "half a chance." It will be a beautiful thing if those who are able supply the deficiencies of those who lack by raising their assessments in full and more, in order that the work of the church may not suffer. This is a good time for the loyal laymen to show that they can put their churches in the "paid in full" column, and keep them there.

THE STATEMENT BY THE BISHOPS CONCERNING THEOLOGICAL EDUCATION.

In the Advocate of June 23 appeared the "Address of Bishops Concerning Our Schools of Theology." That address contains statements that should cause the whole church to give serious attention to the matter of the better educational preparation of candidates for the ministry. For the sake of emphasis, we quote from the address:

"The education of our ministers has not kept pace with the education of the people at large. Everywhere the standards of popular education have been raised. Consolidated school districts and well equipped buildings with well trained teachers are bringing educational advantages to all boys and girls throughout the country. In larger numbers than ever our young people are attending college. Ambitious young men are in the great universities seeking the best that can be had in the way of professional and business training. Everywhere eager minds are asking questions and demanding answers that satisfy the intellect as well as the heart. In times past our preachers were leaders of the people; they must not be content now to be anything less. With knowledge of the problems of the day, with a deep evangelical experience, and with a positive spiritual message, they must be prepared to give guidance to the thought and life of the rising generation. An imperfectly trained ministry can never furnish the best leadership in spiritual things. * * *

"Thirty-one (Southern Methodist preachers) out of every one hundred have received only an elementary education. Twenty-two out of every one hundred have received only a high school education. Twenty-two out of every one hundred have received some college training. Only eleven out of every one hundred are graduates of colleges. And only four out of every one hundred are college and seminary graduates."

These figures are startling—and staggering! Only eleven out of every one hundred of our preachers graduates of colleges, and only four out of every one hundred seminary graduates also!

Well may the bishops say, "We call upon our pastors and presiding elders everywhere to encourage our young men to go forward with their college and theological training." A preacher who has received only an elementary education, or even a high school education, has a mighty poor chance to become a leader in a community where the young men and women of his church are college graduates. And if the preacher is not a leader, the church to which he belongs sooner or later loses its position of leadership. Our colleges and theological seminaries are institutions of the utmost importance, and they ought to be supported and patronized.

"THE SOUL THAT SINNETH, IT SHALL DIE."

A judge in a neighboring State has recently rendered an interesting decision. The driver of an automobile was on trial for running into and injuring a pedestrian. It was shown that the pedestrian was "jay walking," crossing the street in the middle of the block, and that the driver of the car was obeying all traffic regulations. The judge's decision was to the effect that the driver was blameless, the pedestrian, by his own violation of the law, having laid himself liable to injury.

The divine penalty against sin is explicitly and definitely made known; the sinner has nobody to blame but himself when he suffers the infliction of the penalty.

UNIONISM HINDERING CHRISTIAN UNITY.

By Bishop Warren A. Candler.

A meeting to be held at Lausanne, Switzerland, early in next August, is attracting no little attention.

It is the meeting of "The World Conference on Faith and Order," and it has for its object the promotion of Christian untiy.

It will be composed of delegations representing all the churches of Christendom except the Roman Catholic Church and the non-evangelical churches.

The purpose of the Conference as outlined by Bishop W. A. Manning, of the Protestant Episcopal Church, in an address to the diocese of New York, is not to arrange terms of reunion between the communions, but to discuss differences in the spirit of love and brotherhood, with the hope that through such discussion misunderstandings may be removed, differing positions may be more clearly and justly understood, and the way opened for definite steps toward reunion. No surrender or compromise of any doctrine or position will be sought, and the delegates will carry no authority to commit the churches from which they come to any proposal. Their prayer is that from the deliberations will result recommendations worthy to be referred to all the churches for their consideration.

To the same purpose speaks Hon. Charles Evans Hughes, former Secretary of State and Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, who is chairman of the American Committee of Arrangements for the Conference, who says, "No one is to be asked to surrender honest conviction, to sacrifice independence of thought, much less to give up sincerity." He adds: "But the delegates cannot be insensible to the duty to rise above the differences which dissipate spiritual energy and make antagonisms more impressive than faith. We are not to conceal disagreements, but to ascertain in how much we agree."

Some are expecting too much of the Conference, imagining that it may bring to pass that indefinite thing called "the reunion of Christendom," which, if it means the merging of all churches into one ecclesiastical organization, is an undesirable result.

Upon this phase of the subject the Post-Dispatch of Houston, Tex., speaks most clearly and wisely as follows:

"The lines that divide many of the denominational bodies are very strongly drawn, and there is no prospect of their being wiped out, if by wiping them out is meant that organic union is to be effected. To do this, of course, is not the primary purpose of the Conference. In considering this matter it is desirable that a clear distinction be drawn between unity of spirit and union of organized bodies. The latter is a secondary consideration. Nothing would be gained, while a great deal would be lost, if organizations were merged without a unity of spirit having come to dwell in the hearts of the members of the combination."

Any who have dreamed, or are dreaming, of the organic union of all the churches in one body as the outcome of the Conference at Lausanne are doomed to disappointment. If the aim of the Conference is the accomplishment of that visionary and undesirable object, most of the great churches that have appointed delegates have been induced to adopt a misconception of the end designed by our appointments.

Providential conditions have arisen since my appointment as a delegate to the Conference which prevent my going to Lausanne; and this I greatly regret. But had I been able to go, I should not have felt myself authorized to vote for any merger scheme to bring all the churches into one huge ecclesiasticism. Such a merger would most surely hurt, and not help, the holy cause of Christian unity.

The mere discussion of such ambitious schemes is liable to generate strife rather than to promote peace among the churches. An example of such a strife-making proposal is found in the movement supported by Viscount Halifax in England, concerning which a newspaper correspondent, writing from London, has said:

"England is approaching a religious crisis such as has caused most of her civil troubles during the past 400 years.

"A proposal for co-operation and perhaps union with the Roman Catholic Church threatens to split the Church of England which branched off from Rome 400 years ago.

"There are powerful friends of union and enemies still more powerful. Both sides are tremendously in earnest in furthering their opposite views of what the Church of England should do. Briefly, the argument is between those who want to continue the church as it has been since the days of the Tudor kings and those who yearn for the ritualism of the Holy Roman Church. The modernist churchmen, including, of course, those who with Dean Inge of St. Paul believe in evolution, regard ritualism as showmanship. They want the Church of England to remain itself.

"Of the 2,500,000 communicants of the Church of England, 700,000 are claimed by the pro-union or Anglo-Catholic party. Lord Halifax leads the pro-union faction. Halifax created considerable stir in England when he went to Brussels during the illness of the late Cardinal Mercier and knelt at mass by the bedside of that great Catholic churchman."

It is not expected that any such a proposal of blundering unionism will get a hearing at Lausanne. The Conference will nevertheless promote Christian unity which is a matter of real importance.

Indeed, this World Conference on Faith and Order is a fine manifestation of the large measure of Christian unity already subsisting between the churches, and it will deepen doubtless this noble spirit of brotherliness.

Most thoughtful men will not agree with Dr. William E. Barton, one of the delegates appointed to represent in the Conference the American Congregationalists, when he says rather sharply that the devil will attend and find pleasant relaxation at the Conference because the "sanctified stupidity" of the committee appointed to frame the program of subjects to be discussed has arranged an agenda which he thinks "will get the delegates nowhere."

The devil will doubtess be there; for he is always on hand in any meeting which is likely to hurt his diabolical business. This was his habit and method as far back as the days of Job. In the book which tells us of the trials and tribulation of that man of faith, who "feared God and eschewed evil," we read: "There was a day when the sons of God came to present themselves before the Lord, and Satan came also among them to present himself before the Lord" (Job ii:1).

Satan can afford to stay away from saloons and gambling dens; for he knows his work will go on there without his presence and supervision. But he attends always the meetings of the sons of God, that he may deceive, if possible, the very elect themselves. He followed the Saviour into the wilderness and he is supposed to have harrassed Martin Luther also.

He will be present at Lausanne, but he will not be there to "find a period of relaxation." He will be busy day and night to defeat Christian unity, and one of the devices he will probably try to use to this end will be firing the hearts of ecclesiastical leaders to advocate decisive schemes of unionism. He will probably repeat in their ears the part of our Lord's intercessory prayer in which our Great High Priest said, "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one, as thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me" (John xvii:20 and 21).

With the devil a favorite method of temptation is to misrepresent to good people, and misapply, Holy Scriptures. He tried that form of temptation with our Lord in the wilderness; and he has misled many good people by perverting this prayer of Jesus for Christian unity into a supplication for ecclesiastical unionism.

The very words of this sublime prayer clearly forbid the notion that Jesus prayed for oneness of mechanical organization. The unity for which he prayed was such vital unity as subsists between himself and the Father; and manifestly that supernal unity has nothing to do with a compacted ecclesiasticism which never has existed on the earth and will never come to pass here below.

The unity about which Jesus was, and is, so deeply concerned is that with reference to which the Apostle said: "He that is joined to the Lord is one spirit" (I Cortinthians vi:17). The same thought of union with him, the Master expressed, just before he made his intercessory prayer, when in the parable of the true Vine and the Branches he said to his disciples: "Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself except it abide in the vine, no more can ye except ye abide in me" (John xv:4). In all that wonderful parable there is not the remotest suggestion that the vine should have only one big branch, or that all its branches should be bound in a tightly compressed bundle before fruit could be produced.

To interpret the high-priestly prayer of Jesus as a supplication for a mechanical union of men in one huge ecclesiasticism rather than as a petition for the vital union of his followers with God the Father and the Eternal Son is such a perversion of its meaning as almost approaches its profanation.

AMONG THE LEPERS.

By Wm. C. Allen.

My first visit to a leper settlement was in 1905. It is on an island in the Atlantic Ocean, near San Juan, Porto Rico. It is a desolate spot. The accommodations were crude, the waves hurled themselves upon the rocks, the sea was in all directions with the exception of the faint outlines of the Morro and San Juan in the distance. My friend and I had a meeting with them. At first some of them feared to be beguiled by the invitation of "the Protestant priest," as they called me. That day my eyes were first opened to the thirst for sympathy and gospel cheer on the part of these afflicted people. How they drank in every word! How my own heart was stirred as I beheld their twisted limbs and distorted faces! I confess to feeling that that afternoon's service alone repaid me for my journey of thirteen hundred miles to Porto Rico.

I remember asking one of the patients through an interpreter how they passed their time. He replied, "We read a little, we talk a little and cry a great deal." I asked, "Why do you cry?" His response was, "We want to see our people." As our little boat tossed its way back to San Juan the government official, who had accompanied us and who did not profess to be a religious man, thoughtfully remarked, "After all, say what you will, religion is a great solace."

Another leper colony, surrounded by an ofttimes restless sea, is Robben's Island, about one hour's run from Cape Town, South Africa. Glorious Table Mountain, behind the city, recedes from view as we approach the landing. Here are hundreds of patients, mostly natives, awaiting their doom. Every care that can be afforded, according to the depleted financial resources of the government, has been granted. The world war left the country very poor, and when I was last at Robben's Island, many partly arrested cases were being returned home. The wisdom of such a reduction of expenditure seems questionable.

I recall a funny incident when going over the hospital. I was endeavoring to comfort a native who could barely articulate because much of his face and mouth had been destroyed, but who brokenly conversed in the English language. Finally, rather inanely, I said, "We must leave our afflictions with the Lord." He replied, "We can't do better and we can't do worse." Of course, I knew what he meant.

In the high altitudes of the Transvaal, South Africa, one thousand miles north of Cape Town, is a large leper settlement. That lovable little Frenchman, Chaplain Bourquin, accompanied me when visiting it. The number of patients—Christian and non-Christian—were about one thousand, probably one hundred and fifty of them being of white or near-white parentage. There was a large group of young folks from six to sixteen years of age. I asked how long these children were likely to live, and was informed that possibly within eight years the remorseless malady will have completed its course.

At this colony I had two leper interpreters, one a Negro minister who translated into Zulu, the other into Santo. Elsewhere in Africa a full-blooded Kafir proved to be one of the most responsive interpreters I have had in any part of the world. Englishmen acquainted with him declared that he was the most nimble-minded man they had ever known, being apt at numerous languages, he also being a leper.

Chaplain Bourquin told me that a few days prior to my visit, when he had administered communion to 230 of these people, he in many cases had been compelled to hold the cup to their lips. It has always been a nerve-trying experience to address these deformed, scarred, mutilated wrecks of humanity, with their blighted hopes, their sufferings, their fears. What could I say to them? I admit that after meeting with such pitiful congregations I have been glad to leave the fetid air, yet thankful because of the happiness which visits from a stranger seemed to bring into their monotonous lives.

After a meeting with the natives in the overcrowed assembly room of the settlement in the Transvaal, Chaplain Bourquin overheard one man say to another, "Now I know that God loves us. See, he sent this gentleman all the way from America to tell us how sorry he is for us. Now I am sure God loves us!" How uplifting is a simple faith!

White lepers seem to suffer keenly from mental depression. Among the white patients in this large settlement were two brothers, both young men of fine physical appearance and presenting no exterior indications of trouble. I have been told that leprosy is "not contagious, but is transmissible," yet have observed that whilst in many cases it has not been transmitted where the most intimate relationships have existed there are other cases which seem to justify the belief that it can be communicated to others.

On the Canal Zone, 1916, I visited Palo Seco, a leper colony near Panama. It is controlled by the United States Government. The location is beautiful. Trade winds sweep through the rustling palms and lovely tropical foliage. The views across Panama Bay, for miles dotted with islands, are charming. The patients are given occupations in harmony with their physical ability. Ground is allotted to them, which they till, and the products are paid for by the institution at market value. When I was there two hundred reels of moving picture films were soon to be delivered to the colony. There is a little library. Tokens, made of metal representing the value of the denominations of United States money, are used by the patients. This does away with the possibility of money finding circulation outside of the colony after the lepers may have used it. A dollar of tokens has the same value among them as has a United States silver dollar.

There is a tiny church in this community. Romanists and Protestants use it alternately. Both have their own accessories for the one altar. An interesting history is attached to the brass book-holder in this little house of prayer. Years ago the lepers of Palo Seco heard through a visitor of a leper settlement in Japan. They raised $10 and sent it to Japan. The Japanese lepers in return raised $10 and forwarded it to Palo Seco. The proceeds were invested in the book-holder. International sympathy can be experienced by all peoples of any race or clime.

About eighty lepers have been declared cured at Palo Seco, and returned to their homes after treatment with the chaulmoogra oil remedy. Probably about twenty per cent of lepers to whom it elsewhere has been applied have been cured; but after having been released they have continued under medical observation. The same percentage of cures is being realized among thousands of lepers throughout the world. For centuries the oil of the chaulmoogra tree has been known in India as a remedy for leprosy. It has been comparatively of recent years that the identity of this tree has become known to European and American physicians, and the process of extracting the oil into a reliable medicament has become established. It is stated that after a few applications of the modern preparation, both physical and mental conditions improve. The awful sores eventually heal up. Of course, lost members can never be restored, and disfigurements remain.

The dark-skinned peoples of the Caribbean Sea are apparently susceptible to leprosy. They are often very religious. Their magnificent voices, strangely rich in pathos, pour forth such grand old hymns as, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," or "What a Friend We Have in Jesus." Every syllable swings out a true note—every word carries a personal appeal to the Saviour, their abiding hope.

The number of lepers throughout the world is probably as large as ever. It is stated that in portions of East Africa one per cent of the native population suffers from the disease. The victims of this malady constitute a menace to the physical and economic life about them. They become destitute in almost every relation of life. They suffer in untold ways. The American Mission to Lepers aids more than one hundred hospitals in twenty different lands. I want my readers throughout our much-blessed country to help these suffering people.

San Jose, Calif.

DR. CARLEY AND "ORTHODOXY."

By Rev. J. L. Decell.

In the Advocate of June 23, Dr. Carley takes a fling at orthodoxy and gives forth intimations for liberalism. The editorial is more suggestive than specific, but its implications are "rigid."

Orthodoxy is the great affirmation of the soul corroborating the truths of the Biblical revelation. Gnostics, Marci-Onites, Neo-Platonists, Mancheans, and Socinians in the long ago won their reputations by denouncing orthodoxy. Yet it is still a good word and a more satisfying experience. The word is derived from arthos—right, and dokein—to think. The Doctor of course gives the word a "modern" interpretation, for his elegant sense of fairness would not have allowed him to charge "right thinkers" with having a "closed mind and a crystallized intellect." To him evidently the orthodox are not "right thinkers." We assume from his implications that the orthodox Christian has no ability to think through "new truth," for his mind is shut and his intellect is petrified. Pity the ortho-dokein! Well, the Saviour said something about needing the petrified (rock) in Matthew 7:24-27.

In contending for "the possibility of error in conclusions previously reached" it would be interesting to know just wherein the orthodox Christian has possibly erred. Those whom I know just believe:

The Bible is the Word of God, God's revelation to man and not merely man's groping after God.

Jesus Christ is the unique and only begotten Son of God. And not just a son of God in the sense that any man may be.

The birth of Christ was supernatural and not natural. "Born of the Virgin Mary."

The death of Christ is expiatory and not merely exemplary.

Man is the product of a special creation and not the result of an evolutionary process.

Man is a sinner fallen from original righteousness and apart from redemption in Christ is eternally lost. And is not merely a victim of a bad environment which by culture he will ultimately overcome.

Man is justified by faith in Christ's atoning blood and not by his good works in following the example of Christ.

That there is a heaven for the Christian and a hell for the incorrigibly wicked and finally impenitent sinner.

If it is a reflection to believe these eight points, or any cross to be borne for accepting them, I am sure that the vast majority of the Advocate's constituency cheerfully bear the stigmata.

To be a "constant seeker after truth" is to acknowledge that we have never received nor attained unto the truth, or to admit that all we may expect is to be always striving after but never arriving at the truth. Has there no finality been reached in matters of faith? Is not the Bible revelation true? Is there not a permanent principle of truth possible? Dr. Cuyler said: "I am sick of all this talk of advanced thought in religion. When thought advances beyond the cross of Calvary it goes over the precipice."

The human mind is constitutionally capable of a true objective knowledge as it is to interpret its subjective consciousness. It has been so as far back as history goes. Surely truth has not been hiding all these years awaiting our arrival. Truth has always been true, for as Chaplain Harris says: "A truth once true, is true for evermore, and not even the omnipotence of God can alter it." Then the truth of the existence of God, existence of other persons than ourselves, objective existence of physical objects, that things which are equal to the same thing are equal to one another, and that like causes produce like effects, may just as well be "constantly sought after" as the holy intuitions of the soul and the great affirmations of faith.

The historian Ranke said: "Moral ideas could only expand in area, not in quality. Beyond Christianity it was impossible to go." Development without change is one of the paradoxes of Christianity. The application of truth may never be exhausted and a richer and deeper experience of its power is always desirable. We would not for one moment discount the necessity of our constantly seeking to know more of nature's ways and to realize more of the glorious fullness of Christ. But when it comes to forcing the "open mind" and accepting the latest revised opinions in matters of Christian Faith and other basic matters of life and history, I confess I am skeptical.

As to who has or will "state truth for all time to come" I am sure that mankind will climb higher by proceeding upon the basis that God has revealed truth in his Holy Word and that Mr. John Wesley and the popes of Rome, in so far as they have spoken in harmony with that Word have stated the truth, than mankind will climb by rejecting the pyramids of the ages and go clamoring for a lot of "subjective popes" to climb upon their Babel towers and lead in the "constant seeking after truth."

Even secular papers are admonishing us that the "open mind" leads to trial marriages in the domestic life; utter disregard for law in the civic life; and vacillation and skepticism in the religious life. The three De Autremont boys held "open minds" towards certain great facts in human life, burying themselves in the study of Schopen-hauer, Huxley and Darwin, to steel themselves to commit a dastardly crime for which they now serve a life sentence in prison. One of the great secular papers of the country in discussing editorially, "The Open Mind on Closed Subjects." said: "An open mind upon a subject that was long ago closed by divine order would be nothing else than an open breach in the foundation upon which the noble structure of our civilization rests."

There are immutable truths and the church will get further in the moral certitude of their joyous realization, than by the harrassing and unsatisfying conjecture that probably no one has spoken an unchanging truth and that likely "all is vanity and vexation of spirit." The great affirmations of faith, and not the questionings and arguments of dialectics, will help us on to a better day.

Jackson, Miss.

FROM HON. T. M. EVANS.

It is not my purpose to enter into a controversy with the Rev. W. T. Bazzel or to take up space in the columns of your paper merely for controversial purposes, but having spent approximately sixty years in careful study attempting to learn some truths, and some forty-seven years of that time in a careful study of constitutional and civil rights of a State to protect its citizenship from atheism or other destructive doctrines, and to direct for what purposes the money in the public treasury collected from the people shall be expended, I feel it my duty to give my neighbors and the citizens of my State the benefit of such information as I have acquired, as fully as it was the duty of Moses to lead the children of Israel out of Egypt, or Paul to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ to the Gentiles.

And since the right of the State to direct for what purposes the public money shall be used by an Association which purports to be a representative body of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, many of whom are wearing ecclesiastical robes, and which action has also been approved of and fully indorsed by some of our church papers editorially, and by the publication of articles written by ministers supported by the church, I feel that I have a right to defend my State both in the columns of the church papers and the secular press.

Now, Brother Bazzel, in his reply of June 16, 1927, dodges the issue and says:

"A careful reading of all that I wrote will show that I did not refer to 'the testimony of God' contained in the Scriptures as a 'theory.' I did not call the Genesis account of creation a 'theory.' In using the expression, 'our pet theory,' I referred to that particular interpretation of Genesis which teaches that God created all things, including man, within six days of twenty-four hours each. So you see I did not refer to the Bible as a theory; I did not refer to Genesis as a theory; I did not call God's statement a theory, I referred to the literal, six-day interpretation as a theory; and it is a theory if it is disputed and debatable, is it not?" Now let me call Bro. Bazzel's attention to this fact that before a witness can testify in regard to any matter he must have a personal knowledge of the matters as to which he testifies.

Second, he must be an intelligent witness who is capable of testifying.

Third, he must be a witness of veracity, and if the witness testifies to any material fact which is untrue the jury may disregard his testimony in toto. And when the witness has testified the jury must decide the case on the testimony of the witness alone, and not on the theories of expert witnesses as to what the witness meant, by the statements contained in his testimony. The jury must arrive at its verdict upon the plain statement of the witness who testifies and not upon the construction of experts as to what the witness meant.

Now in the first place I would suggest to Brother Bazzel that he confine himself to the exact statements made in Genesis as to the creation, and if he can find any statement in the first chapter of Genesis to the effect that God created all things, including man, within six days of twenty-four hours he will find something that I have never read. The brother read this in the expert testimony of some witness construing what the Bible said and not in the Book itself.

In the first verse of Genesis it expressly says, "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." The heaven must have been created long before the creation of the earth, for we read that there was war in heaven and that the devil and his angels were cast out and a lake of fire and brimstone was prepared for them, and soon after the world was finished he appeared in the garden of Eden.

It was not necessary to state how long the heaven had been created or to write a history of the things preceding the creation of the earth, but the second verse says, "And the earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep. And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters." As to how long this condition had existed or how it was brought about the Bible is silent.

It was unnecessary to write up a history of its creation. It was sufficient that God in his wisdom created. And then in the third verse we read, "And God said, Let there be light, and there was light." In the fourth verse, "And God saw the light, that it was good; and God divided the light from the darkness." In the fifth verse, "God called the light Day, and the darkness Night." "And the evening and the morning were the first day."

Now, are we to presume that the God who was capable of creating the heaven and the earth and all things that are contained therein, was incapable of using definite language to express his thoughts or to impart the truth?

Let us compare the witnesses; in order to compare the witnesses we must take into consideration their opportunities of acquiring knowledge, and a witness who attempts to testify as to matters which he had no personal knowledge of and has had no opportunities of acquiring any knowledge of the facts is not permitted to testify in court, and his testimony will be ruled out and not permitted to go to the jury.

Now certainly the testimony contained in Genesis as given by God is competent evidence, it is testimony as to facts within his own knowledge. Now what other witness has been abe to testify as to those facts of his knowledge. Genesis then proceeds to set out specific things which were created each day with the definite statements that the evening and morning were the first day, and the evening and the morning were the second day, and the evening and the morning were the third day, and the evening and the morning were the fourth day, and the evening and the morning were the fifth day, and the evening and the morning were the sixth day, and the evening and the morning were the seventh day. The most illiterate child ten years of age knows what the evening and the morning means. It was not necessary to say a day of twenty-four hours, but it was more definite in that it specifically said that the evening and the morning constituted the day.

Brother Bazzel again says:

"Brother Evans seeks to justify an appeal to civil law to protect religious opinion by referring to Aaron, the priest, who made the golden calf, and Moses, the civil ruler, who intervened. But the case referred to is not at all parallel with the modern legislature that would intervene to prevent erroneous teaching in our schools.

"In the first place, Moses was not a secular lawmaker, but a law-giver, who handed down God-made laws. No legislature performs a like function now. If the Mississippi Legislature speaks invariably as a mere mouthpiece of God, then I am willing for it to dictate my opinions.

"Second, the Israelites had no separate secular government at that time, but church and State were one. Moses was the supreme human authority in the church as well as the State. So it was not a secular ruler that saved Israel from the idolatry instigated by the ordained priest."

Now I must take issue with Brother Bazzel on the above statement. I again refer him to his Book of Theory, Genesis.

When God created the world and all that in it is, he had a purpose and his purpose for creating men is definitely stated in Genesis, first chapter, twenty-sixth verse:

"And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth."

So that we see that Adam was created for the specific purpose of exercising dominion or sovereign power over all the world. And that when created he was commissioned and endowed with sovereign power. Genesis 1:27-30.

"So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them.

"And God blessed them, and God said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it; and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth.

"And God said, Behold, I have given you every herb-bearing seed, which is upon the face of all the earth, and every tree, in the which is the fruit of a tree yielding seed; to you it shall be for meat.

"And to every beast of the earth, and to every fowl of the air, and to everything that creepeth upon the earth, wherein there is life, I have given every green herb for meat; and it was so." (See also chapter two.)

From this we learn that Adam or man became God's official agent to exercise sovereign power over the world, and all that is in it, except the fruit of one tree, and therefore man's official act is God's official act, and if man acting in his sovereign power enacts a law, then the law is God's law as to that State or sovereign power. However much it may be an abuse of his sovereign power.

But Brother Bazzel is off again; he says that Moses was not acting as the civil governor, but as the head of the church. I suggest to the brother that he read the Old Bible again.

From the Book of Exodus, we learn that it was the children of Israel as a nation that God led out of Egypt and not merely a church.

The Book of Deuteronomy contains the law of the civil government under which the children of Israel were to live.

The Ten Commandments were written by God with his own fingers and given to Moses as a constitution of a civil government. Deuteronomy 9:10.

"And the Lord delivered unto me two tables of stone written with the finger of God; and on them was written according to all the words which the Lord spake with you in the mount out of the midst of the fire in the day of the assembly."

It was also written in the law. Deuteronomy 6:4-9.

"Hear, O Israel; the Lord our God is one Lord;

"And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might.

"And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart:

"And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up.

"And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thine hand, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes.

"And thou shalt write them upon the posts of thy house, and on thy gates."

The State of Mississippi recognized this to be the duty of the civil government, and in the Preamble to the Constitution wrote the following:

"We, the people of Mississippi in convention assembled, grateful to Almighty God, and invoking his blessing on our work, do ordain and establish this Constitution."

And section 18 of the Constitution of Mississippi reads as follows:

"No religious test as a qualification for office shall be required; and no preference shall be given by law to any religious sect or mode of worship; but the free enjoyment of all religious sentiments and the different modes of worship shall be held sacred. The rights hereby secured shall not be construed to justify acts of licientiousness injurious to morals or dangerous to the peace and safety of the State, or to exclude the Holy Bible from use in any public school of this State."

It will be observed that the last sentence of this Constitution reads "or to exclude the Holy Bible from use in any public school of this State."

The State of Mississippi has recognized the Holy Bible, and it remains for an educataional association posing as a representative body of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and a few editors, and a few licensed preachers of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to deny the right of the State to preserve its teaching and to prevent the teaching of atheism in its stead.

The Book of Deuteronomy contained the law of the civil government of the children of Israel, and was administered by Moses and the civil officers.

The Book of Leviticus contained the ecclesiastical law, which was administered by Aaron and the priest.

The Christian church is not founded upon the law, but is founded upon the covenant or treaty between God and Adam, entered into in the garden of Eden, and which has been fulfilled on God's part by the conception and birth of Jesus Christ, in shedding his blood upon the cross as an atonement for the sins of the world and his bodily resurrection and ascension.

The mission of the church is to keep out of politics and preach the truth of the creation, and fall of man and his redemption by Jesus Christ as given to us in the inspired word of God, the Holy Bible, to the four corners of the earth.

If the brother will run a line north and south and another across it east and west he will find four corners of the earth in which to preach the gospel. It is also true that the sun did not move upon the face of the earth, not a shadow was changed for the space of a day.

"AN EARNEST APPEAL."

Under the above caption and in the New Orleans Christian Advocate of June 16, Bishop Candler makes a stirring and soulful appeal to the outside sympathy and help to rehabilitate and carry on our work in the flooded sections of Mississippi and Louisiana. He asks for $12,000 for Mississippi and $13,000 for Louisiana.

I have only a casual knowledge of the suffering and loss and needs of our church in Louisiana, but I know the needs in our Conference, and the Bishop's estimate is conservative enough, and much less than his asking would be insufficient to meet the situation in Mississippi. The following pastoral charges in the Greenville District have been hurt very badly, namely: Rosedale, Greenville, Leland, Hollandale, Glen Allan and Arcola, one church on Shaw and Litton. Winterville was in the mouth of the break and the water is still deep over that town. Greenville is still under water three to five feet deep in the northern part of that city. The damage to the church building was slight from the fact that the water did not get over the floors, but the parsonage and furniture were well nigh annihilated, and the people called Methodists have suffered losses beyond understanding.

Leland, Hollandale, Glen Allan, Arcola, all the churches and people, with the exception of the Arcola church, have suffered irreparable damage and loss to the church buildings and furniture. It will require thousands of dollars to repair and equip these churches, and they were all good, substantial and ample houses of worship. The people of all this territory have suffered the loss of about all they had except the lands, and they are still deep under water, or most of them, at this writing, June 23. Heretofore, after breaks in the levee the waters ran off in time to plant and make a crop. Not so this time.

After the first flood waters receded and the lands, not half, but thousands of acres, were planted the second time and the crops up and promising, when what is known as the "June rise" came on and covered and destroyed the second crop, and now there is no possibility of planting or making anything after this present flood retires, which will be far in July. The church houses in this flooded area of the Greenville District are damaged to the extent of thousands of dollars, and must be repaired and made usable at once, and the people of these communities are beggared and cannot do it.

Furthermore, these erstwhile happy, brave, heroic people who were carrying on the church and religious activities of their several communities and meeting all the financial obligations and appeals of their church and never failing in a single penny are now bankrupt and fairly on the breadline themselves. They are not able to maintain their pastors, and so help will be required to supplement the living expenses of the following pastors, namely: The Leland pastor, the Glen Allan pastor, the Hollandale pastor, the Arcola pastor, and possibly the Greenville pastor.

Most of all these places have built in recent years, brand new churches, and churches handsome and adequate to meet their needs and befitting the station of the people they serve, and all this without asking or receiving any outside help, with possibly one or two exceptions, and those in very small amounts. All these people suffering in these communities are not only rendered helpless and moneyless and do not know where their own bread is coming from, but they owe money on past and present personal debts, and every one of these churches damaged is in debt and debts must be arranged and interest paid and insurance provided. This is the present plight of our people. They cannot go. They must have help. The people have lost their mules, cows, hogs, corn and hay washed away, plows, wagons, farm implements, etc. Those on the outside cannot begin to realize what it all means, the mental and financial worry of it all, the drab outlook, the suffering, etc. Thousands of them lost beds, quilts, wearing apparel, everything.

With all this they are still brave, the bravest, most heroic set I ever saw, and will stage a comeback, sure as time and fate last. They are not squealing, mourning or giving up. They have grit, courage, pluck and faith, and are busy as ever you saw people with every opening chance as the waters clear away.

They are a proud, self-reliant and energetic folk, and such folks always have a future—they make it with only half a chance.

These lands will be protected because the whole nation has been stirred and aroused as never before to the sublime task of all the people taking over the levees in the name of Uncle Samuel.

But this is the hour of severe and liberal need. Let all who have a dollar's worth of sympathy or a hundred or a thousand or only a quarter's worth, remember, it will be helpful, and really I am persuaded that most all help will come in small amounts.

Remember you are not throwing your money away, casting it upon the "waters," and you know what the Book says about that. You are helping your brethren, a noble, self-reliant, industrious and coming-back folk. They have never begged or asked for help. They are only now being begged for by one who knows their plight. They have always met their obligations to the church, been ready and generous when any call was made on them for help. They have answered all the calls of their church, and no section of the church has been quicker or more liberal to respond to any emergency of need. Now, for their brethren to show sympathy, to rally to their help in this time of dire stress will so hearten and inspire them with the spirit of our connected brotherhood as to put a sweet new hope in their souls and send them on with a song of happy appreciation.

We ask all who will, without further notice or reminder, to do what they can to relieve a sad and appealing need, a need which is appealing and emphatic and cannot be pulled over without a generous response on the part of the more fortunate people whose property and life have not been jeopardized by such a calmaity. I thank our good Bishop Candler for his quick and ready response with his personal check and sympathetic appeal.

Yours truly,

L. M. LIPSCOMB,
Presiding Elder Greenville District.

Greenville, Miss., June 23, 1927.

P. S.—Here's a sample of a personal letter from one of our preachers in one of the good appointments of the district: "My own personal status is, $50 note past due, $100 note due in thirty days; salary reduced $1,000. Nothing paid me since April; $2.48 balance in bank, and nine days till first of month that brings its regular quota of bills. Somebody will have to tell me where I am."

Early help, and quite a lot of it, is needed. The above note is from one of our best, a man who pays his bills promptly and has a conscience as to his obligations and pride in his good name.

I trust help will be hurried, for the needs cannot be exaggerated.—L. M. L.

SEASHORE DIVINITY SCHOOL.

By Rev. H. M. Elllis.

The Seashore Divinity School opened with the best congregation we have ever had, and the coast people attended the lectures throughout better than ever before. Bishop Candler spoke several times of the good attendance. And the coast people spoke often of their appreciation of the meetings.

The attendance of the preachers was somewhat better than last year, and the interest was better sustained. Many pastors felt that they should get back to their charges for the second Sunday.

The only instructors absent were J. T. Weems, Anguilla, Miss., still in high water, and J. A. McCormack, Franklin, La., also in a section troubled with flood. H. W. Rice, of Demopolis, Ala., was elected treasurer, vice H. M. Andrews, absent, and H. R. McKee was put in place of Brother Rice as an instructor.

Many thought Bishop Candler excelled himself in his lectures on "A Bundle of Old Letters," his announced subject for discussing Romans, First and Second Corinthians, and Galatians, dealing with the great facts of Christianity.

Mrs. Candler accompanied the Bishop. She gave pleasure to many of the preachers and ladies. She said she enjoyed her visit and that the climate had benefitted her health.

Dr. Harold Paul Sloan, from Haddonfield, N. J., won his audience with his first lecture, and steadily grew in the affection and apprecation of the brethren with his clear and convincing presentation of the absolute dependability of the great doctrines of the church, his beautiful Christly spirit and his evangelistic passion. The people of the coast, as well as the visiting preachers, were delighted with him. He closed Monday night with a great consecration service and a call to the unconverted.

The following were elected as officers: J. T. Leggett, president; C. C. Miller, vice president; H. M. Ellis, secretary and publicity agent; H. W. Rice, treasurer, and R. H. Harper, dean. A unanimous vote of appreciation and thanks to Dr. H. H. McNeill, of Alabama, who had desired to retire as dean after serving in that position for seventeen years, was given.

The teachers during the session just closed were: C. C. Miller, J. F. Foster, V. G. Clifford, J. L. Sells, J. A. Smith, A. B. Carlton, A. L. Sellers,

"THE AMERICAN ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF ATHEISM, INC."

By Rev. John D. Ellis.

II.

The A. A. A. A. proves the inspiration of the Bible by fulfilling its prophecies.

The apostles announced in advance that mockers would come in the last days, walking after their own ungodly lusts.

To-day they appear boldly upon the public stage, and give notice, that they do not wish to hear from God, or about him.

Modern atheism is bold in treating the most sacred truths with blasphemous contempt, and is unafraid.

It derives a great deal of amusement in referring to the Great I Am as "Big Bad Bill," or as a "whiskered old man up in the sky," who is not to be feared at all.

Its bravery is like unto that bravery which knocks on dynamite; like unto that bravery which walks amid magazines of gunpowder with blazing torch.

If all the foes of the Bible were on the outside of the organized church, the church could present a solid front to the enemy: but alas, the church has many within its folds who are unfriendly to the Bible, and to the faith once delivered to the saints: these are they who look upon the writers of Scripture as a "lot of chumps," and who contend for "sex freedom," "promiscuity," "unmarried unions," etc.

The infidels and traitors to Christianity within the church fulfill the prophecies of the Bible as truly as the avowed atheists on the outside.

"The Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, having their conscience seared with a hot iron: forbidding to marry."

Irreverent, false teachers in the church apostatize, and cause others to apostatize: with conscience cauterized—"marriage is a wornout institution," and should be stopped: sex liberty is an ideal state of society.

When the sanctity of the marriage relation is ridiculed, all sorts of abominations will be introduced, and practiced.

How the offspring of "promiscuity" and "unmarried unions" would fare is not difficult to state. Should they live long enough, they would at least have the "chance" to imitate their illustrious forbears.

It takes more than a contemptuous wave of the hand to disprove the Bible. Hundreds of fulfilled prophecies prove its divine origin. It is at the point of prophecy that Jehovah challenges all the false gods, and all his enemies. Through the mouth of Isaiah he said: "Let them shew the former things, what they be, that we may consider them, and know the latter of them: Or declare us things for to come. Shew the things that are to come hereafter, that we may know that ye are gods."

Jehovah proves that he is the one God of the universe by announcing in advance the things to come hereafter. Fulfilled prophecies through the centuries is a line of argument too absurd for atheism to consider.

If atheism rejects the Bible because it came out of Asia, why not spew the entire human race out of its mouth, because the human race had its origin in Asia. The cradle of the human race was in Asia, the Son of God was born in Asia, and the Light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world, shed its first beams in Asia.

A few of the books of the Bible were written in Europe: some of the apocryphal books in Africa.

Atheism acknowledges that the churches have done some very nice work, such as sending flowers, and visiting the sick, but this hardly represents the work of the church. It has done secular work, but its best work is moral and spiritual. With the gospel of Christ it has transformed character, and built up a Christian citizenship. It has given to men the spirit of good will and brotherhood. The very righteousness which the church preaches ministers to peace and well-being. It has given the world many institutions and its best civilization.

What would happen were we by mutual consent to adopt the program of atheism?

With atheism in the saddle, civilization would be ridden to its death. Chaos would reign in every part of America. Virtue would be ravished, and life and property would be unsafe.

Let people everywhere be permitted to do as they please for five years, or for five days, and the righteous, peace-loving people would have to hide, and carry their gold with them. A virtuous woman would not dare show herself.

Atheism at present, under the influence of the gospel of Christ, may be willing to send a few flowers, but atheism would soon forget, and its own marauding bands would terrorize, and take what it could.

Atheism, with its boast of intellectuality and superoirity, is yet to give the world anything like unto the parable of the Good Samaritan.

Were people generally to throw off the fact of God, and do away with Christian morality, we would soon have a world like unto the one God destroyed with water; an evil-minded, wicked, corrupt, violent world.

Even Voltaire said: "If a God did not exist, it would be necessary to invent one."

Atheism does not believe in authenticated, historical records, but it would accept any scrap of testimony to disprove the flood, and all the Bible truths which cluster around it. Atheism would also given its right arm, if it could trace any nation of earth beyond the time of the flood.

The church is still waiting for that science, or knowledge which overturns the religion of the Bible.

There is much "theory" in the world, but theory is not science. The word "science" comes from the Latin "scio," and means "to know."

The church still waits for that knowledge, truth, or fact which destroys the Bible.

The Christian religion is science, because there is much about it which comes under the category of actual knowledge. It is the science of history, and has for its basis revelation and prophecy.

"What we have felt and seen,
With confidence we tell:
And publish to the sons of men
The signs infallible."

"The kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness and peace, and joy in the Holy Spirit."

What every one needs is Christian experience, even the love of God shed abroad in the heart.

Atheism waves aside the Christ by saying: "A being who came to save the world, and died, without being able to save himself."

He could have saved himself, as he proved when the mob fell backward to the ground: had he saved himself, it would have meant the damnation of the entire human race: he died to save all, except that school of atheists who blaspheme the Holy Ghost: for such there is no hope.

Preachers need to be watchful, because, like laymen, no preacher is impeccable: yet the per cent of preachers who go astray is small in proportion to their number. Were an atheist to commit a crime, it would soon be forgotten: when a preacher commits one, it abides in the memory, and atheists establish a Bureau to keep the record. According to the record kept by atheists, the crimes of preachers is largely connected with sex: therefore, such preachers should be highly commended by the atheists who contend for sex liberty, promiscuity, etc. Maybe also, they are of that class of preachers who preach promiscuity from the platform, and who are trying to practice what they preach. In any event, atheists should take them to their bosoms, and rejoice that their dogmas are beginning to take hold among the preachers!

THE CORINTH DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The fifty-seventh session of the Corinth District Conference met in the elegant new brick Methodist church in Potts Camp, Miss., at 8 o'clock a. m., June 1, and closed at 9:30 p. m., June 2, Presiding Elder E. H. Cunningham in the chair. Rev. L. B. Wimberly was elected secretary. The roll was called and all of the preachers of the district were present except Rev. R. C. Nanny, who was detained on account of the serious illness and the going away of his good wife. God bless and comfort him in this the darkest hour of his life. The reports of the pastors evidenced interest and progress in the entire program of the church.

A large delegation of laymen was present and they seemed to be full of enthusiasm, and many of them are assuming the obligations of their respective offices in a very practical manner. Excellent reports were made. In their addresses before the conference they manifested earnestness and sincerity, and some made great speeches, and from their reports we judge they are living up to the speeches they made.

Our presiding elder, E. H. Cunningham, knows just how to preside over a district conference, and can dispatch business faster than any presiding elder I have known, and yet neglect nothing that should be considered, nor neglect the spiritual part. No man has made more rapid yet deserving advancement than he has, and he bids fair at some future time to be elevated to the episcopacy, which place he would fill with honor and credit to himself and his church.

Quite a number of the connectional brethren were present and represented the claims of the different fields that they represented.

The spiritual atmosphere of the conference was wholesome, and any who failed to catch a new vision of the risen Lord and an inspiration that would renew their faith and cause them to go back to their homes and renew their obligations to the church, reconsecrate their lives to God, failed to receive and appreciate what was given us. The preaching was of a high grade, both instructive and spiritual, and was delivered by the following ministers and in the order given: H. M. Weed, W. H. Menger, G. C. Schwarts, F. L. Wells, D.D., presiding elder of St. Louis Conference, and A. T. McIlwain.

One young man was licensed to preach, and two recommended for admission. J. R. Houston was elected district lay leader, with T. E. Pegram and J. A. Lane, assistants.

The following were elected lay delegates to the Annual Conference: J. G. Houston, D. H. Hall, S. S. Finger, Mrs. J. A. George, Walter Rodgers, H. D. Stevens, T .E. Pegram, W. L. Sweat, C. M. Murry, J. A. E. Pyle, J. A. Cunningham, D. T. Yates, F. M. Roper, Mrs. N. N. Maxey, Dr. F. P. Boatner, Rev. J. T. Gullet, Miss Tryphena Rodgers. Alternates: E. P. Cradock, J. B. Tompson, Bob Greer, Dr. L. W. Worsham, Gus Morgan, H. W. Rees, Miss Sudie Smith, W. L. Hamilton.

The pastor, Rev. W. F. Rodgers, and the committee looked well after their guests, and we were royally entertained in the homes of the local people of Potts Camp, who threw their doors wide open and fed us on the fat of the land. They have a magnificent new brick church there which would be an honor to a town much larger than Potts Camp. We wanted to go back next year, but accepted an invitation to go to South Side, Corinth.

The writer has been attending district conferences for forty-five years, and he pronounced this as being the best in his life.

Mr. Editor, we missed you and you missed the conference of your life.

THE BOYLESS TOWN.

A cross old woman of long ago
Declared that she hated noise;
"The town would be so pleasant, you know,
If only there were no boys."
She scolded and fretted about it till
Her eyes grew heavy as lead,
And then, of a sudden, the town grew still;
For all the boys had fled.

And all through the long and dusty street
There wasn't a boy in view;
The baseball lot where they used to meet
Was a sight to make one blue.
The grass was green on every base
And the paths that the runners made;
For there wasn't a soul in all the place
Who knew how the game was played.

The cherries rotted and went to waste—
There was no one to climb the trees;
And nobody had a single taste,
Save only the birds and bees.
There wasn't a messenger boy—not one—
To speed as such messengers can;
If people wanted their errands done,
They sent for a messenger man.

There was little, I ween, of frolic and mirth;
The sad old town, since it lacked its boys,
Was the dreariest place on earth.
The poor old woman began to weep,
Then she awoke with a sudden scream.
"Dear me," she cried, "I have been asleep.
And, oh, what a horrid dream!"

HOW THEY TOLD THE TIME IN CHINA.

By Frances Margaret Fox.

One day when Uncle Jack came visiting he said to the children, "What has become of your Chinese clock?"

The children started at first; then they laughed, because Uncle Jack was fond of jokes and they wondered what he was thinking about.

"You used to have a Chinese clock," Uncle Jack went on; "she drank milk from a saucer and said 'miaow, miaow.'"

"You mean our cat!" said the children.

"Certainly," answered Uncle Jack; "cats were always used for clocks in China. You can always tell the time if you own a cat."

In came the cat, stepping high, as usual.

"Now," said Uncle Jack, "what time is it by the clock on the mantel?"

Straightway the clock struck twelve times.

"It must be noon then, according to the cat," Uncle Jack went on.

"Our cat doesn't look much like a clock," said one of the children, "and I don't see how the Chinese can use cats for clocks."

"Look at your cat's eyes," advised Uncle Jack. "It is noon now. At noon, the pupil of a cat's eyes, the world over, will be only an up-and-down slit. Later in the day the slit will widen, until at midnight the pupils of her eyes will be round as saucers. As the daylight comes the pupils of her eyes will have grown narrower and narrower, until just at noon when the light is the brightest her pupils will look like narrow slits again."

All the rest of the day the merry children asked the cat to tell to them the time, just as if they were little children of China in the long-ago, when cats were the only clocks.—Selected.

A TRUE STORY.

He was only a hunchback newsboy. For years he stood on the corner dispensing his wares. No day was so stormy as to prevent him from being at his accustomed place. Passers-by frequently, out of pity, would purchase a paper, toss him a coin, and tell him to keep the change. In the great city where he lived, he was only one of many who knew only hardship and were compelled to toil. Boys of the rougher sort who frequented the corner selling the papers of their choice looked upon him with contempt because of his failure to frequent the drug store, where they indulged in drinking soda and smoking cigarettes. They pelted him with snowballs, taunted him, and many times caused him to inwardly grieve.

Towards his tormentors he exhibited a spirit of indulgence, because—as after-events will prove—he was apprehensive lest any act of reprisal on his part would jeopardize his job. He had a burden on his soul, of which the world knew nothing, and he was unwilling to permit any incident to interfere with his program in removing the burden.

Four years he withstood the taunts of the misguided boys on the corner. Then suddenly he threw off his bag, then his coat, and the submissive hunch-back became a raving maniac and pounced upon the one who had assaulted him. He desisted only after the beaten lad begged for mercy.

A crowd gathered, among them the newsies from the four corners. He then addressed them after this fashion: "Boys, for four years I have sold papers on this corner, and for four years I have been maligned, rudely treated, and called names, called a piker, because I would not each evening spend part of my earnings. Gee, but it all hurt! But listen, fellows. I like the good things of life as well as you, but I tried to save my nickels, and I'll tell you why. Down at my home I have a little sister who can hardly see, and four years ago the doctors in this town told me they couldn't help her, but they told me about a big doctor in another city who could cure Mary, but he wanted a lot of money and dad, you know, ran away a long time ago, and mother she works hard, and so I started to sell papers, and, boys, I have saved enough money so Mary can see!"

It is related that he took Mary to the "Big Doctor," and to-day she can see just like any other girl. What a splendid tribute to the unselfishness of the hunchback boy. His name? Never mind; there are others of this type among us to-day; and the moral of this human tale is: never condemn the boy who is not a spend-thrift; treat with deference the working, saving lad, for who knows but what he has some member of his family whom he loves who depends upon his earnings, and whose life is thus made brighter and happier? —Industrial School Journal.

A SWEET LITTLE SINGER.

By Mrs. W. L. Hunton.

Brushing and sweeping and dusting, a little Swedish girl was cleaning a big school room in Stockholm. She warbled and sang as she worked, like a bird in springtime. A lady riding past in her carriage heard the song, and stopped to listen to the sweet voice; then entered the building and hunted about till she found the little singer. The child was shy, and not at all pretty; but her manner was so courteous that the lady was charmed.

"I must take your daughter to Craelius, the famous music master," she said to the mother, who was the janitress of the school building. "She has a voice that will make her fortune."

So the lady took the little girl away with her to see the music master. The great man was delighted with her voice. "I must take her to Count Puche," he said. "He is a great judge of music."

But Count Puche looked coldly at the young singer, and gruffly asked the music master what he expected to do with such a child.

"Only hear her sing," sair Craelius.

This the count consented to do, and when she had finished he cried out in delight: "She shall have the advantage of the Stockholm Academy."

At the academy the child sang and studied, and studied and sang. She was not yet twelve, and with all the praise and attention showered upon her, she was almost in danger of being spoiled.

One evening at an entertainment she was to sing a higher part than she had ever tried before. The house was filled, and everybody was looking for the little favorite. She took her place before the audience, but when she tried to sing there was no sound. She tried again, but all her silvery notes were gone. The master was very angry. Her friends were surprised and grieved, and the poor little singer drooped with sorrow.

Her voice did not come back the next day, nor the next. Slowly the beautiful dream of fame and fortune faded away; yet she bore her disappointment bravely, and said, "I will study."

Four years passed, and the people had quite forgotten the little singer, till one day some one was wanted for an unimportant part in a chorus which none of the regular singers was willing to take, and the master thought again of his poor little pupil. Would she take it? Pleased to be useful and oblige her kind master, she consented to sing.

While practicing her part, to the surprise and joy of both pupil and teacher, the long lost voice suddenly returned with all its beauty and richness. All who remembered the little nightingale received her back with a hearty welcome, and she afterwards became one of the most wonderful singers in the world.

Have you guessed the little Swedish girl's name? It was Jenny Lind.—Deaconess Advocate.

"TIME OUT."

"I do wish you would agree not to talk when I am driving in traffic," said the man to his wife.

"All right, Henry, we can discuss that as we go along."

"Now, sir," said the professor of medicine, "tell me to what class of maladies insomnia belongs?"

"Why—er," replied the medical student, "it's a contagious disease."

"I never heard it so described. Where did you learn this?"

"From experience. Whenever my neighbor's dog can't sleep, I'm just as wakeful as he is."—Selected.

Two small girls were playing together one afternoon in the park.

"I wonder what time it is," said one of them at last.

"Well, it can't be 4 o'clock yet," replied the other with magnificent logic, "because my mother said I was to be home at 4—and I'm not.—The Tattler.

The teacher was using the phonograph to make the children familiar with good music. Two famous opera singers had just finished a duet, and the teacher said:

"Now, children, who can tell me the names of the singers we have just heard?"

"Caruso," replied a small boy.

"Yes, and who was singing with Caruso?"

"His man Friday," was the disconcerting answer.—Epworth Herald.

DIRECTIONS.
All checks and money orders should be made payable to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.
Communications pertaining to subscriptions and other business matters should be addressed to the Manager, or to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.
The Printed Label on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after four weeks, notify us, and we will make it right.
Communications intended for the Editor should be directed to him at 512 Camp Street. Correspondents will observe the following rules: 1. Write on only one side of the paper. 2. If you have a typewriter, by all means use it; otherwise use a good quality of black ink. 3. Leave a space of at least two inches at the top of the first page; leave a margin of at least one inch on the left-hand side of the page; do not crowd the words and the lines together. 4. Take special pains to write proper names correctly and legibly. 5. Use letter paper if you can get it—not note paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

Editorial

WHO WILL DO LIKEWISE?

Mrs. J. W. Collins of Winnfield, La., states that she has been a subscriber to the Advocate for twenty years, that it means much to her and that she would not do without it. In enclosing the amount for her own renewal, she writes: "I saw in the last week's paper where you are facing a financial crisis with the paper, so I am sending an extra two dollars for you to place to the credit of some loyal Advocate supporter who has been stricken by the overflow and will be unable to pay for the years subscription."

We certainly thank this good lady for her fine spirit of cooperation and helpfulness. If even a comparatively small per cent of the 198,000 Methodists within the bounds of Louisiana and Mississippi would manifest as sympathetic an attitude toward their Conference Organ, we should soon have the 1,200 subscriptions that we shall need, according to statement recently made in these columns, to take us over the financial difficulty of the present. R. H. H.

DEATH OF MRS. BRADLEY.

We regret to learn from a letter from Rev. T. M. Bradley, presiding elder of the Sardis District, North Mississippi Conference, that his mother died at Sardis on June 24, and was buried in Cedar Lawn cemetery, Jackson, on the following day. The funeral service was held at the Capitol Street Church, in Jackson, at 4 in the afternoon. Dr. A. F. Watkins conducted the service, assisted by Rev. T. M. Brownlee, Rev. Loyd Decell, and Rev. J. T. McCafferty. "Mother was nearly eighty-five years old," Brother Bradley writes, "and died as she had lived, trusting in God." May he who could weep beside the grave of his friend, comfort Brother Bradley and other dear ones.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Dr. Daniel A. Poling has recently been made editor-in-chief of the Christian Herald.

Rev. P. B. McCullin, pastor of Istrouma Church, Baton Rouge, preached during the middle of June in a meeting at Bethel Church, near Baton Rouge.

Parker Memorial Sunday school, New Orleans, has recently closed a very successful Daily Vacation Bible School of three weeks' duration.

Mr. John Wesley Young, of Montrose, Miss., called at the office last week to see Dr. Carley. The editor will regret not having seen him.

Dr. John F. Foster, pastor at New Iberia, La., passed through New Orleans one day last week, en route home from the Seashore Divinity School at Biloxi.

Rev. P. H. Fontaine, our pastor at Kurthwood, La., recently had an operation in the Baptist Hospital of New Orleans and is now convalescing in the home of relatives in the city.

Dr. B. P. Taylor, pastor of First Methodist Church, Baton Rouge, has returned to his home after a period spent as instructor at Junaluska. While he was gone he preached one Sunday at Charlotte, N. C.

Rev. William Schuhle, our pastor at Kentwood, La., called at the Advocate office one day last week. He was en route home from the Seashore Divinity School, in which he had served as a teacher.

Rev. Theodore Copeland, evangelist, who was once pastor of Rayne Memorial Church, New Orleans, writes that he is engaged in a great meeting at Montpelier, Idaho, in which all the Protestant churches are uniting.

Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr., presiding elder of the Lake Charles District, Louisiana Conference, writes that Bishop Candler has authorized the release of Rev. O. L. Parker from the Converse and Hornbeck charge, and the appointment of Rev. J. H. French to that charge.

ANNUITY BONDS

SAFETY is the first requisite of an investment with a view to regular income.

ANNUITY BONDS have advantage over other investments in that they provide an income that cannot shrink.

YOU may in your lifetime without loss of income or any risk pay over to the Board of Missions, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the amount that you had intended leaving in your will to be used in sending the Gospel "to every creature."

YOU may avoid taxes, various fees or any litigation in connection with your benevolent gifts which sometimes greatly reduce one's bequest. Annuity Bonds enable one to be the executor of his own will.

ALL THIS—and at the same time you enjoy during your lifetime an income that cannot shrink—an income that stands between you and want.

Protection Against Old Age

Rev. Leon Picone, missionary evangelist, has recently opened a preaching point at Port Eads, a village on one of the "passes" which form the mouth of the Mississippi. He is already preaching regularly at Pilot Town, another village in that section.

At the semi-annual meeting last week of the trustees of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, Mr. A. J. Nesbitt, of Montreal, was elected to the board. Mr. Nesbitt is the president of a concern which is identified with hydro-electric development in the provinces of Canada.

One of the best ways to restore houses in overflowed districts to a sanitary condition after the waters recede is the liberal use of lime in the form of whitewash, according to a bulletin recently sent out by Dr. Oscar Dowling, president of the Louisiana State Board of Health.

Church choir directors are in greater demand than the supply, according to J. Abner Sage, head of the department of voice at Southern Methodist University. Mr. Sage will direct a special summer school in sacred music at Mount Sequoyah during August.

From Oakdale, La., where Rev. H. W. Bowman is the pastor, comes the fine report that an indebtedness of $6,600 on the church has been paid. The earnest worker, Brother Hubert Cain, with unflagging zeal, raised the amount necessary, and on the night of June 26 a "burning service" was held and the last note destroyed.

Dr. W. E. Biederwolf, director of what is perhaps the world's largest Bible Conference, and his committee, have prepared what they believe to be an unsurpassed program for the conference which will be held for the thirty-third consecutive year at Winona Lake, Indiana, Aug. 5 to 14, inclusive.

Brother Claude P. Jones, evangelist, will assist Rev. B. H. Williams in a meeting at Mize, Miss., beginning July 10. Brother Jones writes that he has no engagement for the period, July 17 to Aug. 7, and that any pastor desiring his assistance at that time may communicate with him at 103 Fourth Avenue, Hattiesburg, Miss.

Rev. W. E. Thomas, general evangelist and formerly a member of the Louisiana Conference, has recently assisted Rev. A. A. Bernard in a fine meeting at Rayne, La., resulting in forty-one additions to the church and a great blessing to the whole people. Fifty-five have been received into the Rayne church since Conference.

The many friends of Rev. C. C. Millier, pastor at Franklinton, La., were glad to find him looking so well at the recent session of the Divinity School at Biloxi, after the severe illness which he suffered during and after the last Conference. He was an instructor in the school just closed, as he has been for many years.

Mr. S. H. Meyer, treasurer of the Board of Missions of the Louisiana Conference and prominent in other activities of the church, has just returned to New Orleans after a trip to New York City, where he had the pleasure of seeing Dr. F. N. Parker. While passing through Atlanta, he saw Dr. Carley.

The work at Union, Miss., under the pastorate of Rev. R. H. Clegg, is moving along well. Sixteen have been received into the church upon profession of faith. The Advocate goes into fifty per cent of the homes in the charge. Part of the Conference collections have been raised, the pastor's salary is up to date and the special for missions is in full.

Bishop W. N. Ainsworth, who had been in a hospital at Macon, Ga., where he had to undergo an operation for appendicitis, has recovered sufficiently to return to his home. Bishop Ainsworth has engaged passage on the Empress of Russia, sailing from Seattle Aug. 11 for the Orient, where he expects to go to preside over the mission conferences of the church.

Rev. Arthur C. Ryan, D.D., one of the general secretaries of the American Bible Society, died suddenly June 22 from pneumonia at his home in Scarsdale, New York. Dr. Ryan was formerly secretary of the Levant Agency of the Society, with headquarters in Constantinople. On Feb. 5, 1925, while at home on furlough, he was elected General Secretary of the Society, and since that time has given himself devotedly to its work.

At high noon, June 29, Mr. John E. Ramsey, son of Rev. John W. Ramsey, was married to Miss Marion Smith, of West Point. The ceremony was performed in the First Methodist Church of West Point by the father of the groom, assisted by Rev. E. Nash Broyles, the pastor. The bride is a recent graduate of C. W. S., Columbus, and the groom is a successful salesman representing the Cabell Wholesale Electric Company, of Jackson, Miss. Blessings upon them.

Rev. R. E. Woodfin, writing from Sardis, Miss., reports a fine Cokesbury School at Bethel church, beginniing on June 19. Twenty were enrolled. He writes: "When I say that Rev. R. H. B. Gladney taught the school, every one who knows him knows that the work was the very best. I drove that week around 500 miles; we ran the school from 7 to 9 and sometimes to 9:30 p. m. God's blessings upon Brother Gladney as he goes to other fields; he is a great man with a great vision and has a great message for the people."

Graduation exercises at Randolph-Macon Woman's College were held on June 19. The address to the graduates was delivered by Dr. Raymond L. Forman, pastor of St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church, New York. The A.B. degree was delivered to 155 graduates, this being the largest class in the history of the college. President Anderson announced that the endowment of the college had reached $1,000,000, and that plans were being drawn for the building of a new library next year.

Rev. L. E. Crooks, our pastor at Standard, La., writes that he and Rev. H. T. Young were reared in adjoining communities on Little River, that the successive steps in their Christian life and ministry were taken about the same time, and that finally they were ordained elders together in the Louisiana Conference. Having known Brother Young thus intimately, he feels that Brother Young has "reasons for having taken the step he has" in entering the Baptist church and ministry, and asks that our brethren "be charitable in their criticism."

Bishop James Cannon, Jr., recently taken seriously ill on shipboard en route from Africa to London, sailed from England June 18, and expects to land in the States June 25, according to cable advices received June 20 at Southern Methodist mission headquarters at Nashville, Tenn. Bishop Cannon, who remained in England long enough for a thorough examination by specialists in tropical diseases, is reported much improved. Bishop Cannon's illness followed an inspection tour of the Congo Mission, which work is under his jurisdiction.

Rev. J. A. McCormack, pastor at Franklin, La., was a recent visitor to New Orleans, accompanied by his attractive daughter, Miss Nellie May. He brought the assistant editor a generous basket of vegetables from his own garden, including some very fine tomatoes. Brother McCormack is a very successul gardener, and finds the time, in the course of a successful pastorate at Franklin, to raise an abundance of fine vegetables, which he often shares with his friends. Let some others of the brethren make a visit to New Orleans in like manner.

Great progress has been made this year at Denham Sprigs La., where Rev. R. L. Clayton is pastor. A church has been built at Denham Springs at a cost of $5,000, and a parsonage at Walker, both buildings being completed without any indebtedness. To date seventy-one have been received into the church, fifty upon profession of faith. A young man from this charge will apply for admission at the next session of the Louisiana Conference. Brother Clayton was admitted on trial in the Conference of last November, and is the ninety-third preacher to come from the city of New Orleans.

"Our new church is the pride of these remarkable people situated between the Tensas and Ouachita swamp," writes Rev. H. W. Rickey, our pastor at Winnsboro, La. "In the headquarters of a 100 per cent Protestantism we propose, after the flood and the heroic task of building a new church out of a small membership, to engage in a grand campaign for new members. Miss Daisy Davies, of Atlanta, Ga., will do the preaching, and Henry A. Rickey, of Natchitoches, La., will lead the singing; the talented Harrisons will have the orchestral parts in hand. We are asking the subscribers of the Advocate to pray for a deluge of grace to descend on us here in Winnsboro and much distressed Franklin Parish."

Rev. Henry A. Rickey, A.B., of the Louisiana State Normal, a member of the Glee Club, Glee Club Quartet, and president of the Epworth League at Natchitoches, La., who has completed nine units of Standard Training Courses, and has had much experience in religious work among young people, and who is director of the Natchitoches church choir, desires to assist any preacher or evangelist as a choir director or soloist in summer meetings. His references are, Rev. C. C. Wier, presiding elder, Alexandria, La., and Rev. H. L. Johns, Natchitoches, La. His address during the summer is Box 393, Winnsboro, La.

Friends of Bishop W. B. Beauchamp throughout the church, who have been much concerned about his condition since he was taken so seriously ill in Atlanta about two months ago, will be gratified to learn that he has sufficiently recovered his strength to write his first letter since he was taken ill April 5. In this letter, dated June 17 and written to friends in Nashville, Bishop Beauchamp says that he has learned for the first time in his life to "sit down and watch the procession go by." Bishop Beauchamp has been prominent in practically every great movement of the church in recent years, and Methodists throughout the connection join in the wish that it will not be long until he will be able to come out and catch step again with the procession.

Methodism in New Orleans will lose a very valuable layman the latter part of the month when Mr. Allen F. Godat goes to New York City to live, a part of the office force of the Liverpoool, and London and Globe Insurance Company having been transferred from New Orleans to New York. Mr. Godat has held a position of great responsibility with this company for years. A native of New Orleans, Mr. Godat's earliest recollections are of "old Carondelet" Sunday school. He was long a member of Carondelet Street Church. Later he was a member of Parker Memorial Church, and then of Carrollton Avenue Church, where he holds his membership at the present time. In these several churches Mr. Godat has been an active worker as Sunday school teacher and steward, serving as treasurer of the board of stewards of Parker Memorial and as president of the board at Carrollton Avenue.

On Thursday evening of last week the two-story residence in the rear of Parker Memorial Church, New Orleans, which has recently been purchased at a cost of $8,500 by the Parker Memorial congregation for a religious education building, was formally opened with a fitting program. Mr. William Pfaff who, in the midst of his many activities as an outstanding leader in the civic life of New Orleans, has found time during many years to give valuable service to Parker Memorial as a trustee, made an address, as did Mr. W. A. Green, president of the board of stewards; Rev. L. W. Cain, the pastor; Mr. John S. Pearce, superintendent of the Sunday school, and Rev. R. H. Harper. A large number of happy people assembled on the spacious lawn to enjoy the program, which, in addition to the addressses, included some beautiful musical selections, and the evening ended, of course, with refreshments and good fellowship. The building purchased, with the remodeling already done, will serve well for the work of the Intermediate-Senior department of the Sunday school, adult classes, and social features of the church, while the congregation has acquired in addition much ground for future development. The personnel of the Advocate for years past has been rather intimately connected with Parker Memorial Church. Mrs. Meek and Mr. Robert Meek were members of the congregation during the period when Dr. Meek was editor; Dr. Carley was once the pastor of the church, as was also the present assistant editor. The Advocate is therefore pleased to chronicle this significant work which has been carried out under the able leadership of Rev. L. W. Cain.

SEASHORE DIVINITY SCHOOL.

H. R. McKee, W. A. Hays, Wm. Schuhle, and W. H. Saunders. In the class for Admission on Trial were enrolled R. H. Saucier and H. L. Daniel. In the Class of the First Year, T. O. Pruitt, J. W. Laudenslaker, and L. P. Anders. In the Second Year, H. F. Keeble, Watt H. Royal, G. E. Allan, L. E. Beasley, Chas. Assaf, T. E. Nicholson, E. J. Rutledge, A. J. Brown, J. H. Sharp, J. W. Sells, and M. H. McCormack. In the Third Year, Fred Sartin, J. B. Grambling, A. H. Vanlandingham, M. H. McCormack, J. J. Smilie, J. B. Holyfield, I. W. May, S. P. Ashmore, W. F. Daniel, and N. S. Loftus. In the Fourth Year, S. R. Towns, F. J. Jones, B. G. Whitehurst, M. H. Weed, and D. E. Dulaney.

Of the fine young preachers eight were from Alabama, three from Louisiana, eighteen from Mississippi, and one from Texas.

The next session of the Seashore Divinity School will begin on the Tuesday night nearest June 15, 1928, and continue two weeks.

GREENVILLE DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

This body will meet July 14 and 15 at Cleveland. Every pastor who has not already done so, will elect his delegates and send names to Rev. J. W. Ward and also to me. Please, every pastor, try and get your laymen to be present. This is a laymen's conference more largely than a ministers' conference. When it was constituted by the fathers it was meant to be a laymen's conference. Our Conference Lay Leader, the Hon. J. M. Forman, than whom none are stronger and more gifted or capable, and our own Brother S. V. Wall, have charge of this conference—that part of it devoted to laymen's work which will be the best hour or hours of the forenoon of the second day. Pray for this conference and be there.

Obituaries

Obituaries not over 200 words in length will be published free of charge. All over 200 words must be paid for at the rate of 1 cent a word. Count the words and be sure to send the amount necessary with the obituary. That will save trouble all around. We cannot make discriminations. Memorial resolutions are subject to the same rule as obituaries.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, our Heavenly Father, who doeth all things well, has seen fit to call to his eternal reward our friend and co-worker, Brother J. B. Thompson; and,

Whereas, our church and community have lost a faithful and consistent member and an upright citizen, and our Sunday school an efficient librarian, where he served in that capacity for more than twenty-five years; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we seek a closer relationship with the Savior he served, that at the close of life we may be able to say even as he did, "It is well with my soul."

2. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Christian Advocate for publication, and that a copy be sent to each of his daughters, Mrs. J. W. Moore, of Enterprise, and Mrs. Jack Ranager, of Meridian, to whom we extend sincere sympathy, and that a copy be spread upon the record of the Methodist Sunday school of Enterprise, Miss.

Signed: Miss Letitia Wright, Mrs. Wm. M. Estes, Mrs. Daisy C. Price, Committee.

Adopted by the Methodist Sunday school of Enterprise, Miss., June 19, 1927.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, on June 6, death entered the home of our beloved pastor and wife, Rev. and Mrs. J. W. Ward, and snatched away their eldest daughter, MARY, who had just received a diploma at M. S. C. W., and was returning home so happy that her school days were over and that now she was prepared to enter upon her life's work.

A deep gloom settled down on our town when it was learned that she had been transplanted to a brighter clime. Our hearts go out in tender sympathy to the bereaved family. If it were possible we would soften this heavy blow.

Therefore, be it resolved, That the church in all the different departments, such as Sunday school, Missionary Society, Epworth League and prayer meeting, extend sympathy; that a copy be sent to the local papers, and also to the Christian Advocate, and that one be given to the family.

Signed: Mrs. S. C. Taylor, Mrs. J. T. Smith, Committee.

IN MEMORIAM

To the Memory of Mary Ward, Who Passed Away June 6, 1927.

She had started on life's journey,
The future looked bright and fair;
How little we know what was in store
For her, had she lingered there.

Now, she has solved life's problems,
All of its difficulties are over;
Sin's breakers can never reach her,
She is happy on that heavenly shore.

The righteous go away from all evil,
Earth's sorrow can never blight;
They gather flowers that never fade—
In that city where there is no night.

May your dear hearts find comfort,
Knowing you will meet her again;
Where there are no separations;
No pangs of sorrow and pain.

You will miss your darling Mary,
The burden seems too great to bear;
But try to remember she is happy,
With Jesus and loved ones up there.

You will gather up these treasures
That were torn out of your grasp,
And while the cycles of time roll on,
Your happiness shall forever last.

—Mrs. S. C. Taylor, in Cleveland Enterprise.

MISS MARY JANE SCARBOROUGH, sister of Rev. Henry L. Scarborough, of Yazoo County, passed to her reward May 29, 1927. Miss Mary was born in Lauderdale County in 1844, and spent a goood part of her young life in that county, moving from the Lauderdale to the Yazoo County, making her home with her brother, Rev. Henry Scarborough, the remaining days of her life. Miss Mary joined the Methodist church when a girl in Lauderdale County. After moving to the Yazoo County, Mechanicsburg, Miss., she moved her membership to Mount Olivet Methodist church, of the Satartia charge of the Jackson District, and remaining there until death. Miss Mary was born in 1844, and died May 29, 1927, aged 83 years. In that home it will be said, as it was said of David, thou shalt be missed because thy seat will be empty, but on Sunday, May 29, God called her from her home and brother and many friends, and gave her the reward that had been awaiting her coming to receive. So as pastor let me say to brother and friends, weep not as those who have no hope, but lift your eyes off of the lifeless form and behold Sister Mary resting sweetly with Jesus. Written by her pastor, who conducted and said the last words at her grave. I am sending this obituary to the New Orleans Christian Advocate; but by request of Rev. Henry L. Scarborough, her brother, that the Meridian papers copy her obituary that more people who knew her in her girlhood days may get it. So by the brother's request I as pastor am requesting the Meridian papers to please copy this obituary, written and requested by pastor.

A. J. LEGGETT.

On June 25, 1927, the death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Halloway and plucked their seven-months-old jewel. It was hard to see her go, but God knew best. He wanted heaven to be made brighter, but earth is made sadder. But that sweet thought of meeting her again gives a great consolation to all hearts. Little MARY JENE was sick for some time, but the four last days seemed more than she could bear, this being the third time the angels have gone and carried away their jewels. I can see the angels in their haste when God said, go bring little Mary Jene up here; too good for earth. God called her home. But all that could be done we could not keep little Mary Jene. The father and mother have the deepest sympathy from all.

MRS. S. B. POTTS.

Arkabutla, Miss.

On April 27, 1927, at the family cemetery, Connehatta, Miss., friends and loved ones laid to rest the body of J. E. W. (Waldo) HORTON, to await the resurrection morning. Brother Horton was born Oct. 17, 1867, and died April 26, 1927. He professed faith in Jesus Christ as his personal Saviour when he was a child, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Connehatta, of which he remained a member until his death. Brother Horton was one of the first members it was our privilege to know when we were sent to serve that church in the fall of 1924. He was a part of that loyal family of Hortons in the community in which he lived, always loyal and true to their church, and the things that make for a better place in which to live. He was confined to his room for only about one week before his death. However, he had not been well for about eighteen months, and had given a testimony to his friends that all was well with him. This being true, we look forward to that great day, when loved ones shall meet again.

R. H. CLEGG, P. C.

MRS. HOLLY PERSON, the oldest daughter of William Hinton, was born May 10, 1839; died May 30, 1927. She was married to Thomas Person in 1856. She leaves eight children, two sisters, a number of grandchildren and great-grandchildren, nieces and nephews to mourn her going away. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. G. C. Gregory, of Nettleton, and A. S. Briscoe, of Mount Pleasant, in her home church, where she had been a faithful member since a mere child. She loved her church, but for some time has not been able to attend. But she enjoyed the sermons over the radio in the home of her daughter, Mrs. Henry King. When we look on that vacant chair where she sat perusing her dear old Advocate and Holy Book, we are forced to say, with sad hearts:

Darling mother, you have left us,
And we miss your dear sweet face,
And our hearts will long be aching
For the times that could not last.

Home's sweet sunshine seems to vanish
As thy face no more we see;
And without thy living presence
It no more as home can be.

Her daughter,

LAURA.

MR. T. L. MURPHY was born Sept. 8, 1877, and died April 3, 1927. Brother Murphy leaves his wife, two children and some brothers and sisters to mourn his loss. He professed faith in Jesus Christ as his personal Saviour when a boy 13 years old, and joined the Methodist church at Hester's Chapel. He remained a member of this church until three years ago, when he moved to Union, Miss., to live; he then moved his membership to Union, and was a member of that church when he died. As a husband and father, Brother Murphy was true and faithful to the trust committed unto him, being willing to sacrifice anything for his family. He was always faithful and loyal to his church. When anything had to be done in the church, we could always count on him doing his proportionate share. To those who are left behind, let us be faithful and true till that "Home-coming day."

His pastor,

R. H. CLEGG.

CONFERENCE AT MERRYVILLE.

The district conference meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society was held in Merryville Thursday, June 16, the first time this conference has met here. Further interest centered in the event in the fact that it was presided over by Luella Frazer Dees, of Merryville, who is District Secretary.

The auditorium of the Methodist church was beautifully decorated with ferns, potted plants and cut flowers. At 10 o'clock the meeting opened with the program as follows:

Hymn—"The Kingdom Coming."
Prayer—Rev. F. B. Hill.
Hymn—"Take Time to Be Holy."
Devotional—Mrs. J. H. Cain.
Welcome Address—Mrs. F. B. Hill.
Response—Mrs. P. L. Ferguson.
Echoes from conference:
(a) Junior Work—Mrs. Jack Carmichael.
(b) Jubilee—Mrs. C. E. Roberts.
Solo—"In the Sweet By and By," Mrs. F. P. Jones.
Quiet Hour—Mrs. R. F. Harrell.
Noon—At this hour the visitors and delegates repaired to the community hall, where a delicious hot plate luncheon was served by Mrs. F. B. Hill, Mrs. Beeman Houser, Mrs. W. J. Bryce, and Mrs. V. H. Fuller.

Afternoon Session.

Hymn—"I Need Thee Every Hour."
Prayer—Rev. R. F. Harrell.
Devotional—Mrs. R. F. Harrell.
Social Service—Mrs. E. O. Williams.
Solo—"My Task," Mrs. Laurie Sandell.
Council Tidings—Mrs. J. N. McDonald.
Importance of Bible and Mission Study—Mrs. J. H. Cain.
Zone Work—Mrs. Robert Jones.
Report of District Work for 1926—Mrs. Louella Dees.
Short Address—Rev. R. F. Harrell.
Short Address—Rev. F. B. Hill.

"What the Missionary Society Means to Me As a Junior"—Miss Inez Phillips.
"What the Missionary Society Means to Me As a Young Person"—Mrs. J. S. Bennett.
"What the Young People and Juniors Mean to the Adult Missionary Society"—Mrs. R. F. Harrell.
Closing Prayer—Mrs. J. H. Cain.

Visitors and delegates to the district conference June 16 were: Mrs. J. H. Cain, Mrs. E. E. Dunlap, Mrs. D. W. Smith, Mrs. J. D. Sanders, Mrs. N. W. Simms, Mrs. Robert Jones, De Ridder; Mrs. J. S. Bennett, Mrs. J. E. Green, Mrs. M. Bunkley, Barham, La.; Mrs. J. N. McDonald, Mrs. Jack Carmichael, Mrs. P. L. Ferguson, Mrs. F. P. Jones, Mrs. Dan Word and Juniors Joe Tucker and Miriam Hoffpauir, of Leesville; Mrs. R. F. Harrell, Rev. R. F. Harrell, and Young People, Sara Williams, Inez Phillips, of Many, La.; Mrs. Louella F. Dees, De Ridder; Miss Elsie Lowery, Leesville.

ZONE MEETING AT LAKE ARTHUR, LA.

The meeting of zone No. 1, of the Lake Charles District, held at Lake Arthur, June 14, was the best attended session so far, about seventy-five being present. Three auxiliaries were represented: Lake Charles, Sulphur and Lake Arthur, with visitors from Abbeville, Crowley, La., and Houston, Tex. All assembled at the beautiful Lake Arthur camp grounds at the noon hour, and when the dinner bell pealed forth, a happy crowd partook of the delicious luncheon. Between courses the "Who's Who" contest caused much merriment as well as proving instructive.

Mrs. S. C. Carroll, of Sulphur, zone leader, presided at the meeting, opening with "What a Friend We Have in Jesus." Rev. L. Wilson, of Lake Arthur, led the devotional. The first subject under discussion was "The Importance of Mission and Bible Study," which was most capably handled by Mrs. L. L. Harris, of Lake Charles.

The round table discussion was heartily entered into, Mrs. Hale, of Lake Charles, giving several good reasons on "Why Have Zone Meetings."

Rev. W. W. Perry, of Sulphur, spoke on "What the Missionary Society Means to the Pastor."

The little folks of the Lake Arthur Junior Society were so sweet in their sketch, "Suggestions for the Missionary Box."

"Alone" was impressively sung by the young ladies' quartet.

Mrs. Joe Wynn, of Crowley, in her capable manner, discussed "Social Service," keeping before us "Health," which is being stressed this year, and urging us to promote and assisit in clean-up and health campaigns, the recent flood affording wonderful opportunity. We learned more about the hospital work, a new phase of the work this year. In our social service program let us not neglect the moral welfare of our young people.

Miss Anna Mae Mack, of Lake Arthur, entertained delightfully with solos and guitar accompaniment.

Mrs. R. H. Wynn, of Lake Charles, concluded the program, speaking on "Preparation for the Jubilee year in 1928," when the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the Woman's Missionary Society will be celebrated.

Benediction, by Rev. W. W. Perry.

MRS. L. JOHNSON, Secretary.

MEETING AT MONTROSE, MISS.

The Methodist Woman's Missionary Conference of the Newton District met at Montrose, Miss., Methodist church, June 15, 1927, at 10 o'clock, with Mrs. L. E. Alford presiding.

After devotional period, Mrs. Owen Shepherd was elected secretary.

Mrs. Ed. Sartor, from Montrose, gave us a hearty welcome, and re-

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 83

Women Need a Mild Laxative —Not a "Physic"

Countless girls and women now know how foolish and needless it is to "purge" and "physic" themselves to avoid sick headache, dizziness, biliousness, sallow skin, colds, or sour, gassy stomach.

They have found that Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin helps to establish natural bowel "regularity" even for those heretofore chronically constipated. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes a gentle, easy bowel movement but, best of all, it never gripes, sickens or upsets the most delicate girl or woman. Besides, it is absolutely harmless and so pleasant that even a cross, feverish, bilious, sick child gladly takes it.

Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine or write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, for a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE and just see for yourself.

Sunday School

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

The school at Amory has ordered the wall chart, A, and has adopted this as their Program of Work. This school has the building and the equipment. Their next step is to see to it that every officer and teacher is thoroughly prepared to make the largest and best use of this splendid building. It will possibly require five years to demonstrate the value of religious education as a means of establishing the kingdom of God. Tupelo and Amory are the two schools in the Conference that are using the A Program of Work.

The next step we should take is for the small schools to use the Bible text, "The Life of Christ," by Humphrey Lee, and have this course taught in the Sunday school instead of using the quarterlies. The larger schools have a large number of texts to select from, "The Worker and His Bible," "Life of Christ According to Mark," "Teachings of Jesus, Mark and Luke," "The Apostolic Age," etc. Young people who have finished high school could take these courses, pass the required examination and receive credit. When we do work of this type we will begin to understand the worth of a high type of religious education. Who will be the first to blaze the way; who will set the example? The local church must do the largest part in training the future leaders.

Every superintendent, whether in the small school or in the large school, should study at least one book a year and read one book a month. The fact that a man is appointed to the place of leadership does not make him a leader. He must study and thus set the example to his officers and teachers. Most of them will follow, a few will quit and get out of the way. God's method of making great Christians is to give them a great task, and when the task is performed, we shall behold the strong Christian character that God has designed. Brother Superintendent, God is calling upon you to magnify your office and thus reach the heights.

For the third time we are conducting a Standard Training School at Kosciusko. The attendance is small. Owing to the fact that Cokesbury Schools have been enterprised to the north and south, the people say, "Why should we attend, we are going to have a school of our own?" The Cokesbury School has not been projected to kill the Standard School, but as an aid to make it stronger and more helpful. Let us be wise and take advantage of every opportunity offered for our improvement. Another obstacle is, the people are not willing to entertain those who desire to attend the school. Of course we have weather of some kind every day. This is not always the hindrance we think that it is. We thank God and press on.

BETTER SINGING.

Any small town, or pastoral charge may communicate with the undersigned. If we are to have in Southern Methodism singing congregations tomorrow, we must teach our children to-day the principle of reading music by note. We should also teach them to use a standard song book.

District conference at Cleveland, July 14-15. We need a great coming together after the things we have suffered and felt in the flood. We desire very earnestly a deeply spiritual and brotherly fellowship. A strong program will be prepared and a full attendance is anxiously desired. Brother S. V. Wall, our district lay leader, is anxious for a full representation of our charges in their lay leaders. They will be given right of way in the morning session of the second day. Now, let daily prayers be made for the presence of the Divine Spirit upon our sessions.

We want live issues and vital discussions. Whatever may from time to time engage the thoughts of men, our personal relation to the issues of moral and spiritual life stand first with all deeply thinking men. All the salvation we can or shall ever know is involved in knowing that at the center and heart of all is intelligence, law and love, and these are working for man's good.

NINTH ANNUAL ASSEMBLY AT MANSFIELD.

Theme, "The Christian Life;" slogan, "All for Christ, and Christ for All;" Conference slogan, "For the Church Always." Such were the sentiments that guided the every movement and activity of the ninth annual assembly of the Louisiana State Epworth League, which was held in Mansfield College, June 7-14, just passed.

It has been the privilege of the writer to attend a goodly number of League assemblies over the church, and he does not hesitate to say that in every particular this was one of the most profitable he has ever been connected with.

Too much credit cannot be given Rev. J. B. Grambing for the success of this assembly. An able leader and organizer, thoroughly consecrated, everything moved along smoothly from the opening hour to the closing. Brother Grambling is a genius in this line of work, and Louisiana Leaguers do not fail to appreciate him to the fullest.

The faculty gathered together for this occasion was all that anyone could desire. It was composed of the following: Miss Ina C. Brown, Miss Julia Reed, Rev. W. W. Holmes, Rev. D. B. Raulins, Rev. W. C. Childress, Rev. R. L. Armstrong, Rev. C. K. Smith, Rev. Don Dulaney, Rev. Guy Hicks, Rev. B. C. Taylor, Dr. M. F. Wilson, Miss Consuelo Martinez, Mrs. Robert Jackson, Jr., Mrs. M. G. Brown, Miss Elizabeth Langford, Miss Agatha Brewer, and Charles White. A study of these names assures any one that the instruction was of the very highest order.

There gathered in Mansfield for this assembly about two hundred people, and practically every Leaguer present received credit for work done.

The following officers were elected for the new year's work: Charles White, president; Miss Grace Cook, vice president; Miss Elizabeth Daniels, secretary; H. L. Riggs, treasurer; Rev. J. B. Grambling was re-elected dean. The followinig District Secretaries were elected: W. R. Younger, Alexandria District; Miss Wilda Addison, Baton Rouge District; Miss Merle Whitman, Lake Charles District; Miss Elizabeth Langford, Monroe District; Miss Mary Searles, Minden District; Edgar Cayard, New Orleans District; Miss Nellie Gill, Ruston District; Mrs. Alvin Smith, Shreveport District.

I cannot close this brief account of this great assembly without making an observation or two. We were wonderfully inspired by the presence of our own Miss Julia Reed, now under appointment to Cuba, representing the Mission Board. Her personal charms, inspirational morning talks, and her beautiful consecration won all hearts completely. An assembly is hardly successful without the presence of Miss Ina Brown, of the Nashville office. Her instruction in the class room and her words of wisdom contribute much to every assembly which she attends. We are thankful for the presence of these two connectional representatives.

The writer appreciates the privilege

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

sponse was made by Bay Springs representative.

Mrs. L. E. Alford gave her report, which showed a gain in the work, adding that greater gains might be made if more interest was manifested. She stressed the need for leadership, especially for Young People, that they might be better fitted to take their places as future leaders.

Miss Boykin brought a message from our girls' school (Whitworth) at Brookhaven, Miss., outlining the work being done at the college, and making a stirring appeal for our prayers and support, showing so vividly the need of an endowment.

The roll was called and the following auxiliaries were represented: Bay Springs, Adult 3, Juniors 5; Decatur, 2; Dushan, 4; Laurel, First Church, Adult 3, Junior 1; Montrose, Adult 12, Junior 9; Newton, Adult 4, Junior 4; Raleigh, 3; Rose Hill, 3; Sylvarena, 4.

Mrs. Stanley Wilson, Conference Superintendent of Children's Work, outlined the work being done in that division, and explained the recent changes relative to merging the Intermediate Epworth League and Junior Missionary Society, and combination of Young Christian Worker and the Junior Epworthian. She also asked Newton District for $115 for this department.

Our Conference president, Mrs. L. W. Alford, brought us an inspiring message, which meant so much to us. She gave an interesting report of the Council meeting in Shreveport, La. She made an appeal to the women of the church to become more missionary-minded and gave an insight into the work being carried on by the women in the ten great foreign fields. God has indeed blessed our work and prospered it. She briefly set forth some of the plans for the Jubilee to take place in 1928, and reminded us that June 15 to July 15 has been set aside for personal examination and prayer for the work to be done, and for our reconsecration. She gave us the following five goals for the Jubilee:

1. Higher spiritual standards.
2. Extension of our organization.
3. Appreciation of our inheritance.
4. Re-evaluation of our work.
5. Great thank offering.

She mentioned our Wesley houses and community centers, and urged us to increase our pledges more than 15 per cent in order to bring up the deficit which will necessarily occur in the flooded sections.

The following delegates and ministers were introduced: Mrs. Gilman, from Laurel, a charter member of the Woman's Missionary Society for 49 years; Mrs. Neill and Mrs. McLaurin, of Montrose, members for 43 years, and our own Conference daughter, Miss Rosa Eleese McNeil, under appointment to Belgian Congo, in Africa; Brother McLelland, Superintendent of Conference Training School at Montrose; Brother Wells, Bay Springs; Brother McCormack, Brother Applewhite, Newton; Brother Young, pastor-host, and Brother L. E. Alford, presiding elder of Newton District.

Brother Wells led in prayer, and the morning session was dismissed.

The afternoon session opened with the hymn, "The Kingdom Is Coming," and devotional by Brother McCormack.

The minutes of the morning session were read and approved.

Juniors from Newton, Montrose and Bay Springs were presented and gave reports of their work.

The hymn, "Leave It There," was impressively sung by Brother Wells.

Reports of Forest and Laurel, West End, auxiliaries were read by Mrs. Alford. Reports from the following auxiliaries were given by their authorized representatives: Bay Springs, Carthage, Decatur, Dushan, Laurel, First Church, adult; Laurel, First Church, Young Workers; Montrose, Newton, Rose Hill, Raleigh, and Sylvarena. These reports were inspirational and made us realize that the women of our church are doing a great work.

Our District Secretary reported that Songdo, a mission school in Korea, is asking the Woman's Missionary Societies to purchase goods from their textile mills that they may raise $100,000 to maintain their school.

The following papers were given:

"The Importance of Mission and Bible Study," by Mrs. McMullan, of Newton.

"What the Woman's Missionary Society Should Mean to the Home Church," by Mrs. Wells, of Bay Springs.

"Stewardship," by Mrs. Beamon, of Carthage.

Miss Rosa Eleese McNeil told us of the work at Scarritt, and made us feel really proud of the Belle Bennett Memorial.

Conference voted to meet in Bay Springs next year.

Mrs. L. E. Alford read the financial report of the Newton District, which showed that our district has overpaid all its obligations.

Minutes of the afternoon session were read and approved.

After singing the hymn, "Blest Be the Tie That Binds," benediction was pronounced by Brother Applewhite.

MRS. OWEN SHEPHERD,
Secretary.

FROM ALLIGATOR, MISS.

Alligator Missionary Society is glad to report all finances paid in full for this the second quarter of our year's work, besides having contributed $15 to the Alvin Crittendon scholarship, $10 on social service needs, and a liberal supply of clothing to the Red Cross headquarters at Cleveland, Miss.

Our Mission and Bible study classes have been both interesting and instructive, therefore well attended.

All departments are well organized and doing good work. Pray for us that we may go forward to greater things.

Sincerely,
MRS. R. A. BUTLER,
Superintendent of Publicity.

WEBB, MISS., SOCIETY.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Webb church, Greenwood, District, has held all six business meetings, with a splendid attendance. All departments of work have live chairmen, and Bible study is very helpful and interesting. The Society was represented at the district meeting, both in person and on the program.

HIGHER THAN WOOLWORTH BUILDING

The Yearly Sales of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

The Woolworth Building in New York City, which towers 792 feet above the street, is our highest building.

If all the bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound sold in one year could be placed end to end, they would make a column as high as the Woolworth Building. And there would be enough left over to extend from Lynn, Massachusetts to Cleveland, Ohio.

"I have lots of work to do and I am not very strong, but I was getting worse all the time until I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I used to lose my appetite completely at certain times, but I feel very well since I began taking this medicine. I think so much of it that I would go before a notary and swear to its merits. You could step into my home any time and you will find a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. Frank M. Casey, 220 South 11th Ave., Mount Vernon, N. Y.

FROM SOUTH SIDE CHURCH, CORINTH, MISS.

Mr. Editor: The South-Side church has just closed a most satisfactory series of revival services. Brother J. W. Robertson, our Friar Point pastor, did the preaching, which was of the highest order. Scoring sin and hypocrisy in no uncertain terms, yet holding out to the sinner and penitent the wonderful promises of our gracious Father, stirring the hearts of the Christians to greater endeavor and more holy living, his messages were verily "live coals from the altar," for the whole church has been warmed and revived by the meeting.

Though the rain was persistent throughout the ten days, sometime regular downpours, and the street on which the church is located is being paved, the crowds grew in number to the last. The Tuesday morning reconsecration service was truly wonderful, and Friday night, at the last service, following the sermon on "She Hath Done What She Could" the feeling ran high, many men shed tears, and many promised to live so that they could say truthfully that they had served as best they could.

Brother Robertson is a convincing speaker, true as steel to his convictions, and aflame with the desire to save souls, revivify believers and keep in the straight and narrow path those who would listen to, and follow after "strange doctrines." We wish to thank Brother Robertson for his efficient, courageous and timely sermons.

We had the co-operation of our Baptist friends of Tate Street Church, Brother O. H. Richardson and congregation. Brother Cunningham, our genial presiding elder, was with us several times; Brother Maxey of Corinth circuit; Brother McIlwain, of First Church; our local preachers, Brother R. H. Kemp and Brother W. D. Bass, added to the interest by their presence and service.

The choir was led by Mr. Herbert Bass and Mr. Ed. Markle, with Miss Louise McKinney at the piano, and the singing added to the effectiveness of the services.

The spirit of fellowship was strengthened by the entertainment of the preachers in the homes of numerous members. The breaking bread and social hour helping touch the lives of the families as a whole.

We feel the Spirit led us to "higher ground" as a church, and go forward with high hopes.

Fraternally,

J. W. RAPER.

A CHALLENGE TO REV. W. T. BAZZELL.

Rev. W. T. Bazzell, of the North Mississippi Conference, the pastor of the Methodist church in the small inland village of Marietta, in articles which have appeared in the columns of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, has, more than once, expressed himself as believing that the creation required long periods of time rather than six days of twenty-four hours each, and has also stated more than once that one could believe in the theory of evolution and at the same time be a Christian; so I hereby challenge him to a public debate on both these questions. My proposition is: Let him select one man to act as judge, let me select one, namely, Rev. H. M. Ellis, of Biloxi, Mississippi Conference evangelist, and these two men are to select the third man. These three men are to arrange the time and place aftre consulting with Brother Bazzell and myself. The questions for debate to be as follows: I. Resolved, That the six days of creation were periods of time involving more than six days of twenty-four hours each; II. Resolved, That a man can accept the theory of evolution and remain an orthodox Christian. Of course, believing as he does Brother Bazzell will take the affirmative side of both these questions, while I shall take the negative, believing, as I do, in the Bible as the inspired word of God and, therefore, in perfect harmony with true science. I shall be glad also to discuss with Brother Bazzell any time and anywhere the question: "Resolved, That evolution is the true theory of creation rather than the Genesis history—negative mine.

It is understood, of course, that the three men, mentioned above and selected as stated, shall have the authority to arrange all rules of debate, and to decide the question at the close of the discussion.

JOHN W. RAMSEY,
Member of the Mississippi Conference.

Keep Away from Calomel!! It is Quicksilver—Mercury

Never take calomel. It is mercury—a dangerous drug. If you are constipated, bilious, sick, headachy, stomach sour, meals don't taste right, hot days make you drowsy and lazy, take Dodson's Liver Tone. That's all you need.

Calomel salivates. That's why you have to take salts the next day to get it out of your system so it will not eat your bones. You have to stay at home a day to recuperate from the shock it gives you. No wonder Dodson's Liver Tone is so popular. All you do is take a spoonful at night. By morning you are cleaned out good, head is clear, you feel as light as a feather; you are not sick, no danger of salivation, and you can eat anything you want. Think of that.

Get the big bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone from your nearest store. They all have it. Keep it in the house so you will have it handy to take nights before going to bed.

of preaching to these fine young people every night during the assembly. He has been greatly blessed by this touch and association. Watching and studying the every movement of these Leaguers during this week, I returned home with no fear whatever as to our young people. They are eager, in earnest, anxious and willing to bring to their local congregation their consecrated talents. During one of the night services all the delegates present publicly tendered themselves in service to their pastors and local congregation. Brother pastor, take charge of them. They will serve in every manner possible, and obey every righteous command.

"As for me and my house," we thank God for this great gathering of young people, and the inspiration we have personally received.

MARION S. MONK, Pastor,
First Church, Monroe.

FROM DR. WILSON CONCERNING MANSFIELD ASSEMBLY.

I have been loooking for a report of the State Epworth League Assembly, recently held at Mansfield, in the Epworth League column of the Advocate. This was such a fine assembly, and so much real good was accomplished that I trust the State Epworth League reporter will pardon me for trespassing upon his territory, as I try to report, briefly, some of the wonderful things accomplished.

I have been fortunate in attending four State assemblies. In comparison I think I can truthfully say "this was the best ever." There was more harmony, zeal, spirituality, and earnest consecration. In fact, the delegates, from the first service, seemed to have come with the one purpose to make every minute count for the Master. I wish every Methodist in Louisiana could have seen those dear young people give testimony at the vesper services, held at sundown each day. Many with trembling lips and tearful eyes, signified their deep devotion and earnestness.

Dr. Monk delivered the first half of the message Monday night, pleading for entire consecration, and Miss Julia Reed, who is shortly to go as a missionary to Cuba, conducted the last half of the service, seeking Life Service voluteers. Her appeal, in Miss Julia's sweet devoted way, resulted in thirty-seven of those dear fine girls and boys responding. This service was held out in the open under a lighted cross—significant, according to Miss Reed, of a living Savior—and was the most impressive it has ever been my privilege to attend.

Much I could say about Brother Grambling's wonderful leadership and arrangement of the program of instruction, and the high class instructors, including Miss Ina Brown, who taught the book of which she is co-author, "The Choice of a Career," but space will not permit going into details. Suffice it to say that it should be the pleasure and duty of every pastor in the bounds of Louisiana Methodism to support the Epworth League Assembly in every way possible, for truly Christianity in Louisiana is much blessed with these one hundred and thirty-five consecrated young people disseminated throughout our State.

M. F. WILSON, M. D.
New Orleans, La.

MAY BREEZES AT ELIZABETH.

I have not often claimed space in your columns, as my policy has been to "saw wood and say little," but May was such a busy and telling month with us that we want to share our joy with the readers of the Advocate.

May was ushered in with our revival meeting in full swing, the Culpeppers at the helm. When we came to the first Sunday the services were so well in hand that we could safely leave them with the Culpeppers and our laymen while we went to Columbia to preach the commencement sermon. We met some rare characters at Columbia and had a great day with those people. Returning to our own services on Monday we continued them through that week, closing on the night of the second Sunday. The meeting was a success and the Culpeppers have a warm place in the hearts of our people.

At the morning hour of the third Sunday we, with the presiding elder, received our members into the church; administered sacrament to the largest group of communicants ever assembled around our altar for that sacred service, and held the second quarterly conference.

At the evening hour of that day it was our pleasure to preach the commencement sermon for the Elizabeth High School. Rare flowers of the human kingdom shall bloom, from that class, to the glory of God in service to man.

On the following Wednesday we took up our abode in the Elizabeth Hospital, and underwent an operation. Under the skillful hand of our surgeons and careful work of the nurses we passed through the ordeal like magic, and are now back at work. Long shall linger the sweet memories of our people's affection. It was worth getting sick to find out, and we were made to feel that the greatest life on earth is that of a shepherd of a people. They came with their many rare flowers, with their encouraging smile and their devoted prayers. Who would not love to be a Christian servant among God's people? I could not help looking, at times, beyond the veil into God's heaven, and I would find the angels looking down with an approving smile upon the scene. My people came; the others came. We all live, love and serve together here, regardless of station or religious denomination. God loves our people and blesses them. We know the workings of Satan and the weaknesses of mankind, but we pity the individual who finds the world moving away from God!

We are indebted to Brother Wier and Brother Knight for the filling of our pulpit on the two Sundays of our confinement. And, as we pronounce our blessings upon the Advocate and its readers, we pray that June may close as profitably and as pleasantly as did pass the days of May.

H. B. HINES.

CONFERENCE ON EVANGELISM AT JUNALUSKA.

A Conference on Evangelism will be conducted at Lake Junaluska, Aug. 21-26, under the auspices of Southern Methodist Assembly and the General Conference Committee on Evangelism, Bishop Darlington, chairman, and Dr. J. W. Perry, secretary. The general subject of the conference will be, "Mobilizing for a Church-Wide Revival."

On Sunday, Aug. 21, Bishop Mouzon will preach at the morning hour, and Dr. Arthur Moore will preach at the evening hour.

The subject of study on Monday, Aug 22, will be, "Our Need of a Revival." Dr. Luther Bridgers, Dr. Robert E. Goodrich, Dr. Burke Culpepper, Mr. O. B. Andrews, and Rev. J. L. Miller will be the speakers. Dr. Arthur Moore will preach in the evening.

The subject for Tuesday will be, "Preparation," to be discussed by Dr. Lovick P. Law, Dr. Harry M. North, Dr. Walt Holcomb, Dr. L. H. Akers, and Dr. Arthur Moore. Dr. Charles L. Goodell will preach in the evening.

On Wednesday Rev. J. W. Carter, Dr. R. L. Russell, Dr. Thurston B. Price, Dr. Charles L. Goodell, and Rev. Henry W. Bromley will be the chief speakers, discussing the subject, "Mobilizing the Different Groups—Church and Community." Dr. John A. Hutton will preach in the evening.

Rev. John B. Andrews, Dr. Luther Bridgers, Dr. J. W. Perry, Dr. John A. Hutton, and Dr. W. G. Cram will speak on Thursday, discussing, "Conservation." Dr. Goodell will preach in the evening.

Friday will be given to the subject of "Consercation," to be discussed by Rev. W. M. McIntosh, Dr. Andrew Johnson, Dr. William F. Quillian, Bishop Darlington, and Dr. Arthur Moore. The addresses of the day will be followed by a consecration service.

The music of the Conference will be in charge of the song leaders of our church who are approved by the Committee on Evangelism.

On Aug. 19 all railroads in the Southeastern Passenger Ass'n, except the Florida East Coast, Atlantic Coast Line and Clinchfield, will sell round trip tickets for one fare plus one dollar. Arrangements are made for the entertainment of guests at the hotels, including the assembly fee for the six days of the Conference at $15.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

Was it so strange that on his daring flight
He reached the goal with all the world a-thrill?
Perhaps One walked upon the waves that night,
And seeing faith, He bade the winds "Be still!"

—From the Living Church.

The above lines, which of course refer to Lindbergh, should also remind us of the firm faith which should ever be the companion of the "sky pilots" of a different kind than Lindbergh—of the preachers of the church. If they would themselves reach the city of God and faithfully pilot others, they must have a strong hold upon the eternal verities.

The large and highly organized Bible class is often a doubtful asset to the church, its method following very closely the usual order of church services, bringing it into actual though not intentional competition with the morning worship. Great care, therefore, needs to be exercised that the Bible class may strengthen instead of hinder the work of the pastor.

Rev. H. R. L. Sheppard wrote a letter to his congregation recently on the occasion of his resignation on account of ill health from Saint Martin's-in-the-Fields Church in London. Speaking of the treatment which should be given his successor, he wrote: "And you won't say, will you, as was so often said to me then, 'This can not be done and ought not to be done, for it was not done by the last vicar?' " We agree with the New York Christian Advocate that this was good advice. When a preacher leaves a church, he ought to leave it, and likewise the church should let him go —should not be always telling the new pastor how the retiring pastor did things.

It is to be hoped that the returns from our three Conferences will show a wide observance of Sunday School Day. The observance of the Day is required by the Discipline and it would seem that no loyal pastor and people would evade the responsibility. Sunday School Day provides a fine opportunity to exhibit the work of the Sabbath school to the church, to "sell" the church, to use a common expression of the day, on the importance of the Sunday school, and to secure funds for the extension of the work.

While the pastors should be able to arrange for a period of rest, usually during the summer, there should be no let-up in the activities of the churches in the larger centers during the summer. In the rural districts the summer is often a period of great activity in revival meetings and otherwise, but in the cities the churches often resign themselves to a supposedly necessary apathy. Other things are going at high pressure during the summer and it is an error to suppose that God is limited by times and seasons. He is not asleep nor gone on a journey during the summer, as were Baal and Ashtaroth when old Elijah mocked their priests on Carmel's top.

A celebrated preacher fell into the habit of quoting, "In my hand no price I bring," every Sunday. One day he received a brief note, "We think we have been sufficiently reminded of the emptiness of your hands." A full and complete preparation for every service, a preparation which has in it many elements—pastoral visiting which brings a preacher to know the needs of his people, much Bible reading, other good reading, some knowledge of current events and current thought, and, above all, prayer and meditation, will save a preacher from "vain repetitions," which are as wisely to be avoided in a sermon as they are in a prayer.

There is an old saying that a turtle will not turn loose until it thunders. But it takes more than thunder to shake some old sayings loose, though some of them have never had any facts to sustain them. This is true of the old saying that the children of ministers are worse than the children of other men. The children of ministers hear this from their earliest years. They are never allowed to forget it. Even people of culture seem to find pleasure in reminding them of it. A recent issue of the Times-Picayune is sufficient comment on the above. We take the following from the column of Questions and Answers:

Q. Are the children of ministers really worse than the children of other people? E. W. F.

A. Recently published statistics do not bear out the old time supposition that ministers' children were in any way inferior either in morals or otherwise to the children of other people. On the contrary, the percentage of ministers' sons and daughters who are represented in Who's Who in America is surprisingly large. In the 1927 edition, 2697 persons, or 11.7 per cent, of all those noted were sons and daughters of clergymen. There were also many others, where the fathers combined preaching with other occupations.

Sunday school leaders will be interested to learn that "the Synod Sunday School Committee of Egypt is investigating the Daily Vacation Bible School idea in connection with working out a plan for a Sunday school union for Egypt and the Soudan."

Ex-Governor M. R. Patterson, writing in the Memphis Commercial Appeal, roundly condemns Rev. William Norman Guthrie for some astounding opinions which he has recently expressed, particularly for declaring that "the New Testament is a book written by a lot of chumps, who were thick in the head." Mr. Guthrie then goes on to say that Christ was a genius and knew how to make the "chumps" serve. Mr. Patterson aptly writes, "I wonder how the frocked priests, who should speedily be unfrocked, got this information that Christ was a genius, or information of any other sort about Him except from the testimony of those who wrote the New Testament whom this preacher calls thick-headed."

If all the clocks and all the watches should go on a strike some Sunday and observe the Sabbath by doing no work therein the congregation would be left with the insoluble problem as to whether they had heard a good sermon or not, if we are to trust the judgment of some who seem to think that the quality of a sermon is measured by the time it consumes. We have scant interest in the announcement that some pastors make in the summer that their services will be very brief, while picture shows are advertising the length of time which they are giving to a varied program. The wise pastor will use discretion in handling his service when the weather is hot and the people uncomfortable on account of it, but let him not advertise brevity as the chief attraction in the house of God. We knew of one pastor who advertised "Breezy Subjects for Warm Days." Consistency would have demanded later that he advertise "Hot Shots for Cold Days," but he did not.

We have little approval for the tendency in many quarters to raise nearly every financial obligation of the church by some kind of entertainment. Criticising the Catholic church for their "fairs" for raising money, we often put on the equivalent in our own churches. The limit is a "rummage sale" for the Master—selling cast-off clothing in lieu of bringing our "tithes into the storehouse." Is our Christ so poor and our religion so cheap that it must be supported in this wise, and stewardship neglected and worship of giving unknown? Paul says, "God loveth a cheerful giver," but he does not say, "God loveth a cheerful worker in a rummage sale, or amateur theatricals, or in a benefit supper."

CENTENARY COLLEGE OF LOUISIANA.

(From the report of the President, Dr. George S. Sexton, to the Board of Trustees in Annual Session, June 7, 1927.)

The year 1926-27 has, like the past few years, shown a most satisfactory increase in the student body, both in number and personnel; in teaching efficiency; and in the general marked success in every department of college work and activity.

The enrollment for the regular terms, fall, winter and spring, shows a total of 588. In the summer school, there was a total enrollment of 183, making a combined enrollment of 771. In addition to these students doing regular college work, extra-curricula classes have been conducted in the city, bringing the total number to approximately 900 students that have been taught by the Centenary faculty. Of course you understand that these extra-curricula students are not counted in the regular enrollment of the college.

Great improvement and success have marked all student activities. Six out of seven major debates were won by Centenary, and this, too, when such institutions as the University of Mississippi, University of Arkansas, University of Oklahoma, were among Centenary's opponents. Centenary again won first place in the National Peace Contest in the region of Louisiana. The young ladies have just recently taken up debating, though they did not win, they showed satisfactory improvement. The Band and Glee Club had successful tours, and by common consent have taken rank with the best in the State. The band rendered service to the city by furnishing music for the annual Good-will Tour conducted by the Chamber of Commerce. The Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A. have been exceedingly active and have contributed largely to the morale of the student body. Plans are being made to increase the work of these two organizations the coming year. As usual, in baseball and football, Centenary has been successful, winning the championship of the S. I. A. A. for the season, 1926-27. For the first time a Tri-State Track Meet and Musical Contest was held in connection with our annual high school oratorical contest. It was considered a success by those having the matter in charge.

The college is being given increased national recognition. The Louisiana-Mississippi section of the Mathematical Teachers' Association of America held its annual meeting at Centenary College this year. The President and Professor Cline had places on the program of the Conference on Foreign Affairs and American Diplomacy held at Louisiana State University.

The faculty of Centenary College is doing excellent work. Graduates of Centenary are being received with full credit in the greater universities, where they are doing graduate work, and, in every instance, they have been an honor to the college. Because of the intensive work being done by the faculty with the students, resulting in excellent scholarship, our students are being recognized by being awarded scholarships, and, in some instances, teaching fellowships. These honors are being given by the University of Virginia, Vanderbilt, Emory, Kansas and Iowa. It will be remembered that only a few years ago, undergraduate work at Centenary College was not accepted except by a very few institutions, and that after much discussion, while to-day the credits of Centenary College are being accepted both for undergraduate and for graduate work, with the additional honor of scholarships and teaching fellowships in the greater universities.

Our Department of Education keeps in touch with the teachers going out from Centenary College. Written reports from school boards, superintendents, and principals, show that the teachers we are turning out are giving approximately 100 per cent satisfaction. With the placement of those graduating this year, more than 100 teachers from Centenary College will be engaged in educational work throughout our territory for the year 1927-28. These facts cannot be overlooked when we are considering the growth and success of the college.

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

Having been reared in southern Louisiana, I have always had a weakness for real good soup. Dining one day with a most excellent family the hostess urged a second plate of aforesaid comestible upon me. The first plate was all that good soup should be, the second so sadly diluted that it was flavorless. I presume the pig drank that second supply; I did not, for neither diluted soup nor diluted coffee are fit for a white man to drink or hand out to a black one.

Dilutions are too often the bane and disappointment of life. Poor, weak imitations of good literature worse and more of it than the Mississippi flood. It vitiates the taste for the "good, beautiful and true." Some one recommends a new book to me. I wade through the thing. Badly written, worse composed, devoid of morals as a wild Sengambian, and so diluted with sloppy attempts at modern so-called psychoanalysis as to be wearisome and inane. I wonder where is the "appeal," the "call" in this kind of stuff. If this is the latest, one may devoutly wish it is the last. When a youth, I hunted with a muzzle-loading shotgun, and found that bad wadding ruined much shooting. Read the masters, friend, and you will in some measure share their spirit and style. If reading, as Bacon says, makes a full man, the filling of poor literature is very unsatisfactory mental pabulum. On last Sunday I preached a sermon from a series of Bible texts about the Bible. Before I finished I felt like one gazing on the boundless sweep of old ocean from a mountain top. For here is lasting, proven literature, history, story, poetry, biography, and revelation. Its psychoanalysis outlasts the ages, for these seers and saints who wrote it, under God, knew more of the wants and nature of human souls than all these later day cultists rolled in one. For these fellows who are running stunts on psychology have gotten the thing upside down. They are trying to reach the ways and behavior of the soul through the medium of the body. Even patient, suffering old Job knew better than that, knowing through all his long, hard discipline that spirit was even greater than matter, and so in humility won the victory in the end sitting at the feet of God. Even his comforters, Bildad and company, though they were fatalists, were dead game on the facts as they knew them, and were not sailing around in sloppy seas of theories and unknown may-be seas. In fact, their Calvinistic theology kept the old patriarch pretty warm for a season.

Now all this leads onward to something more. Men like our patriarch can only find comfort, help and convincement sitting at the feet of God. Confucius would have been all right, Brother Harper, concerning conscience and experience being safe guides, if he had not denied all divine revelation of spiritual things. Only the responsive heart, with all its avenues of approach open heavenward, can fully know what our Lord meant by saying, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall set you free." Heaven and earth were joined together in our Christ, and through faith in him alone can we have the enlightened conscience and assured experience. Then how worse than folly is the teaching of men, who would strip our holy faith, the fairest jewel of spiritual and supernatural life, which shines and glows with radiant light in the otherwise darkened heart of man.

The great powers are met in conference at Geneva to consider the reduction or equalization of armament. England hitherto has beaten the world at diplomacy. France and Italy bluster around and then pay but little attention to what has been agreed upon. Japan, keen as a briar, manages to hold her own fairly well. The United States comes out in the open, and tells them her plans and purposes, and they listen. The greatest thing the race of man can do to-day is to outlaw war with all its implements of wholesale slaughter. The good Lord knows they killed one another fast, and on a scale large enough, and disrupted society and impoverished millions, and some of them are now buzzing around like ring-tailed hornets about it yet, this last war. Another one, with all the killing machines now known, will just about wipe out civilization, and there won't be enough of us left to wonder where it has gone.

Yes, let us write Ichabod—glory departed—over the portal of Mar's temple. This old god was a miserable heathen creation anyway, and enlightened men who follow his cult will surely perish. Put up your sword, Peter, you have not sense enough and grace enough to carry a sword, much less to wield one. I sincerely hope that the representatives of the nations now meeting in Geneva—a city which through the years has been a refuge for the oppressed and persecuted—may establish an everlasting truce of God. Then Isaiah's vision shall be fulfilled, and our blessed Lord's mission hastened to its accomplishment.

"CITIZENIZE."

By H. Walter Featherstun, D.D.

Some years ago, in quoting Paul's words in Phil. 1:27, I apologized for coining this word; but I have since learned that my apology was out of place; for I had not coined the word. It is given as a good English word in the Standard Dictionary, with a sense that needs no explanation. That neither the Authorized version nor the Revized version in translating recognizes the word does in nowise forbid the proper use of this good English word, and in nowise proves that what Paul meant to say in this passage was: "Citizenize as becomes the Gospel of Christ." It means simply that every real Christian must be a good citizen.

The New Testament leaves us in no doubt as to what are involved in our civil obligations. When the tax collector came to collect taxes of our Christ, he promptly paid them. When the Jewish ecclesiastics demanded that he should say whether or not it was proper for them to pay, as God's chosen people, taxes to a pagan government, alien and tyrannic, which held them in subjugation; and he answered unequivocally: "Render to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God, the things that are God's."

Paul, following the teaching of his Lord, wrote to the Christians at Rome: Pay ye tribute—i. e., "Do not elude the tax collector." Let me render freely yet very truly Paul's words in Romans 13:1-5: Let every one of you be subject to the civil government; for there is no civil government that is not of God, and all of them are ordained of God. Therefore he that disobeys the civil law withstands the ordinance of God: and they who set aside the law of the land shall stand condemned in God's sight. * * * Therefore you must respect the law * * * for conscience sake."

When Paul, under divine inspiration, wrote these things to Christians in Rome, the reigning emperor was Claudius, who was Nero's rival in villainy, cruelty, and hatred to Jews and Christians; and a little later was succeeded by Nero to the throne of the Roman empire. There was no such national government at that time on earth, such as we have wherever Christianity is the dominant faith. Then the ruling monarch was master of all, and his subjects were in an essential sense his slaves. But now in our Christian land every officer, from President to constable, is a servant of, elected by the people, who are the sovereigns of the nation. Slavery, gambling, drunkenness and the making and selling of intoxicants, and such evils are forbidden, and very largely prevented by law. Our moral standards are high and generally respected; and all because our Christianity is a dominant force in our world.

What would Paul have thought of such government as is ours? What would he have thought of citizens in such a nation ignoring the highest obligations and most wonderful privileges—things that we sometimes find in this glorious commonwealth? He would have paid taxes scrupulously and carefully; and he would have looked into every governmental issue as it arose; and he would have voted in every election; and would never have dodged any call for jury service.

FOUR DECADES IN THE FAR EAST.

Interview With the Rev. S. H. Wainwright, D.D.

"Our missionary obligation in the Far East was never greater than it is to-day," declares Dr. S. H. Wainwright, General Secretary of the Christian Literature Society in Japan, now in the States on furlough. Next year will mark Dr. Wainwright's fortieth year as a missionary to the Far East, and he has seen four distinct decades of history since he went to Japan in 1888.

"The four decades which I have spent in touch with the Far Eastern situation have been times of transition and often times of conflict and disturbed conditions," added Dr. Wainwright, "but the work of the church has gone steadily on and its purpose does not change."

Dr. and Mrs. Wainwright are both natives of Missouri. Dr. Wainwright went to Japan as a layman, but was licensed to preach shortly after reaching that country. During one of his furloughs in America he was pastor of Centenary Church in St. Louis, and served four years as presiding elder of the St. Louis District. Dr. Wainwright has received many flattering offers of positions with salaries many times what he receives as a missionary, but he prefers to remain secretary of the Christian Literary Society of Japan, which position he has held for a number of years and which is considered one of wide influence and importance. He is considered an outstanding leader of the Christian movement in Japan—has been a hard student of things Oriental, and has a profound knowledge of Buddhism. Dr. Wainwright crossed the ocean for the sixteenth time when he came to America last December. He delivered the Fondren lectures at Southern Methodist University in Dallas in March, has assisted in a missionary campaign in Georgia since he has been in the States, and delivered a course of lectures at the Missouri pastors' school.

In speaking of the changes that have taken place during his forty years of residence in the East, Dr. Wainwright said:

"The first half of this period shows slow but very real changes, marking the opening of Far Eastern countries and the adoption of Western civilization.

"The second half of the period has been characterized by more inward changes in the attitude of the people toward life. We are now in contact with a very different Oriental from the one that the missionaries first knew during the earlier period of missionary work. The early Oriental peoples with whom the missionaries first came in contact had their minds formed under the unchanged traditions of the past. The present generation has grown up under more modern conditions; new energies have been awakened and new aspirations kindled until the Oriental of to-day might almost be termed a new creature.

"But in spite of changes and in spite of wars, the work of the church in the East must go steadily on. I do not like the way of presenting our missionary obligation as if our task in this section were nearly done. I do not even like the phrase 'unfinished task,' for that seems to me to imply that only the finishing touches remain to be done. That idea is far from the truth, for there are more people in Japan to-day that have not heard the gospel than there were when I went to that country nearly forty years ago. Just during the time of my residence in that country the birth rate has increased 25,000,000. The great trouble is that in considering our missionary task we rarely take into consideration the increasing population. As yet great hordes of people remain unevangelized in the East.

"As a rule, protection and liberty are given to those who preach, even to foreign missionaries, and people in the East have more time for attending preaching services and fewer things to distract their minds than Western people. However, this great opportunity for preaching to people of undistracted mind will soon be passing away, for the busy age of individualism is rapidly spreading in the Orient. I can remember in times past when I have preached two sermons on the same night to audiences, being refreshed merely with a cup of tea between whiles.

"In spite of the Exclusion Act the Japanese people are friendly toward the United States. They understand the nature of the immigration law better than they did at first and they realize that legislation on that subject was necessary, and did not primarily have reference to the coming of the Japanese to this country. They understand that the law was not intended to be unfriendly to the Japanese, but there is really a feeling of dissatisfaction among the Japanese regarding the method of enacting the law and the discrimination between the Japanese and certain other races. The Japanese want a pro rata basis applied to them as to the European nations.

"We should understand some of Japan's difficulties. Their island is no greater in area than California, and their net population increases at the rate of half a million annually and every door in the outside world is closed to Japanese immigration. Some sort of solution must be found giving greater freedom of movement to Asiatic people.

"The energies of the new generation in China are manifesting themselves in their national aspirations. But it is necessary to distinguish between national aspirations on the one hand and propaganda on the other. Political propaganda is a new phase of the situation in the Far East. It made its appearance after the European war, and its most active agents are the Russians.

"I have sometimes been asked what is the difference between the Russian and the missionary propaganda, as both are foreign in their origin and both have spread among the Chinese. One difference is that the Russian propaganda is a very poor imitation of the missionary propaganda, although it has adopted missionary methods in part. A second difference is the selfish motive that prompts political propaganda and the sacrificial spirit which characterize missionary propaganda, which has no other thought but the uplift and welfare of the Chinese people. A third difference is that political propaganda sends into China money and literature while the missionary propaganda offers a life in the service of China and her people. The missionary learns the language of the country, takes up his residence among the people, and becomes a real and sympathetic part of the life in China. Lastly, perhaps the greatest difference lies in the effect of these two types of propaganda, for the Russian propaganda stirs up ill-will against other nations, while the missionary propaganda lays the foundations for closer, friendlier, and more helpful relations between nations that have existed at any previous time in the world's history.

"Very many of the Chinese people realize that there is a great difference between the Russian and the missionary propaganda, and they look upon the missionaries as their friends, and even the Chinese leaders value the contributions that the missionaries have made toward the growth and progress of China.

"Continuous strife is reducing China to poverty, and the Chinese churches will need the sympathetic support and backing of the American churches for years to come.

"Certainly our task in the Far East is far from finished, and our missionary obligation never greater than it is to-day."

Dr. Wainwright spent June 10 in Nashville en route to Missouri. He expects to return to the Orient in the autumn.

THE RELIGIOUS PRESS FROM THE STANDPOINT OF A PASTOR.

By Rev. Frederick Brown Harris.

(Part of an address delivered at the meeting of the Editorial Council of the Religious Press, in Washington, June 14.)

Recently, on my way to a conference at the headquarters of the Washington Federation of Churches, waiting on the street corner for the traffic to subside, I found myself glancing over the contents of a typical newsstand, where publications of all sizes and hues were crying aloud—some very loudly—for the attention of the passers-by. What a medley! The daily nawspaper, of course, was there. In many ways the modern newspaper is a miracle, and sometimes there is much more to commend them than we give credit for. And yet, in the very nature of things, the newspaper is often the product of prejudice, antagonisms, aversions and rumors. There is a dis-

IS THE BELIEF IN THE BODILY RESURRECTION OF JESUS CHRIST FROM THE DEAD PECULIAR TO METHODISTS ONLY?

By Rev. S. S. Bogan.

When I scan your fair pages I find much that is helpful, instructive and interesting, but I sometimes find utterances that are strange to Methodism and contrary to sound doctrine, and untrue to fact. Such is your editorial comment, "Recalling a Missionary," appearing in your issue of May 19.

Ye Editor's Comment is neither Methodistical nor Scriptural, but a vagary without a semblance of truth or basis of fact. But then, we are living in a day of strange utterances and illogical reasoning and anti-Biblical teachings. When to deny the supernatural and doubt God is the highest mark of intellectuality and superior complex, a man is not wise at all unless he presumes to be wiser than what is written in the old Book. Men these days in schools, pulpits and platforms and on the tripods of the religious and secular press seek to make and maintain their reputation for learning and scholarship by denying the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures and repudiating the doctrines taught therein—all of these are nonessentials to goodness. They maintain that a man can be a good Christian while denying the validity and veracity of the Holy Scriptures: for the supernatural and miraculous are an offense unto them. How can these things be? And how can the dead be raised up? They say, it can't be done, therefore they reject the bodily resurrection of the dead and deny that the body of our Lord was raised up—but with them, that has nothing to do with being a Christian.

Therefore ye Editor comes forward to defend Mr. Hearn and declares him a good Christian in spite of the fact that he rejects the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead and the bodily resurrection of our Lord—for which the Mission Board recalls him from the mission field. In this the Mission Board acted wisely and as it should, but they expose themselves to the criticism of being inconsistent and at variance with their policy. I may ask, why should the Board reject Mr. Hearn who has been sinned against as grievously as he has sinned? Why make a scapegoat of him while they steadily uphold and retain Mr. W. B. Nance as head of Soochow University and the other thirty-four members of the Conference who are in harmony with Mr. Hearn's views and voted to receive him?

But the doors of the Conference were not closed against Mr. Hearn by anything that the Mission Board did, but by the vigilant exercise of the native franchise of the Conference that brought to the fore a condition that forced the Bishop and the Mission Board to act; hence his recall, in which Mr. Hearn got what was due him. Yet, notwithstanding, he was the victim of the force of circumstances and perhaps less worthy of judgment than the thirty-five that supported him, whom the Mission Board retained in the field.

In the meantime, ye Editor condemns the offense of Mr. Hearn while he justifies the action of the Board—thus: "If Mr. Hearn avails himself of the privilege of appearing before the Board to explain his belief—unbelief—and it appears from his statement to the Board that he is out of harmony with Methodist belief, the Board's action can only be approved and commended. The outcome, of course, will have no bearing on Mr. Hearn's character. A man may be unorthodox from the Methodist standpoint, though a good Christian. The point at issue, as we understand it, is whether or not Mr. Hearn is an orthodox Methodist. We hope he is." Hence, the pertinence of the question at the head of this article, Is the belief in the bodily resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead peculiar to Methodists only?

You who are responsible for the publication of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, read that comment over again, and think it over, and then consider, can you assume the responsibility for such editorial folly, and give your official approval to such claptrap?

Is it possible that ye Editor has expressed his sincere conviction? Does he really believe he knows that the doctrine of the bodily resurrection of our Lord from the dead is peculiar to Methodists only? That is what he affirms. Read his comment and see. Remember, Mr. Hearn's offense was his denial of the bodily resurrection of our Lord. Then see, ye Editor's conclusion—"The point at issue, as we understand it, is whether or not, Mr. Hearn is an orthodox Methodist. We hope he is." Does ye Editor presume upon the credulity of his readers, or does he just take for granted they are ignorant? Or is he himself the victim of his own ignorance of the historical setting of the doctrine of the bodily resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead? Seeing that he has to all intents and purposes given Methodists credit for the origin and rise of the doctrine of the bodily resurrection of the dead in general and of our Lord in particular, I challenge the Editor and the Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate to cite one new doctrine that had its origin and rise in Methodism. And as for the doctrine and fact of the bodily resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, it antedates the organization of the Christian church, and from the first has been believed and taught by Christians in every age for these nineteen centuries. Why then, does the Editor condone the unbelief of Mr. Hearne as a small offense committed against Methodism only, and make it appear to his readers that Mr. Hearn's only offense is his misfortune of being out of harmony with the Methodist church; while as a matter of fact, he has repudiated and rejected a universal doctrine and fact of the universal church and Christian faith?

Only Modernists who have no church, but are parasites upon the body of the Christian church, with the Unitarians, infidel and atheist, deny the fact of the bodily resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead.

Mr. Hearn is not simply out of harmony with Methodist doctrines, but he repudiates the faith of Christendom, and gives the lie to the record itself, and rejects as untrustworthy the witness and testimony of every Christian that has lived during nineteen centuries. Yet, ye Editor goes out of his way to defend and justify Mr. Hearn's unbelief, and vouch for his Christian character, while the Publishing Committee have sat on and by their silence approved his sayings.

It has not been so stated by Mr. Hearn, as far as I am informed; but venture the assertion that the man who denies the bodily resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead also denies his atoneing sacrifice of himself for the sin of the world, and rejects his supernatural birth, his duty and his miracles. And with these go the doctrine of the fall of man, of sin, repentance, justification by faith, regeneration, or the new birth. No punishment, for there is no guilt; no judgment, for there is no condemnation; no hell, for there is no devil; and as for God, well, as the number of men so is the number of gods. Such indeed is the ripe fruit of Modernism and its final and logical result. Unbelief and rejection of one cardinal doctrine and historic fact of the Christ stultifies faith and turns its flow to ebb and sets up a recession in the life of faith that yields and surrenders one by one every cardinal doctrine and historic fact of the Christian faith, until it has reached the full round of negation.

If ye Editor is right, when he says, "A man may be unorthodox from the Methodist standpoint, though a good Christian"—let the reader bear in mind that the particular standpoint herein referred to is belief in the bodily resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, the which Mr. Hearn rejects, and, according to ye Editor, is still a good Christian. If it is so, then Paul made a great ado about nothing, when he took it upon himself to correct and reprove the Corinthians about this very thing. "Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you, that there is no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen. And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain. Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God, because we have testified of God, that he raised up Christ, whom he raised not up, if so be, that the dead rise not. For if the dead rise not, then is Christ not risen. And if Christ be not raised your faith is vain, ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished. If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable (I Cor. 15:12-21.)

Now if Paul is right, and the Word of God cannot be broken, then ye Editor is wrong and bears false witness when he affirms, a man may reject the fact of the bodily resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, and still be a good Christian. It is evident that the whole of Christianity, in all its ramifications, stands or falls with this one identical doctrine and historical fact of the Christian faith, the bodily resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. To reject it renders null and void all the allied doctrines of the redemption and salvation of man, and destroys every hope and benefit of the Christian's faith. When will the Modernist in general and ye Editor in particular, ceases such vain prattle and dissemination of false doctrines, and give heed to the truth?

MODERNISM.

By Rev. W. T. Bazzel.

In his thought-provoking article in the Advocate of June 23, Hon. T. M. Evans charges that a grave situation exists in our church, and suggests a remedy. This is not written for the purpose of disagreeing with his diagnosis, nor do I deny the necessity of the remedy which he suggests. Before taking a positive stand either for or against his position I must have further light. I am satisfied that the time has come for Methodists to thoroughly thresh out and frankly discuss the whole question of "Modernism," but I am exceedingly anxious that it be done in a courteous and brotherly spirit, with all charity and tolerance on both sides. Intolerance and bitterness will not only hurt the church but will do more to drive young people into infidelity and atheism than "heresy" among a few church members and preachers.

Brother Evans' article makes three distinct charges: First, that preachers sent out by our church are taking texts from the Bible, "but denying that it is the Word of God, or that Christ is the Son of God, or that man was created in the image of God;" etc. Second, that "the publication of our literature has largely fallen into the hands of Modernists, who are using our plants and our papers to spread their propaganda contrary to the doctrines of our church," and third, that "our colleges and universities have fallen into the hands of Modernists, who are using them as places of propaganda for their Modernists" (Modernism, or Modernistic teaching?—I suspect a misprint here) "publishing their insubordination to the church to the world, defying the church and the State," etc.

These charges are severe, and if true the situation is a serious one indeed, and calls for radical measures. I do not know of any Methodist preachers who deny that the Bible is the Word of God, or that Christ is the Son of God, or that man was created in the image of God. But if any such preacher is filling a pulpit in our church he should be dealth with according to the laws of the church. The question, "What shall be done with preachers who disseminate, publicly or privately, doctrines contrary to our Articles of Religion?" is answered by paragraph 269 in our Discipline of 1926. I suggest that if Brother Evans knows of a preacher of our church who denies either that the Bible is the Word of God, or that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, or that God created man in his own image, that he prefer charges against said preacher in due form, and no doubt such preacher, if found guilty, will either have to recant or be expelled from the ministry and from membership in the Methodist church.

If any of our colleges or universities are in the hands of men who are using these institutions as places for spreading propaganda contrary to our Articles of Religion, or defying the church and teaching insubordination thereto, then the guilty party or parties should be dealt with in the same manner. Paragraph 291 answers the question, "What shall be done when a member disseminates doctries contrary to our Articles of Religion?"

So if any member or minister of our church is dissemating doctrines contrary to our Articles of Religion, whether in the pulpit or classroom, or church press, the remedy is perfectly plain. And any one who denies either that Jesus is the Son of God, or that the Holy Bible contain all things necessary to salvation is most assuredly disseminating doctrines contrary to our Articles of Religion.

The remedy suggested by Brother Evans is "division." He makes the following statement in the third paragraph: "I submit that this question must be solved just as all previous controversies have been solved, in the scriptural way, that is, that the 'chaff must be sifted from the wheat.' Division is the only method that has ever settled any controverted subject. The devil or his teaching cannot be destroyed by human agencies." Further on in his article he says: "Therefore there must be a division, and there is no other remedy known to God or man."

Possibly so; but I am wondering just how this division is to be brought about, and who is to draw the line. Brother Evans expresses himself as confident that 95 per cent of the membership of the church and a very large majority of the preachers are loyal to the doctrines of the church, in which I agree with him, except that I would use the terms "more than 95 per cent of the preachers."

If his estimate of the percentage of the loyal is anywhere near correct, then instead of publishing abroad to the world the oft-repeated charge that our church press and our church schools are subverting the very foundations of Christianity, let the 95 per cent of loyal members and the "very large majority" of true preachers simply proceed according to the Discipline and turn the heretics out of the church!

The fact that so many are publishing to the world such charges as the foregoing is certainly hurting the institutions of our church. We cannot expect the rank and file of our members to stand by and support our church colleges when they are told that the said colleges are hotbeds of Modernism and atheism! We cannot expect the members to respect and support our publications when they are told that the publications are in the hands of heretics who are defying the church! If these charges be true the guilty parties should be dealth with according to the rules of the church. And unless Brother Evans and others who make similar charges can furnish proof to sustain their complaints they should be very careful about making public their suspicions. But, on the other hand, if they have proof to sustain such grave charges, let them name the guilty parties, and proceed according to church law.

I have said before in this paper that the controversy over the questions at issue between Fundamentalists and Modernists is injuring the church, hindering the gospel and threatening to divide our beloved Methodism into hostile camps. This is true, not because controversies concerning differences of opinion are necessarily harmful, but because the ultra Fundamentalists are manifesting a spirit of intolerance toward all who disagree with them. They would denounce as heretics a great many devout and loyal men simply because said men do not accept their own special interpretation of Genesis; they would even go further and class all men as atheists who have not closed their minds against all additional light, but are willing to investigate and learn. They would have State laws enacted compelling the schools to accept their views, and forbidding, under severe penalties, any one to investigate the origin of man. They tell the world just what the first chapters of Genesis mean, and then denounce as traitors to the church all who fail to agree with them as to just what said chapters really do mean!

Yes, it is the spirit of intolerance manifested in these controversies, and not the mere fact of the controversy itself, that makes it hurtful.

In all that I have written on this subject I have tried earnestly to be tolerant and to manifest a brotherly spirit. And if I have chosen words that express my real sentiments I have succeeded, for there has been nothing unbrotherly in my heart. If intolerance has appeared anywhere in my articles it has been due to my inability to find words that correctly express my thoughts. I recognize the sincere Christian character of those who differ with me, and acknowledge their right to their views; and I humbly crave the privilege of exercising the same right without being denounced as a heretic!

"THE AMERICAN ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF ATHEISM, INC."

By Rev. John D. Ellis.

III.

The purpose of the Association to destroy the idea of God is a large undertaking for a bunch of half-wits. The job is like unto them, who with naked feet kick against the spikes.

Because God is invisible Spirit, and cannot be fully known, atheism denies his existence: because God is out of sight, he is out of mind.

In order to be an atheist, a man must disregard the facts of history, and the testimony of creditable witnesses: irrationality and fallacy must also take the place of reason. Here is the key with which some have endeavored to interpret creation: "The world was formed by a fortuitous concourse of atoms which met, and united, and formed all things." Where did the atoms come from? There is so much chance, or accident in fortuitism, it leaves out all intelligence and design.

If, as some affirm, all life on earth had origin in a single cell, which developed microbes, insects, reptiles, birds, animals, and men, where did the original cell come from? We marvel not that many men are beetle-headed, since they candidly admit that their forbears were insects.

Some affirm that what we term "God" is simply "the continuous resultant of all forces capable of voluntarily concurring in the universal perfectioning of the world." How did the "forces" originate, and what started them in their operation? The existence of a great First Cause is not contrary to reason, and it is not contrary to reason to regard him as intelligent, all-powerful, and as revealing himself to the children of men.

History shows that he revealed himself, and we have the testimony of men through the centuries who were eye-witnesses to the manifestations of his being and power. The God with whom we have to do, is Spirit, as distinct from flesh and bones, or any material substance: he is unconnected with bodily form, or organs; and is free from all the infirmities of corporeal beings: he is immense intelligence, and self-active: he is Spirit absolute, sovereign, the Great Original.

Man is similar in nature to the God who created him: man is more than material substance, and the essential part of man is spirit: within the flesh of man is spirit, and the God with whom we have to do is "the God of the spirits of all flesh." We judge man to be a spirit, because he is capable of reason, judgment, thought, admiration, thanksgiving, faith, etc. Matter however organized, is not capable of reasoning, affection, etc. For man to deny the existence of God because he is invisible, is but to deny the existence of his own spirit, which he has never seen, and of other invisible forces in the air around him: air is invisible, so is gravitation, latent electricity, the law which produces form and color, etc.

According to history, the God with whom we have to do, has given to men of every dispensation, visible manifestations of his being, and power: men have had demonstrations of his presence and glory in the concrete: they saw with their eyes that glory which was the outward splendor of Jehovah in all his perfections: while not seeing Jehovah in his essence, they saw the august display of his glory: God appeared unto them in awe-inspiring phenomena, super-natural manifestations, in visions, dreams, audible voice, and in the form of an angel. The manner was varied, but the manifestations of his presence and glory were unmistakable. "God who at sundry times, and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son."

When Jesus was born, God again looked through the window, and shewed himself at the lattice: the invisible God was made visible to human senses in the person of Jesus Christ: modern history was ushered in by the greatest of all manifestations, Jehovah on earth in human form: the heavenly choir also came to earth, and sang in the presence of men. The fact of Jesus Christ proves the fact of God.

Men are foolish to disregard the testimony of Jewish saints: and Christian historians who were eye-witnesses to Christ's majesty. The apostle Peter, who was an eye-witness, wrote: "We have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the person, and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his majesty."

Atheists cannot overturn the facts of history: neither can they overturn the testimony of eye-witnesses. Jesus Christ had majesty because of what he was, and where he came from. Atheism boasts of its intellectuality, but its stupidity is marvelous in the presence of majesty.

Atheism would take from the human family the promises, comforts, and joys of the Bible, and the hope of everlasting life. Atheism candidly admits that it would destroy the fact of God, and the religion of the Bible, and give the world nothing in the place, except what would follow naturally. Chaos and everything bad would naturally follow: men would become unreliable, and without solidity of character, and they would be swept away by the storms of passion.

Modern atheism grieves because of lawful wedlock; but Jehovah instituted marriage in order to keep people from living in that promiscuous fornication which atheism seeks. Were a man commanded to run to and fro through the streets of atheism, with the endeavor to find a man, he could find male adults "a-plenty;" but male-adulthood, with its desire for sex-freedom, promiscuity, and unmarried unions, is not manhood: it is beastly sensuality, and men who advocate such a regime, are as much a menace to society as rattlesnakes, thieves, and murderers.

The 4 A's is not an institution so much as a destitution. It will lead astray the young, thoughtless, and ignorant. It is sowing the seed of lust and crime which will have harvest in tears and woe. Children nurtured by it will grow up into the semblance of men and women, but alas, they will be counterfeits.

A man with just a little philosophy can be an atheist, but if he has more than a little he will turn to the matters of religion. Under the gospel of Christ, the God with whom we have to do, is "not far from every one of us." He can be sought and found by meeting the conditions of the gospel.

If the A. A. A. A. would give as much as a widow's mite for every authenticated answer to prayer, the saints of America could burst the institution. Jehovah is a being of infinite intelligence, and kindness, and he takes delight in having honest, sincere people call upon him: he answers in time of trouble, and he forgives iniquities, transgressions, and sins. "He hath no pleasure in fools." An atheist knows that if there is a God, he himself is in a bad way: therefore, he hopes that there is none with whom he has to do, and that when he dies he will never wake up.

FACTS THAT MUST NOT BE IGNORED.

By Rev. Bob Shuler.

I have just returned from a banquet in honor of Dr. Northridge, the fraternal delegate from Irish Methodism that so stirred our last General Conference. In the course of his simple and yet pungent remarks, he spoke of the fact that Irish Methodists were now "put to it" to find room within their churches for the people that have been constantly crowding them since the Irish revival broke out three years ago. To use his language, "That revival answered the challenge of the empty pew." He also spoke of the fact that for these three years the Irish Methodist Church has shown its most phenomenal gain, the growth for the past year being most heartening. He stated that for the first time in the history of Irish Methodism, there were enough young men offering for the ministry to supply the demand and sufficiently meet the challenge of the field.

The most significant statement made by Dr. Northridge in his address was that the Roman Catholic people of South Ireland were petitioning the Irish Methodists for ministers to preach to them this great gospel that has brought peace to Ireland, content and prosperity, together with a great joy to the hearts of the people.

In view of these utterances from Dr. Northridge, I am going to venture some observations that will not be denied by those who read history. Early Methodism made her spectacular rise to spiritual leadership in the world through the altar processes of a genuine revival of religion. The gospel messages heralded by the giants of those days were messages concerning sin and its penalties, salvation and the experiences of grace that comes through personal faith in Jesus Christ as the world's sin-bearer. Nine-tenths of the preaching of early Methodism was evangelistic and the other tenth had to do with those doctrines that support the faith of God's saints. Matters of social service, moral reform, uplift and human benefit were magnified only as fruits and graces of a genuinely converted life, a heart from sin set free.

Not only is it true that Methodism was born amid the shouts of new born souls, but it is also true that her most surprising progress has been made during those years that have been featured by mighty revival awakenings. In a day when she had few schools, and those very poorly equipped and financially supported, she forged forward to the leadership of Protestant Christianity within the world. But let us not forget that those were days of mighty power beneath the brush arbors, in the simple meeting houses and even out in the open air, where the gospel of salvation was preached with unction and great rejoicing.

If we had been able to number our membership then as now, to command our resources then as now, to educate our leaders then as now, to organize and equip for service then as now, to gather our people into great houses of worship then as now, we would, making our caluclations upon the basis of the accomplishments in those crude days, take the world with a conflagration of spiritual power within a score of years. We ought to have added a million souls to world-wide Methodism last year, figuring results that necessarily accumulated within the flood-sweep of such spiritual causes as the Methodism of the great revivals witnessed.

My brethren, might it not be possible that the way to recoup our mighty missionary endeavors, to establish our great educational centers, to put over our much needed financial enterprises is the old, old way? Personally, I am convinced that a mighty, sweeping revival of genuine Holy Ghost power, resulting in the conscious salvation of tens and hundreds of thousands of people is the one thing needed above all other things in this hour.

It so happened that last evening, one of the most prominent and successful evangelists within our great church spent a couple of hours on my front porch and we gave much of the evening to this very discussion. This brother, a regularly appointed general evangelist, seemed very much discouraged at the outlook along evangelistic lines, through our church, remarking that it was the all but unanimous opinion of our general evangelists that the matter of holding a successful revival meeting within our church was becoming harder and harder. I asked him if he had reached any definite reason for such a condition. His reply was startling. He declared that there was a widespread feeling throughout the church that the leadership of Southern Methodism was no longer in sympathy with the revival as conducted by the early Methodists and throughout the period of our phenomenal growth and victory. Surely this is not true. If it is, certainly the hour has come for prayer throughout the church and a return from our backslidings.

Nothing can take the place of the geuine revival of religion in Methodism. There is no successful substitute. Only the gospel that cuts like a two-edged sword will bring our church to vanquishing and establish us as the real ambassadors from the courts of heaven. God grant that again the fires may fall and glory crown the mercy seat.

THE RELIGIOUS PRESS FROM THE STANDPOINT OF A PASTOR.

proportionate emphasis upon abnormal things and sensational happenings. To secure reader interest, and with the question of circulation ever before them, most newspaper makers go to unheard-of lengths in throwing the spotlight on stories of crime, featuring sex news, and in a greatly increased use of photographs, many of which have a decidedly low moral appeal, and a whole mass of entertainment material, comic strips, confessional stories, faked advice to the lovelorn, and dozens of other features.

Side by side with the great newspapers which, in spite of conspicuous defects, have much to commend them, there is the gutter journalism, the smut-crammed picture tabloids. And also on that stand, in magazine form, was the poison of unwholesome literature, the whole putrid mass with its sinister influence upon the plastic young life of this generation. As I looked, I seemed to hear again the thunder tones of Carlyle as he exclaimed, "Are there not in this nation men enough to venture forward and do battle for God's truth versus the devil's falsehood?"

Then, two minutes after leaving that newsstand, I was in the quiet office of the Federation of Churches, and, having a few moments before the conference, found myself glancing through one after the other, dozens of religious journals of various denominations. There are no words to describe the difference between the voices that were speaking there and the voices of the newsstand. Here, "whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report." The answer to Carlyle's passionate question as to whether or not there is any voice to be lifted up for God's truth against the devil's falsehood is here, and I found myself saying, "Thank God for the religious press of the nation!"

And, in spite of the fact that in this vociferous age there are so many voices in the air, it is a matter of thankful rejoicing, on the part of those who work and pray for the coming kingdom, that the voice of the religious press is a mighty voice. A government official, recently appointed to an important task, in giving an interview, referred to the early background of his life. He said to a representative of the religious press that he was born in a parsonage in the Middle West where the last word about most questions could not be said until a certain religious weekly had been received and they had heard from Buckley. Granted, times have changed since the versatile editor of the Christian Advocate was the autocrat of so many breakfast tables—times when there was no Mr. Mencken and writers of his ilk to throw black ink from green bottles at the devils of the wholesome and respectable, to turn ancient vices into modern virtues and to insist that the three chief blots on American life are the Methodist Church, the Y. M. C. A. and the Anti-Salooon League—times when there were not tons of syndicated news articles for those who do not think, and pictorials for those who do not read—still the number of those whose opinions are colored and molded by hearing from the editor of some religious publication are legion.

When one thinks of the 8,920,000 Methodists, the 8,397,000 Baptists, the 2,546,000 Lutherans, the 2,561,000 Presbyterians, the 1,164,000 Episcopalians, and many others, and considers the goodly number of these great totals whose opinions are affected by the impressions that come from some religious journal, it is evident that there are a good many bottles of editorial ink per week hurled at devils more real than any Luther saw.

The great army of pastors owes much to the ministry of the church press. It feeds their minds, encourages their efforts, stretches out their horizons, saves them from provincialism, turns the currents of world affairs and world thought through their own tiny parishes. It sounds bugles of prophesy and progress that in local fields oft-times change cringing compromise into militant marches. And then, as the pastor gives the church press a chance with his people, it does much for the pastor because of what it does for his people. It refutes sophistries, brings an antidote for the poison that seeps into the homes from unwholesome literature. It does a score of things that make the pastor's work easier and more effective. It increases the acreage of good soil for the sower who goes forth to sow.

TEN REASONS FOR THE ESTALISHMENT OF THE FAMILY ALTAR.

1. It will send you forth to the daily task with cheerful heart, stronger for the work, truer to duty, and determined in whatever is done therein to glorify God.

2. It will give you strength to meet the discouragements, the disappointments, the unexpected adversities, and sometimes the blighted hopes that may fall to your lot.

3. It will make you conscious throughout the day of the attending presence of an unseen, divine one, who will bring you through more than conqueror over every unholy thought or thing that rises up against you.

4. It will sweeten home life and enrich home relationship as nothing else can do.

5. It will resolve all the misunderstanding and relieve all the friction that sometimes intrudes into the sacred precincts of family life.

6. It will hold as nothing else the boys and girls when they have gone out from underneath the parental roof.

7. It will exert a helpful, hallowed influence over those who may at any time be guests within the home.

8. It will enforce as nothing else can do the work of your pastor in pulpit and in pew, and stimulate the life of your church in its every activity.

9. It will furnish an example and a stimulus to other homes for the same kind of life and service and devotion to God.

10. The Word of God requires it, and in thus obeying God we honor him who is the Giver of all good and the Source of all blessing.—Exchange.

MYSTIC MUSIC.

By Willie C. Page.

Mystic chords of summer music are sounding in the breeze,
Notes as soft as heart throbs are rustling in the trees;
Like a pulsing trill of ecstasy flung out against the sky,
Drifting across the stillness a lark song sweet and high,
Rain-silvered elm trees, wide stretches of emerald green;
Come walk along the woody path where God's wondrous works are seen,
The earth seems to be singing litanies joyous, happy, gay,
The south wind is playing on hidden harps just across the way.

Tiny, rapturous bells are ringing down in the deep, misty dell,
Laughing fairy voices come from where the lilies dwell;
The bobolinks burst into song, the cardinals flash and call,
Their chants and hymnings cast a flood of golden glory over all.
Softly through the deepening shade the little breezes sing,
And play on the lute strings of the aspens as the vespers ring;
Each waving leaf, bud and flower seem to join in sacred praise,
And whisper: "Be happy, for you God made the beauteous summer days."

PROGRESS.

By William Olney.

Lord! grant that we may never rest
In what we are:
There yet are glorious mounts to climb,
Beauteous but far:
There is much progress still to make,
Though foes may bar.

Lord! grant that we may never rest
In what we have:
There are so many gifts from thee,
Which we should crave:
From foolish pride and selfish ease
Our spirits save.

Lord! grant that we may never rest
In what we know:
Thy spirit has much deeper things
Which he would show:
We would know more from day to day,
And wiser grow.

So as the nearer to life's end
We daily come;
Grant our desires may ever burn,
While here we roam,
Fully to be, to have, to know,
When we reach home.

VIRGINIA'S SURPRISE PARTY.

"Deary me! deary me! such a worry as I'm in!" exlaimed Granny Mullen. Virginia, who was crossing the Mullen farmyard, having waded up the brook, paused at the back door, and called out anxiously:

"What kind of trouble is it, Granny?"

Startled the little old lady slammed to her oven door, and came out on the porch.

"Trouble enough with the children having a party this afternoon and I promising to make the little cakes and the cream puffs. Now the hens have stolen a nest in the haymow, and I'm too stiff-jointed to climb the likes of that."

A party! Virginia loved parties, and she had not been invited to this one. She hadn't lived in the village many weeks, but why should they have left her out? She felt a lump in her throat, and she remembered that she had caught the boys and girls whispering often that week at school. When they had seen her coming they had run away laughing.

"Well, I'm sorry, but there won't be any party to-day. I can't make little cakes and cream puffs without eggs!" commented Granny Mullen, the cake woman.

All the village came to Granny Mullen to have their wedding cakes and Christmas cakes made, and no one ever thought of having a party without having Granny Mullen making the sweets.

Suddenly Virginia laughed out loud. Why couldn't she climb the haymow and hunt the eggs? But it wasn't her party, and she hadn't been asked. Still it was too bad to spoil a party just because there weren't any eggs in the pantry when there were plenty in the haymow.

"Give me a basket, Granny, and let me climb the haymow," offered Virginia.

"Bless your heart, honey, think you can? I was afraid I couldn't get them till grandpa came home to-night," Granny Mullen answered, taking down from a nail a little red basket.

Virginia, with the basket clutched in her fingers, skipped across the barnyard to the stable. A cackling hen flew out through the open doors as she ran across to the haymow. How would she ever get on top? Her bright eyes searched the dim barn; then catching sight of a ladder half-buried in hay, she saw that it led straight up to the top.

Very slowly, one step at a time, for Virginia was not used to ladders and haymows, she crawled up rung upon rung. A little breathless, she dropped into the depths of the sweet-smelling hay. Shaking the hayseed out of her hair, she stumbled forward, searching for nests. Ah! here were two eggs, and here another nest with more, and still another nest, and another. She soon had a dozen —surely enough eggs to make cream puffs for the party. Now she must get down.

Suddenly she leaned over the edge and looked across the barn. She could not climb down the ladder and carry the basket of eggs. She had used both her hands in climbing up. Away in the opposite corner the hay was heaped in a mound on the floor, and built clear to the mow where she stood. What fun it would be to slide down! But the eggs would smash all to pieces.

Perhaps if she packed the soft hay all around them they might not break. So she took them out and, wrapping each, laid them back in the basket. Then she put more hay on top.

Squatting on the edge of the mow, with the basket held firmly in her dimpled hands, she slipped easily over the side. She felt as if she were sinking, sinking; then suddenly she came to a stop. She was on the barn floor and half buried in the mound of hay.

With a funny little shake she scrambled to her feet and ran out of the barn to the farmhouse. Granny Mullen unpacked the eggs, laughing happily.

"Thanks, deary," she exclaimed, "and I hope they give you a good share of the little cakes at the party."

But Virginia could not even smile in response, for she had not been invited to the party.

It was late in the afternoon as she snuggled up in the crab-apple tree, half asleep that she heard mother calling excitedly:

"Ginnie, Ginnie, Ginnie, come quick! Somebody is here to see you."

Her eyes all starry, Virginia ran to the garden, and there, all dressed in their Sunday best, romped the boys and girls of the village. They were laughing at her surprised face, and calling for games. Mother was spreading a snowy cloth under the tress, and a little girl in blue was counting out Granny Mullen's cream puffs.

"Ginnie, Ginnie! did we surprise you?" chorused the children.

Virginia laughed aloud. The party had been for her after all, and just suppose she hadn't hunted the eggs in Granny Mullen's haymow?—Exchange.

ON PLEASANT STREET.

"I guess she lives on Pleasant Street."

Rhoda's eyes opened. She spoke very quickly, for it was not very often that she had a chance to correct Uncle Charles.

"Oh, no, uncle! She lives on another street entirely. I think it's Jefferson."

"They may call it Jefferson, but I'm sure its real name is Pleasant. She looks to me like the sort of girl to live on Pleasant Street."

Rhoda understood. That was only Uncle Charlie's way of saying that Emma was sweet and pleasant herself. The corners of her mouth had a way of turning up, just ready to break into a smile. Her eyes had a habit of twinkling. Things that would make other people cross never ruffled Emma's temper.

"Pleasant Street is a very fine street to live on," said Uncle Charles. "I wonder why some other girls I know don't move there."

Rhoda laughed outright, and Uncle Charles studied her dimples approvingly. "It looks to me," he said, "as if you were about ready to move into Pleasant Street yourself."—Young Evangelist.

DIRECTIONS.
All checks and money orders should be made payable to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.
Communications pertaining to subscriptions and other business matters should be addressed to the Manager, or to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.
The Printed Label on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after four weeks, notify us, and we will make it right.
Communications intended for the Editor should be directed to him at 512 Camp Street. Correspondents will observe the following rules: 1. Write on only one side of the paper. 2. If you have a typewriter, by all means use it; otherwise use a good quality of black ink. 3. Leave a space of at least two inches at the top of the first page; leave a margin of at least one inch on the left-hand side of the page; do not crowd the words and the lines together. 4. Take special pains to write proper names correctly and legibly. 5. Use letter paper if you can get it—not note paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Dr. J. B. Mitchell, pastor of Rayne Memorial Church, of New Orleans, is away on his vacation in Florida.

The "Outdoor Church" of the Pascagoula charge met on the beach on last Sunday night, Rev. J. W. Sells, pastor, conducting the service.

Rev. E. R. Smoot, evangelist of Greenville, Miss., is in a meeting with Dr. Sturdivant at Cullman, Ala. Brother Smoot has August open and brethren desiring his aid should address him at Cullman, Ala.

Rev. J. G. Snelling, Louisiana Conference Missionary Secretary and superintendent of the Memorial Home in New Orleans, will preach at both services at the Methodist church in Morgan City, La., next Sunday.

Enclosing $2 for the renewal of her subscription, Mrs. Sarah E. Morris, of Shreveport, La., writes as follows: "Have been reading the Advocate over forty years, and enjoy it more and more. May the Lord bless you."

Rev. E. L. Crawford, of Greensboro, Ala., was at the recent meeting, elected general secretary of the Board of Temperance and Social Service. Dr. Crawford is a native of Alabama and one of the outstanding men of the church.

Rev. R. H. Harper, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, made a trip to Louisville last week to see Dr. Ellis, Secretary of the Board of Church Extenson. Before returning home he made a brief visit to Indianapolis.

Miss Mary Willard Ledbetter, daughter of Rev. H. W. Ledbetter, pastor at De Ridder, La., and Rev. L. R. Nease, our pastor at Gueydan, La., were married in the Methodist church of De Ridder on July 5, the father of the bride officiating.

Rev. C. Norman Guice, evangelist, of Conway, Ark., closed a good meeting at Prentiss, Miss., on July 3, and left at once for a meeting at Lexington, Tenn. Brother Guice has an open date the week, July 24-31, and could assist some brother at that time.

Among the members of the Board of Temperance and Social Service present at the recent meeting at Lake Junaluska were Dr. F. S. Parker, of the Louisiana Conference, and Rev. J. S. Peters, of Richmond, father of Rev. J. B. Peters, of the Louisiana Conference.

Rev. A. W. McLellan, Dual Sunday School Extension Secretary of the Louisiana Conference, has been in New Orleans for several days with Mrs. McLellan, who, we regret to report, is in one of the hospitals suffering from an illness that may require surgical treatment.

Rev. W. W. Nelson, our pastor at Vancleave, Miss., writes that Prof. L. E. Havens, of Ocean Springs, Miss., Motor Route A, is in a position as song leader to assist pastors in meetings. "He is thoroughly reliable," Brother Williams states, "and will give good service."

Rev. Martin Hebert, pastor at Morgan City, La., is this week assisting Rev. George Purcell in a meeting at Deerford church, of the Baker charge, Louisiana Conference. Brother Hebert has spent a number of years in evangelistic work, and is well qualified for the service he is now giving at Deerford.

Rev. M. L. White, our pastor at Lake, Miss., reports a good revival at Lake during June. Brother W. C. Swope, of Charleston, Mo., did the preaching, and Brother P. H. Scott, of McComb, Miss., led the singing. Fourteen were received into the Methodist church and some were received into the Baptist church.

Rev. Leon I. McCain, pastor at Minden, La., has recently assisted in a meeting at Marksville, La., where Rev. C. B. White is pastor. Nearly every member of the church pledged to tithe, a dozen or more family altars were erected, and six subscribers to the Advocate were secured, in addition to other gracious results of the meeting.

The thirty-seventh annual Bluff Creek Camp Meeting is scheduled for August 12 to August 21, 1927. Rev. P. B. McCullin, of Baton Rouge, will be the leading preacher. Mr. O. E. Townsend, president of the organization, and Mr. H. C. Lipscomb, secretary, give a cordial invitation for this meeting to our readers.

On July 3, 1927, in Memphis, Tenn., Miss Nova Marsh and Mr. R. H. B. Gladney, Jr., both of Ruelville, Miss., were married, Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, father of the groom, officiating. Brother Gladney also officiated at the wedding at Sardis, Miss., on June 26, of Mr. Mack G. Stovall and Miss Suedelle Peebles, both of Memphis.

Dr. John F. Foster, our pastor at New Iberia, La., was in New Orleans one day last week to attend the ceremonies incident to the opening of the quarters of the Royal Arch Masons in the splendid new Masonic Temple on St. Charles Street. Dr. Foster has been for many years Grand Chaplain of Royal Arch Masons of Louisiana.

In writing to renew her subscription, Mrs. A. E. Rogillio, of Tunica, La., who calls herself "An Old Subscriber," states: "I am a dear lover and reader of the Advocate. It has been cherished in my home as far back as I can remember, and I will be 68 on the fifteenth of July." More than a half century of constant acquaintance with the Advocate! May God's blessings continue with this good woman.

Rev. John A. May, of Montevallo, Ala., general evangelist, has recently closed a revival at Belle Mina, Ala., in which 35 adults were baptized, 50 persons joined our church, and one fine young man answered the call of God to preach. Brother May began a meeting in Oak Grove, a suburb of Birmingham, Ala., on July 10, in which meeting Methodists, Baptists and Presbyterians are cooperating.

We are indebted to Mr. W. A. McKinnon, superintendent of the First Methodist Sunday school, Shreveport, La., for a clipping concerning the Daily Vacation Bible School recently closed at First Church. The attendance reached 253, and particularly impressive was the number of different churches and denominations represented in the enrollment—including Christian Science, Catholic and Jewish.

The Seashore Camp meeting was closed on Sunday night last with a good service, in which the sermon was preached by Rev. W. M. Sullivan, a talk was made by Mr. Gates, of Gulfport, and many testimonies given by persons present. The entire camp meeting has been attended by good results. Rev. W. J. Ferguson did much of the preaching. Rev. J. L. Sells, the presiding elder of the Seashore District, also preached during the meeting.

Bishop James Cannon, Jr., presided over the annual meeting of the Board of Temperance and Social Service in session at Lake Junaluska July 4 and 5, this being his first official work since being stricken with African fever several weeks ago while returning to America from the Belgian Congo. The Bishop's physicians in London and in the States have ordered him to take a complete rest for the next sixty days. He expects to hold the three Brazilian Conferences early in October.

Miss Dorothy Hillard, A.B., of Galloway College, who has just completed her first year at Scarritt, has been in charge of a Daily Vacation Bible School recently in session at Campti, La. Misses Ina Fulton, Dollie Grappe, Oleta Fouts, Trudie Mae Weathersby, and Clara Brown; Mmes. Clyde Howard, J. K. Hawthorne, H. H. Albrittin, and C. C. Hattaway; Rev. P. O. Lowrey, pastor, and Mr. Hollier Colliers were the instructors and helpers. The school closed with graduating exercises at the church on Saturday evening of last week.

Rev. P. O. Lowrey, pastor at Campti, La., has been unfortunate as to his automobile. Six months ago the car was stolen, but later recovered. Recently in a collision in Natchitoches, Brother Lowrey's oldest son at the wheel, the car was badly damaged and the repair bill amounted to $150. We join with Brother Lowrey in the following sentiment expressed in the monthly bulletin of the Campti charge: "If like 'every man eating a peck of dirt' during his life, every automobile must have so many calamities, we trust that the worst with this parsonage family car is past."

Rev. H. M. Ellis, pastor at Marion Junction, Ala., writes: "We have just closed a series of gracious services at Marion Junction, Ala., in which Brother J. V. Bennett, of the North Mississippi Conference, did the preaching. The writer has never heard Brother Bennett preach with more earnestness and power. The revival is calculated to be permanently helpful to the entire community. Eleven were received into the church by baptism and vows. Many pledged themselves to more earnest endeavors and greater fidelity. All denominations joined heartily in the services and large congregations attended."

In the Daily Vacation Bible School now in progress of its four weeks' session at St. Mark's Hall, New Orealns, 175 children have been enrolled—children of ages 6-12. If children of other ages could have enrolled in the school the attendance would have been even larger. Fourteen nationalities are represented in the school—American, French, Italian, German, Russian, Dutch, Filipino, Mexican, Chinese, Irish, Syrian, Greek, Cuban and Guatemalan. Eighty per cent of the children come from Roman Catholic homes. This is surely a very interesting and effective work. Rev. W. H. Giles, pastor, is gratified at the work being done.

Madison, Miss., has just closed a community-wide revival, which was far-reaching in its influence, resulting in a very substantial increase in membership of the different churches, the Methodist church receiving a large share; some of the converts being among the wealthiest and most influential people of the town. The pastor, Rev. H. C. Castles, is highly pleased with results of the campaign. Dr. Mark Terrell, of Dallas, Texas, general evangelist,did the preaching, which was of an exceptionally high order, and Mr. Chas. F. Dunn, of Atlanta, Ga., directed the music. Dr. Terrell is now in a meeting at Pocahontas, Miss., which will continue until July 17.

A Standard Training School, sponsored by the northern end of the Hattiesburg District, will be held at Mt. Olive, Miss., July 17-22. The Training School is being conducted because of the need for the training work in this section. It is the first attempt to have this type of school. "We shall be glad to have any come in from neighboring churches or charges and share the privileges of this school with us," writes Rev. J. L. Carter, Educational Director of the School. The courses of study and the instructors will be as follows: Pupil Study, Miss Maggie Mae Jones; Bible, Rev. Robert Selby; Christian Religion, Rev. O. S. Lewis; The School, Rev. J. C. Chambers.

Cash contributions to the maintenance fund of the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage at Ruston, La., from March 15 to June 15, show a total of $23,958.54, according to a detailed report just sent out by Rev. R. W. Vaughan, the faithful superintendent of the institution. Of the above amount the several Districts raised the following: Alexandria, $2,174.46; Baton Rouge, $2,106.91; Lake Charles, $1,838.76; Minden, $2,963.98; Monroe, $3,310.49; New Orleans, $2,241.19; Ruston, $5,377.28; Shreveport, $3,945.57. It will be seen that the Ruston District, in which the Orphanage is located, leads the list. The total amount for the Conference year, November 1, 1926, to June 15, 1927, is $40,321.64. This is a fine showing.

Rev. W. D. Kleinschmidt, presiding elder of the Ruston District of the Louisiana Conference, has arranged a very fine program for the four group quarterly conferences to be held within the bounds of his district, on July 19 at Bryceland, on July 20 at Claiborne, on July 21 at Douglas, and on July 22 at Summerfield. In each of these conferences Brother Kleinschmidt will conduct the devotional service; then pastors appointed will discuss the themes, Justification by Faith, Regeneration, Witness of the Spirit, Work of the Holy Ghost, and Apostasy. Shortly before noon the communion will be administered. At the noon hour all will enjoy lunch as the guests of the church where the conference is held. In the afternoon the business session will be held.

Rev. Albert Y. Brown, pastor at Minter City, Miss., writes that on June 29 was held a very interesting group quarterly conference at Ruleville, Miss., the Ruleville, Drew, Drew Mission, Schlater and Minter City charges uniting in the meeting. Lunch was served by the ladies of the Ruleville church. At the morning hour Mr. Thomas B. King, of Memphis, Tenn., brought an inspiring message, "Beholding the Glory of God." The presiding elder, Rev. J. E. Cunningham, brought encouraging reports from the District, and the charges participating in the group meeting at Ruleville were "well up" with other charges. Among the visitors at the meeting were Dr. J. R. Countiss, of Grenada College; Rev. C. T. Floyd, Moorhead; Rev. J. L. Storment, Sunflower; Rev. F. H. McGee, Okolona, and Rev. J. J. Brooks, Schlater.

We take the following from the Slidell Sun of recent date: 'A few days ago the pastor of the Methodist church in Slidell received notice of the presence of four electric fans directed to him as pastor of the church. Upon inquiry, he found that the fans were shipped from Noah's Ark, New Orleans, La. No card bearing the kind donor's name was attached. Evidently some good Samaritan, believing in the doctrine, 'Let not your right hand know what your left doeth,' responded to the appeal of the pastor and made the donation. The same are now installed in the Methodist church. The pastor and congregation are deeply appreciative of this kind act of their unknown benefator." Rev. S. A. Seegers is the pastor of the church at Slidell. The installation of the fans is only one of a number of improvements made upon the church and parsonage during the year and a half in which he has been pastor, in addition to the canceling of the debt on the parsonage and the building of a church at Lacombe, La.

TRAINING SCHOOL AT GRENADA COLLEGE.

By Rev. E. S. Lewis.

We have just closed the eighth session of the Grenada Training School for the Sunday school workers of North Mississippi Conference. It was a most profitable occasion, many claiming that it was the most helpful school ever held at the college. Fifty or sixty pastors were present besides a great number of others. It would be difficult to say which course given was the most popular, or which instructor held the center of the stage. It makes little difference about that, anyway, for such a matter is determined by private opinion, and that always varies. Dr. Norman E. Richardson is immensely popular and deserves to be. His work this year was of the highest type, and it dealt with the every day problems of high school boys and girls. They had the signed statements of many hundred boys and girls giving their life problems, and the six days devoted to these problems proved a great boon to a large and enthusiastic class of men and women. They discovered that with the boys the temptation to drink is the prevailing tendency with a great majority of high school boys, and with the girls the big problem is obedience to parents. These and many other life problems were considered in the light of the Bible and opportunities of the Sunday school. This week marked the opening of a new and larger day in the experiences of many of our choicest Sunday school people. They will never forget the solemn lessons these life problems presented.

The largest class in the entire school was that directed by Dr. A. W. Martin, of the North Arkansas Conference. There were fifty or sixty in this class. We studied "Rural Sunday School Management." The whole problem of the rural church was seriously considered, and the discussions were of the most helpful sort. Dr. Martin is no dreamer, but has spent much time dealing with the problems which were under discussion. The man that says there is no rural problem has not been out there, or if so did not see anything. We still have multitudes of fine, religious people in the country districts, but the challenge of the town, of better living conditions, better salaries, better schools and churches, has drawn away from the country thousands of people, and left the church to be supported by those that remain. Here and there you will find a church as strong as it was thirty or forty years ago, but they are very few. Some new churches have been organized in the country according to changing conditions, but the fact remains that if we are going to make our rural territory Christian and keep it Christian we must give to it a little more intelligent consideration. That was what Dr. Martin's class was for. The Conference Board of Missions fostered this class, and it never did a finer piece of work. Forty or more pastors on mission charges were in attendance, and they were loud in their praise of the value of the class.

Dr. E. B. Chappell, our Sunday school editor, the St. John of Southern Methodism, taught a course on Evangelism. His work was greatly appreciated and his presence was a benediction.

Brother Davidson, of the Woman's College, Montgomery, taught a class in the study of Mark's Life of Christ.

Mrs. W. W. Adams, Mrs. W. F. Cann and Miss Linda Ramey had good classes, and did most acceptable work.

About 150 credits were issued and the school was pronounced on all sides as most helpful and most delightful.

Why have a training school at all? Did not Jesus say: "Learn of me?" How shall we learn without a teacher? The man who says that we get nothing practical and nothing that will help us with our work in the rural section is blinded with either prejudice or ignorance, possibly both. In one of our charges some years ago a very helpful and inspiring institute was held, lasting most of the day. When the program was over a superintendent of a little school ten miles out in the country, a school that under favorable conditions ran from April 1 till the beginning of the all-day singings, about three months, said to the writer: "There is nothing in that. I knew all that before I came." The superintendent of the town school where the institute was held, thoroughly educated and a constant student of the best methods, came up and said to the leader: "I want to thank you for this fine day. It was most helpful." Which type of superintendent constitutes the hope of the church in the years ahead?

The authorities at Grenada College contributed largely to make the week a bright spot in the life of all who were in attendance. Grenada College is filling a great place in the life of North Mississippi Methodism. Should she drop out of existence Christianity in these parts would suffer an irreparable loss.

ANNUITY BONDS

SAFETY is the first requisite of an investment with a view to regular income.

ANNUITY BONDS have advantage over other investments in that they provide an income that cannot shrink.

YOU may in your lifetime without loss of income or any risk pay over to the Board of Missions, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the amount that you had intended leaving in your will to be used in sending the Gospel "to every creature."

YOU may avoid taxes, various fees or any litigation in connection with your benevolent gifts which sometimes greatly reduce one's bequest. Annuity Bonds enable one to be the executor of his own will.

ALL THIS—and at the same time you enjoy during your lifetime an income that cannot shrink—an income that stands between you and want.

MRS. MILDRED B. WEBB.

When we come to survey the character and life of Mrs. Mildred B. Webb we ask: was there a virtue she did not possess in large measure? Her gracious manners, beautiful, winsome personality, her admirable consideration of others made her ever a charming member of the social circle. No one, perhaps, who has ever lived in Minden has had so many friends in so many phases of our modern life, and retained their friendship for so long a period as Mrs. Mildred Webb. In a city and parish noted for its educational achievement and advancement, she rendered a noble service, and made a large contribution in an educational way. It was, however, as a Christian that she exerted her greatest and widest influence. There was no interest in Christ's kingdom that did not excite her interest, inspire her prayers and command her support. I never knew a more joyous giver—and one who gave so intelligently, proportionately and systematically. She truly honored the Lord with her substance. But her largest contributions were her prayers, talents and labors. She bound the world closer to the feet of God through her prayers. Heaven to her was more than a state. It was a place. She enjoyed the heavenly state here as she lived "soberly, righteously, Godly in this present world." But heaven was a place—God's home and now hers. She daily looked for the city that had foundations, realizing that here she had no continuing city. In her last days of uncomplaining in the midst of afflictions, she yet did rejoice with "joy unspeakable and full of glory." Mrs. Mildred B. Webb, citizen, educator, friend, Christian, benefactor—gone, but she yet speaketh to the life of the world.

REV. L. I. McCAIN.

MRS. MARGARET C. LEWIS passed to her eternal reward Sept. 6, 1926, near Kokomo, Miss., where she reared her family. She was born May, 1846; married Mr. B. B. Lewis April, 1865. God blessed this union with eight children, of whom James A. is a Methodist preacher in California; T. B., a physician in Greenville, Miss.; H. B. lives in Hamlin, Tex.; T. S., in whose home she died on the home place; Mrs. Celia Foxworth, in Gulfport, Miss.; Mrs. Beulah Barnes—Lammie and Inex Lewis preceded her to their reward. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at China Grove when 16 years of age. She declared her interest in the church by taking her membership with her as she moved to different localities after her husband's death. She gave expression of her devotion to God and his work. Her Bible was her constant companion. Her home was the preacher's home, where he was ever welcome. She leaves five children, thirty grandchildren, twenty great-grandchildren, and a host of relatives and friends to mourn their loss. God grant his grace to each of them here that they may meet her in their home above.

J. T. ABNEY.

MEETING AT RAYNE, LA.

By Rev. A. A. Bernard, Pastor.

We have just closed what was said to be one of the best revivals that the church in Rayne has experienced in years. We began our revival on May 22, and closed it on June 12. From the first service to the close we had a full house at the evening services, with a few exceptions. Often the number in attendance at the morning services was a surprise to some of us.

It seemed that Brother W. E. Thomas, who did the preaching for us, was at his best. Seldom have I seen a man throw himself so whole-heartedly into his messages. Sometimes he struck swiftly and hard, and the efficacy of it all revealed itself in the numerous answers to his earnest appeals. He stirred the church to its foundations, and under the circumstances I do not believe any could have been a more efficient instrument in the hands of our Lord. A loving disposition, a never-say-die attitude, and a faith that takes no denial, I would say, are part of the panoply with which this soldier of the Lord goes forth to war.

Rev. M. V. Lewis led the song services for us. He is a sweet singer in Israel. How the spirit of song filled our souls! Many of us could not sing, but with such a leader it was not long before we realized the power of song in breaking down the old barricades that were reared to hedge in some old sinful hearts and keep them from the freedom and light of this divine love.

As a result of the meeting, and during the meeting, we received forty-one into the church. Of this number ten came to us by letter, eleven by baptism, and twenty upon profession of faith. We have another, a man who will come to us as soon as he returns home. Beside these forty-two there are at least three more who intend joining the church in the near future. Of these who have united with us fourteen have come from the Sunday school.

We are sure this is a kind visitation from God, and hope and pray that his hand may lead us on, each one of us, into better service for Christ. With those who have come to us during this meeting we find that fifty-five have thus far been added to the church this year.

We need your prayers, and the prayers of the brethren. Pray for us.

SANITARY REHABILITATION.

To Health Officers and Field Workers: The State Board of Health cooperating with the United States Public Health Service, International Health Board and American Red Cross (the last furnishing emergency funds) is endeavoring to rehabilitate all flooded sections. Active co-operation of all local (parish and municipal) boards of health is indispensable.

Quinine (thousands of capsules) is being requested. One parish, from which no malaria was reported in 1926 or 1927, makes requisition for a large amount. If malaria had existed the cases should have been reported.

Authorities agree that quinine is a specific for malaria, but that it is not effective as a prophylactic. It will not prevent infection, unless continued for at least two weeks after the last exposure. However, as soon as infection is manifested by the development of symptoms, quinine should be given generously. It may also be given regularly where malaria is very prevalent and infected mosquitoes are known to be numerous—in short, where there is much danger of infection. Such treatment will tend to control the development of infection and will also tend to prevent mosquitoes from being infected and thus limit the spread of the disease.

Provision has been made for screening a limited number of homes where known malaria carriers live; this is practical.

Mosquito bars are not furnished by the medical division of Red Cross, but applications for bars may be made to local chapters, and will be transmitted by them to proper officials of the American Red Cross.

Protect all water supplies. Sterilize all water not positively known to be safe. Provide for sanitary disposal of human, animal and other wastes; drain all standing water and oil the water that can't be drained. Keep drainage ditches free from weeds or other obstructions. Make it a morning exercise to kill all mosquitoes in the house.

District conference at Cleveland, July 14-15. We need a great coming together after the things we have suffered and felt in the flood. We desire very earnestly a deeply spiritual and brotherly fellowship. A strong program will be prepared and a full attendance is anxiously desired. Brother S. V. Wall, our district lay leader, is anxious for a full representation of our charges in their lay leaders. They will be given right of way in the morning session of the second day. Now, let daily prayers be made for the presence of the Divine Spirit upon our sessions.

We want live issues and vital discussions. Whatever may from time to time engage the thoughts of men, our personal relation to the issues of moral and spiritual life stand first with all deeply thinking men. All the salvation we can or shall ever know is involved in knowing that at the center and heart of all is intelligence, law and love, and these are working for man's good.

Sunday School

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

By Rev. C. D. Atkinson.

Sunday, June 26, was spent in the Minden District in the interest of the Standard Training School at Rochelle.

In the morning we visited Trout, Good Pine and Jena. We reached Jena in time for the closing of the Sunday school program, and spoke at the 11 o'clock hour on "Religious Education." While in Jena we enjoyed a splendid hospitality in the home of Dr. and Mrs. Thompson.

Sunday night we were present for the opening of the Standard Training School at Rochelle. This school has been one of the best we have had, with a State-wide course on "Sunday School Management" taught by Rev. Clem Baker, of Little Rock, Ark. The number of credits issued by the school were forty-two. A number of preachers took the course taught by Mr. Baker, among them Brothers Dodson, presiding elder of the Minden District; Faulk, of Bonita; Crooks, of Standard; Harris, of Rochelle; Boddie, of Opelousas; Knight, of Melville; Pfost, of Springhill.

Dean and Mrs. Smith, who taught in the school, were delighted with the arrangement they had of living at the Culpepper summer home at Camp Grant Walker, and have enjoyed the outing afforded them.

The success of the school was due largely to the splendid work of the committees, and those taking part in the school. Both teachers and students have appreciated the fine hospitality of the Rochelle people.

Brother A. M. Mayo, superintendent of the Sunday school at Lake Charles, has asked us for a list of credits given to his teachers. This is a forerunner of Brother Mayo's fall Standard Training School, and it impresses us as a very good idea for each superintendent to check up on the credits in his school when arranging for courses.

We are in receipt of a fine bit of advertising being carried in the newspapers of North Louisiana by Brother Claude H. Mayo relative to a Cokesbury School to be taught at Clay, La., July 12-15, inclusive. We believe Brother Mayo's preparations spell success, and it is hoped there will be a large attendance.

Instantly Relieved and soon cured by applying PAZO OINTMENT. It Stops Irritation, Soothes, Heals and is guaranteed to Cure any case of Itching, Blind, Bleeding or Protruding Piles. All Druggists have PAZO OINTMENT in tubes with pile pipe attachment at 75c; and in tin box at 60c.

In the recent Training School at Vivian, Mr. Tom Pitts handed in such an excellent paper on "How Would You Manage a Sunday School of 300 People," that Dr. Holmes, his instructor, has forwarded the paper to the Conference superintendent for publication in the next issue of the Outlook. We congratulate Brother Pitts.

The Vivian Standard Training School issued 59 credits, distributed as follows: Vivian, 16; Ida, 10; Trees, 4; Oil City, 1; Mooringsport, 8; Belcher, 2; Gilliam, 1; Hosston, 14; Munderlyn Chapel, 3. The spirit of the school was fine.

Brother G. M. Hicks writes to the office his regrets at not being able to attend the Rochelle District meeting, stating that his people at Gilliam are in the midst of a Daily Vacation Bible School, which is a wonderful school, with a daily average attendance of 64 plus.

Brother H. L. Johns, of Natchitoches, tells us that he is also in the midst of his Vacation Bible School and had an attendance of eighty-one the day he wrote.

Brother J. W. Faulk tells us that his son, Roland, who is a student at Centenary College, preached his first sermon on last Sunday, taking his father's pulpit at Bonita. We are always interested in our young ministers and trust that God's richest blessing may rest upon this young man.

Sunday School Day offerings sent in so far shows the following results by districts:

New Orleans District	$169.74
Ruston District	119.50
Lake Charles District	91.95
Alexandria District	66.55
Minden District	30.00
Shreveport District	21.42
Monroe District	15.00
Baton Rouge District	4.50

A number ofschools have not yet had their Sunday School Day programs, and no doubt a larger number have had the observance, but failed to send in their offerings. We hope these totals will advance rapidly in the near future.

The Minden Sub-District Sunday School Conference at Colfax on July 1 was one of the best yet held in Louisiana. The pastor at Colfax and his people did everything in their power to make the conference a great success. Presiding Elder Dodson and District Secretary Wren were pleased.

Rev. L. W. Cain, pastor of Parker Memorial Church, New Orleans, writes June 29: "The magnificent new Sunday school building open to all. Be mighty glad to have you with us." We appreciate the invitation and congratulate the congregation.

At the closing exercises of the Rochelle Training School the out-of-town preachers, Brothers Dodson, Pfost, Boddie, Knight and Faulk, presented the following resolution:

"Whereas, the pastor and people of Rochelle have so wholeheartedly welcomed us into their midst for this Standard Training School; and,

"Whereas, they have so generouly and hospitably entertained us, thereby making our work of the school so delightful, we desire to express our deep appreciation, and pray a parting prayer for God's continued blessing upon them and their work."

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 83

Mother! It's Cruel to "Physic" Your Child

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated infants and children had to be kept constantly "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all children's little ills, he did not believe that a sickening "purge" or "physic" was necessary.

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he discovered a laxative which helps to establish natural bowel "regularity" even if the child is chronically constipated. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes a gentle, easy bowel movement but, best of all, it never gripes, sickens or upsets the most delicate system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless, and so pleasant that even a cross, feverish, bilious, sick child gladly takes it.

Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine or write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, for a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE and just see for yourself.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE EPWORTH LEAGUE NEWS.

By Miss Frances Ulmer.

Broad Street League Gives Benefit Banquet.

On the night of June 24 the Senior League of the Broad Street Church, Hattiesburg, gave a banquet for the benefit of the new church fund. There were about forty-five in attendance, despite the inclement weather. A very enjoyable program was rendered, the main features being two vocal selections by our Conference president and two very interesting dialect readings by the secretary of Hattiesburg District.

State Teachers College Leaguers Enjoy Outing.

On Saturday afternoon the College Leaguers and the officers of the Broad Street League went to the river at Eastabutchie for a "chicken fry." About seventy Leaguers were present, and amused themselves by ball games, swimming, picture making, and music by a portable victrola.

First Church, Laurel, League Gives Musical Program.

On Sunday evening the Senior League of the First Church, Laurel, gave a splendid musical program that had been arranged by their capable leader of the First Department, Miss Minnie Lee Lovett. The leader for the evening was Mr. James Taylor, president. The Scripture was read by the leader. Mr. S. C. Flowers, who assists Rev. Claude Jones in his meetings, brought a very beautiful message in song, "I Am Satisfied With Jesus." Mrs. Holt and Mrs. Branch sang a duet, "When You Know Him." Mrs. Branch gave a splendid reading, "I Need Not Fear." Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Brown sang, "My Only Hope," and Miss Ruby Mae McClellan closed the program with a beautiful piano selection.

First Church, Laurel, Hi League Gives Good Program on "Need of a Christian Sabbath."

At 6 o'clock the Epworth Hi League of the First Methodist Church, Laurel, met and studied the above subject. Those taking part on the program were Charlotte Walters, Thomas Dupree, Nelson Carmichael and Pat Lester. This program was under the supervision of Miss Ina B. Anderson, superintendent of the Epworth Hi League.

The Mississippi Conference is justly proud of the Laurel Leaguers, and especially of First Church. The Senior League was one of the eleven Leagues of the Conference that rated a Gold Seal. This church sent the largest delegation to the Epworth League Assembly recently held in Brookhaven.

Lucedale Leagues in Active Church Work.

Just recently the editor received a glowing report of the Lucedale Leagues, and we want to pass it on to our readers. The Senior League has been active since its organization, April, 1926; has fifteen members and ten subscribing to the Epworth Era. W. S. McRay was re-elected president for this year. The Sunday night after the Assembly the service was given over to the League, at which time the newly elected officers were installed. Mrs. R. E. Crocker brought an inspiring message as delegate to the Assembly.

The Epworth Hi League is also active. It was reorganized in September, 1926, out of the younger Seniors and older Juniors. Has twenty-five members and nine Epworthians. Miss Marion Helveston is president of this League, and Mrs. O. F. Moss is superintendent. This League is planning to send a representative to the Camp Dantzler.

The Juniors of this church are organized as the Junior Missionary Society, with Mrs. G. S. Helveston as superintendent. They hold regular meetings and are doing splendid work. During the revival meeting they held regular prayer meeting each evening preceding the preaching service, as did also the other Leagues.

WHAT OF YOUR BOY?

His education and training and the development of his mind, body and character depends on you, his parents. It is a grave responsibility and you should meet the issue squarely.

As every boy looks back over his past training he can point to some one man who largely dominated his formative period and impressed his personality for good upon him.

To thousands of boys Robt. K. Morgan is this dominating personality. He has been training boys for thirty years. He knows boys and loves them. He knows their problems and can guide them aright.

He has a strong faculty composed of high-class Christian teachers. A postal card to Mr. L. I. Mills, Secretary, Morgan School, Petersburg, Tenn., will bring you a catalog and full information about the school.

TRI-COUNTY EPWORTH LEAGUE UNION MET GULF COAST UNION AT HENDERSON POINT FOR ALL DAY PICNIC ON THE FOURTH.

On Monday, July 4, the Leaguers of the Gulf Coast Union and those of the Tri-County Union came together for a picnic at Henderson Point. A splendid crowd was in attendance at this picnic, and every one was in a joyful mood. The first thing on the program was swimming. Quite a number went swimming immediately upon their arrival, but all came out at the signal for dinner. A bountiful lunch was spread, and all enjoyed the dinner and cold drinks. After dinner several lively games were played. Upon arrival of the president of Gulf Coast Union a ball game between the two unions ensued, which showed some splendid playing and resulted in a victory for the Gulf Coast Leaguers. After the ball game all went into the water and played merrily until time to depart for our homes. Each agreed that this had been the means of bringing us to realize what really fine folks belong to our Epworth League Unions.

AN EPWORTH LEAGUE WEDDING OF INTEREST.

Wednesday night, June 29, the culmination of an Epworth League romance came in a beautiful wedding at the First Methodist Church, Gulfport. The principals were Miss Anna Gould Rhodes and Mr. Anderson Netterville, both members of the cabinet of the Gulfport Epworth League, and very popular young people. We note that quite a number of Leaguers were members of the bridal party. A very pretty musical program was rendered by members of the choir of which the bride was a member. This is the first Epworth League wedding that has come to our attention, and we are glad to report it for the encouragement of other Leaguers who may be contemplating this step. We forgot to tell where this couple went for their wedding trip, but we don't know—they didn't tell anybody.

MY IMPRESSION OF THE EPWORTH LEAGUE ASSEMBLY.

By Rev. Don E. Dulaney.

I have recently returned from the ninth annual Epworth League Assembly of the Louisiana Conference, held at Mansfield College, Mansfield, June 7-14, where it was my privilege to serve on the faculty. It is my purpose in writing this statement to highly commend the work done by Rev. James B. Grambling, dean of the Assembly. This was one of the most spiritual and constructive efforts the church has made in the interest of our fine young people of the State. The entire program as planned and carried out under Brother Grambling's leadership was indeed of high value. This I am sure is the testimony of every one who attended the Assembly. The eight days' program may truly be characterized as Inspirational, Educational, Recreational, and Consecrational.

One of the impressive features was the great Conference slogan: "For the Church Always." This was emphasized at various times.

The morning watch services, under Miss Julia Reed; the afternoon vesper services (testimony meetings), and the evening evangelistic messages by Dr. Marion S. Monk, of Monroe, were all of deep spiritual value. Then, a most impressive and effective consecration meeting under the lighted cross, where eighty young people earnestly consecrated themselves for service, was a sight to stir my soul and please the great God of our salvation.

ZONE MEETING IN RICHTON.

On the afternoon of Wednesday, June 1, zone 4 held its second 1927 meeting in the Methodist church in Richton, the Richton folk proving themselves, as always, splendid hosts.

The church was made beautiful with flowers, and the following program was enjoyed:

Song, "Rescue the Perishing."

Scripture, Psalm 91, was read by the zone president, Mrs. M. M. Black.

Prayer, by Mrs. Different.

A splendid paper, "Weak Points in Our Auxiliaries," was read by Mrs. Shannon.

Song, "The Kingdom Is Coming," by little Hertha and Mary Lillian McCormick and Sadie Green, of Richton. This beautiful old song was made extremely sweet by childish voices.

Discussion by Mrs. Dobbins on "Stewardship of Time and Personality." When stewardship is mentioned we always think of "money," and Mrs. Dobbins reminded us how very often we neglect the stewardship of time and personality.

Song, "The World's Children for Jesus," by Daisy Stevens and Evelyn and Janie Gavin. This little missionary song was beautifully sung by these little Richton girls.

A splendid paper on "The Purpose of All Missionary Activity," was read by Mrs. Webb.

Splendid reports were read from the following auxiliaries: Avera, Piave, New Augusta, Ovett, Blodgett, Ellisville, and Richton.

A free-will offering was taken for Methodist ministers in the flood district, which amounted to $16.

New officers were elected as follows: President, Mrs. M. M. Magee, Avera; vice president, Mrs. Shannon, Richton; secretary and treasurer, Mrs. Wilson, Richton.

Splendid talks by Rev. Wiley Ferguson, of Gulfport, and Rev. Cain, from Lucedale, were enjoyed.

A lovely plate luncheon was served to about seventy-five guests.

The next meeting will be held in Lucedale.

MRS. W. F. MUDGE,
Secretary Pro Tem.

SIXTH ZONE MEETING, VICKSBURG DISTRICT.

The second meeting of the Woman's Missionary Societies of the sixth zone of the Vicksburg District was held at Liberty, Miss., on June 21 and attended by about sixty delegates from the various adult and young people's auxiliaries of the zone. The opening devotional services were conducted by the Conference president, Mrs. L. W. Alford, of McComb, whose brief address was inspirational and most appropriate. After prayer by Rev. B. M. Hunt, the pastor of the church, a cordial welcome was extended the visitors by Mrs. Travis, of Liberty, and responded to by Mrs. J. E. Brown, of Gloster.

After two musical selections, an interesting round table discussion was held, led by Mrs. W. P. Johns, of Woodville, whose paper on "Advantages of a Missionary Society" was commended for its excellence, and inspired many present to speak fully of their own personal experiences in their home auxiliaries.

Then Mrs. Van Saunders, of Norfield, Conference leader of Young People's Work, was introduced. She made an enthusiastic talk on the importance of this work, appealed to the adult auxiliaries for help, and stressed the need of the right kind of social amusements in order to hold the young folk of the church. She was followed by Mrs. Jim Lowry, of Gloster, leader of the young people in her town, whose Society numbered fourteen, all of whom were present and gave very sweetly the hymn, "Look for the Beautiful."

Then came a most important number on the program, "Plans for Jubilee Work," presented by Mrs. L. W. Alford in a very definite and helpful manner.

After roll call, responded to by delegates from Centerville, Gloster, Liberty, Union, and Woodville, the meeting adjourned for an hour, during which a most appetizing and well prepared luncheon was served by the ladies of the Liberty Methodist church at the home of Mrs. Travis.

The afternoon session was begun with devotional exercises, conducted by Mrs. T. B. Cottrell, of Magnolia, State corresponding secretary. This was followed by a paper by Mrs. Mellard, of Centerville, on "Why Have a Mission Study Class and How Does It Prepare Us to Be Better Missionaries?"

Mrs. McKeown, the District Secretary, next gave an interesting talk on the work under her supervision, and announced the district meeting for July 13 at Port Gibson. Then Mrs. Cottrell made a brief address on missionary work in general, giving an educative and clear synopsis of what was being done by the Conference Missionary Societies in both the home and foreign fields.

After another round table discussion conducted by Mrs. J. E. Brown, of Gloster, on the topic "Duties of Officers in the Local Auxiliaries," the zone chairman, Mrs. N. D. Priest, of Gloster, gave as her message a short address, the key word of which was service. Centerville was then decided upon as the place for the third zone meeting, and a dismissal prayer was made by the Rev. Mr. Mellard, pastor of that church.

MRS. ROBERT LEWIS,
Secretary Sixth Zone,
Vicksburg District.

BROOKHAVEN DISTRICT MEETING.

The Brookhaven District meeting opened promptly at 9:45 a. m., at Centenary church, McComb, Tuesday, June 28, Mrs. Frank Decell, our District Secretary, presiding. The meeting opened by singing hymn 649.

Mrs. Roby, of Tylertown, led the devotional, using John 15, followed by prayer by Brother Cottrell.

Mrs. McInturff, in fitting words, most cordially welcomed the delegation. Mrs. McGehee, of Bude, graciously responded to the welcome address.

A letter was read from Hon. R. L. Bennett, telling of the unimproved condition of his wife's health. An earnest prayer was offered by Mrs. L. W. Alford, petitioning the Great Physician to bless the means being used to restore our own beloved sister to her useful life of activity, service for him was her chief joy.

It was Mrs. Alford's happy privilege to present the following brethren to the conference: Brothers Decell, Baker, Hawkins, Cottrell, Crisler, Lewis, Sharp, Campbell, Griffin, Abney; also Miss Wei Lien Wu, Soochow, China, and "Aunt Tenie" Sandell, Magnolia, were presented.

The splendid program as arranged was faultlessly carried out, and was as follows:

"Whitworth in Her New Relation," Dr. H. G. Hawkins.

Vocal solo, Mrs. Fant.

Reports by zones. This was a most interesting feature. Space forbids a detailed account, but suffice it to say, the women are nobly carrying on the great task assigned them.

"Purpose of Zone Meetings," Mrs. Miller, Hazlehurst.

"What Have You Gotten from Your Zone Meeting?" Mrs. Crisler, Mrs. Boyd, and Mrs. Ferguson gave some very helpful thoughts on this subject.

"Why a 15 Per Cent Increase in Pledges and Membership?" Mrs. Lampton, Magnolia.

A very interesting and entertaining dialogue, setting forth the importance of taking the Missionary Voice, was given by Mrs. Hemerich and Mrs. Wennerhind, of McComb.

Mrs. Van Sanders, Norfield, with a group of her young people, put on a playlet, "The Doctor's Clinic," showing so forcibly the various excuses given by women for not being active in the Missionary Society.

CONCERNING THE LIFE OF BISHOP GALLOWAY.

Dear Mr. Editor: I have read with much interest the "Life of Bishop Galloway," by Bishop Candler. I was especially interested in it, for I knew him in college at Oxford. He was a favorite with the professors and students. I was very fond of him. We met every Sunday in Sunday school and church services. Dr. Wheat was pastor of the church. We enjoyed his fine sermons. As Chief Justice Lamar said about Dr. Wheat: "He was the greatest orator in the land."

In the dormitory where we roomed, the boys would collect in some one of the rooms and have prayer service before going to bed. In one of the prayer meetings Charley Galloway was converted. They were happy meetngs and much enjoyed by the boys.

Many times I heard Dr. Galloway preach and lecture. He often visited our town, Hazlehurst, and preached for us. He preached for us one Sunday, and in the evening Dr. Galloway and another preacher and myself went to see old Brother Graves, who was very sick. We had a prayer service with him. He got very happy; we all got happy and had a happy time. In a few days God took the good old man home to heaven.

One time at Crystal Springs camp meeting, when the meeting was at a low ebb, a good woman was called on to pray. In her earnest appeal to God for a blessing on the meeting she said: "Lord, send just such a blessing as you sent one time when Dr. Galloway got happy and rolled in the sawdust."

At the Annual Conference at Meridian I was elected alternate delegate to the General Conference held at Richmond. During the session of the Conference I received a wire message from Colonel Nugent, a principal delegate, to come on to Richmond, that Thornton, a principal delegate, was sick and had to go home, and they wanted me there to vote for Dr. Galloway for bishop.

I met Bishop Galloway frequently at Annual Conferences and other places, and heard him preach.

I met him at the depot in Jackson. He was taking the train to go north to hold a Conference. I was going east to attend a Conference. He said to me, "You are going to Conference, are you?" I said, "Yes, Bishop." He said, "That's right, Ruben."

I heard Major Millsaps say that Bishop Galloway could find more people in need of help than any man he ever saw. As it was said of Jesus, "He went about doing good." The last time I saw Bishop Galloway was at the State Sunday school convention in Jackson. He was then very feeble, and in a few days went home to heaven.

Bishop Galloway was a great man, an humble Christian man. Every preacher, every layman, every lay woman in Mississippi and Louisiana ought to have the life of this great man in his or her library to hand down to their children.

Respectfully,

R. W. MILLSAPS.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

At the noon hour we were invited to the basement of the church, where a most delectable plate luncheon wos served by the good women of Centenary; true hospitality and Christian fellowship abounded during this time.

The afternoon session was opened by singing hymn 625.

For the devotional Mrs. Crisler so beautifully expounded Matt. 25.

Brother Sharp led in prayer.

"Correlation of Baby, Primary and Junior Work," Mrs. Cottrell, Magnolia.

"Power of Prayer," Mrs. Bradley, Wesson.

"Social Service." Mrs. Goodwill, Osyka.

Mrs. Lewis, Meadville, on behalf of the conference, thanked the women of Centenary for their hospitality.

This conference was characterized by a deep earnestness of purpose, and we trust that the large number of women in attendance may have become inspired to a renewed consecration to the tasks which challenge the Christian world to-day.

Dried-Out Bowels Hold Malaria in Your System

If malaria is in your system, the only way to get it out without torturing and upsetting yourself is to take Dodson's Liver Tone to clean out all the hardened, dried-out accumulation of bile in the liver and bowels, and carry the germs out with it.

Never take calomel. That's wrong. Calomel is mercury—a dangerous drug. It jars the liver and cleans constipated bowels, that's true. But it salivates you—makes you sick and you lose a day from your work. It stifles the muscles of the bowels, deadens them so they can't act at all.

Dodson's Liver Tone cleans you out good so the liver is free to get the malarial germs out of your blood, and the bowels can carry them off. Before you realize it the chills and fever stop. Malaria is gone.

Get the big bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone from your nearest store. They all have it. Keep it in the house so you will have it handy to take nights before you go to bed.

Any one caring for the new interpretations of Programs of Work drop me a card and you will hear from me.

It is time to begin to prepare for the observance of Children's Week in September or early in October. Write me when you get ready for literature or any other help. Write and you will get a reply.

Go over your Program of Work with your officers and teachers so you will be ready to be checked up during September and October. Do this and see how business will pick up.

The young men and women who are teaching Cokesbury courses are having marked success in their work. They are entering every open door and are placing the leaven of the gospel where it will work in transforming lives. Open the door and let them in to help you and your people lest some one else take your crown.

The following five reasons why hold Standard Training Schools were given by Rev. J. B. Randolph, presiding elder of the Columbus District, at our training school held at Kosciusko:

1. The Standard Training School adapted to the needs of Sunday school workers.

2. We all need to specialize in our work. This is a day of specialization.

3. Other professions hold conferences, conventions, and schools to advance their causes. We need to do the same.

4. It is a good thing to keep us studying.

5. The social, spiritual, and intellectual development of the Standard Training School are of the highest order. They would be more largely attended if our people knew their real worth, and if they could get accommodation.

The following is what Miss Bessie Spain thinks of the course in "Story Telling" taught by Mrs. Adams: "I have enjoyed this course more than any other. It has answered hundreds of questions that I have never understood. I know now that to tell a story, it must be fitted to the listeners, it must be interesting, I must know it well, and most of all, I must love the story. I know now that the story is the best way to bring out a desired lesson, I know it is wonderful entertainment. Then most of all I have learned some of the most beautiful stories. I have planned to use three of them at vesper services at the Girl Reserve Camp next week. I love, appreciate, and shall never forget my instructor."

Mrs. W. W. Milligan said: "This course has been a privilege that I would not have missed at all. Besides getting a blessing out of it, for each class period has been inspiring and uplifting to me, it has opened up to me undreamed of opportunities of service. I never before realized what an important part of the child's life the story-telling hour was. I have learned something of how to distinguish between the kinds of stories to be used for the different ages, which are good and which are bad. I have learned something of the structure of the story and how to tell one with the most effect. I have already been practicing some and think I have gotten the idea across. In fact, it has opened up a new world to me. I did not have to learn to love stories, but I have certainly gotten ideas of real value as to how to tell them so as to have the best effect."

Find a Faithful Ally in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

MRS. ADOLPH HANSEN
HOLMQUIST, SOUTH DAKOTA

Holmquist, South Dakota.—"I can not begin to tell you how much good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I was sick for about four years. I could not sleep, and I was always worrying, so one day we saw your advertisement in a paper, and I made up my mind to try the Vegetable Compound. I bought one bottle and did not see any change, so I got another bottle. At the second bottle I began to feel better and I have used the Vegetable Compound ever since, whenever I feel badly. I recommend it and I will answer any letters asking about it."—Mrs. Adolph Hansen, Holmquist, South Dakota.

Could Work Only Two Hours

Encanto, Calif.—"I bless the day I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I was so weak and tired all the time I could not work more than two hours each day then had to go to bed for the rest of the day. I read so much about the Vegetable Compound and I was so weak that I decided to try it. I now do my own housework—washing, scrubbing, and ironing—and then help my husband with his garden. I do not have that worn-out feeling now. I advise every woman to give your wonderful medicine a trial, and I will answer any letters I receive from women asking about it."—Mrs. Stella Lay, 700 Jamacha Road, Encanto, Calif.

A woman who is fighting for her health and her family's happiness is a valiant soldier. She wages her battle in her own kitchen. She has no thrilling bugles to cheer her on, no waving banners.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

ECCLESIASTICAL SCHOLARSHIP.

It is to be hoped that there is a considerable group of young men throughout the church who have the intellectual ability and the inclination to devote themselves to the acquirement of a degree of scholarship in ecclesiastical subjects that will fit them for reponsible positions in the educational work of the church. It is probably true right now that if any one of several positions in our universities should become vacant, it would be impossible to fill it from the ranks of our own men.

The acquirement of scholarship—real scholarship—is a difficult and tedious process. It means years of patient, unremitting study. It is just about the hardest kind of hard work. A scholar is not made in the four years of a college course or the three or four additional years in the university. That period is merely the beginning of what must be a lifetime of study. But it is ordinarily the beginning of the process through which a would-be scholar must pass.

Unfortunately, the pecuniary rewards of scholarship are comparatively small. The teaching profession—and it is in the teaching profession that the scholar usually finds his occupation—is proverbially poorly paid. It ought not to be so, and it is to be hoped that the time is not far distant when the friends of education will make it possible for a man to choose teaching as a profession as he would law or medicine—with a reasonable expectation that he will at least be able to earn a comfortable support. The meager salaries still paid teachers has doubtless turned many a young man aside from the field to which he would really like to devote his life.

But the preacher must not yield to the temptation to hold his talents for the highest bidder; and the young preacher who has the ability and the inclination to become a scholar ought to realize that he can make a great contribution to the church and to the world by the consecration of his talents to the promotion of useful knowledge. It is at least an unfortunate situation when the need of scholars is so great and the supply is so small.

A LESSON FROM HISTORY.

When Octavius entered upon the heritage left by his mighty uncle, Julius Caesar, he set himself to the task of restoring the vigor of the Roman Empire, which had been exhausted by years of civil war. In commenting upon this determination of the Emperor, Dr. Thomas M. Lindsay, Principal of the Glasgow College of the United Free Church of Scotland, pertinently remarks, "He recognized that a people without a religious faith is in a state of hopeless decadence." Hence he explains the effort of Octavius to restore the ancient religious rites of the Roman people.

It would be well for our public leaders to recognize the truth of this statement by Dr. Lindsay in connection with a former period, and give themselves whole-heartedly and unreservedly to the promotion of all those agencies which have as their end the establishment and maintenance of religious faith among the people of this nation.

A people without a religious faith is in a state of hopeless decadence because there is nothing to inspire that people to the development of good character and nothing to make the future worth living for. Without religious faith, all moral sanctions are removed and life becomes simply the effort of the individual to get for himself in the present all the material good he desires. With no motive for altruism, selfishness becomes the dominating principle of life, the props of a stable civilization are knocked from under, and moral decadence sets in. And the end is not far off. The propagators and defenders of religious faith are the truest friends the people have.

"LINDBERGH FLIES ALONE."

The following beautiful sentiment, inspired by the trans-Atlantic flight of Colonel Lidbergh, is credited by an exchange to the New York Sun:

"Alone?

"Is he alone at whose right side rides Courage, with Skill within the cockpit and Faith upon the left? Does Solitude surround the brave when Adventure leads the way and Ambition reads the dials? Is there no company with him for whom the air is cleft by Daring and the dark is made light by Emprise?

"True, the fragile bodies of his fellows do not weigh down the plane; true, the fretful minds of weaker men are lacking from his crowded cabin; but as his airship keeps her course he holds communion with those rarer spirits that inspire to intrepidity and by their sustaining potency give strength to arm, resource to mind, content to soul.

"Alone? With what other companion would that man fly to whom the choice were given?"

LONG SERMONS, OR SHORT?

It would be a brave man indeed, who would undertake to set definite limits as to length of all sermons. Even though an ecumenical council should undertake to say that no preacher shall preach more than thirty minutes, there would still be some who ought to preach longer than that and some—perhaps a great many—who ought not to preach so long. The length of a sermon is to be determined by its effect upon the congregation. If a long sermon holds, interests, and profits, it is all right; if it does none of these things—better try short ones.

FISHING WITH WORMS.

We recall that a year or two ago we had some remarks to make about the claim of the distinguished President of the United States. the Honorable Calvin Coolidge, to be a real fisherman, calling in question that claim because it took him two or three hours to get to fishing after he had reached the fishing hole. Perhaps that criticism was undeserved, though we still believe that he unnecessarily lost some valuable time.

Now, however, that a regular avalanche of criticism has fallen upon him because he used worms as bait in fishing for trout, we feel it is nothing but right that we should raise our feeble voice in his defense. We are willing to lay it down as a fundamental proposition and defend it till all the creeks run dry that worms are good and suitable bait for trout or any other kind of fish that will bite them, and especially so when used by the President of the United States. We base our contention upon the following consideration:

The use of worms for bait opens a large field of usefulness for the poor, down-trodden worm. Who has not had tears of pity fill his eyes as he has contemplated the sad estate of the worm? What hope has he—or it—in life so long as it must spend all the days in the dark, damp ground, seeing the light only as the sod is turned or it emerges for a moment from the hole it has digged for itself? And if it should pause to bask in the light of day for a little enjoyment of the beauties of nature, it does so at the imminent risk of being stepped upon and crushed to death, or of being gobbled up by some greedy chicken or bird.

But when the worm is recognized as a suitable and proper bait for fishing, even fishing for trout, how important it becomes in the whole scheme of things! Instead of spending its days in sad solitariness in subterranean recesses, it becomes eagerly sought of men. Is fishing to be done? Men can then be seen, with hoe, shovel and spade, digging here and there, now turning over great pieces of sod, now examining intently the dirt as it falls to pieces, now stooping and exultingly seizing and dropping into the can, brought for the purpose, the fine, fat worm that a little later will mean fish in the pan. The worm has come into his own!

We earnestly hope that those who have heretofore been unwilling to give the worm a chance and have condemned the President of the United States for using his influence in behalf of this weak and neglected creature will now see the error of their way and rejoice with all their might that a vast field of usefulness now lies before the worm race—especially grubworms and earthworms. All honor to the President for his unflinching determination to see that the weak have a chance!

IT ISN'T THE CHURCH; IT'S YOU.

It isn't the pastor's flowery prayer
Or the way the choir sings,
Or the size of the coin your neighbor gives,
Or the help your brother brings.
It isn't the size of your favorite church
Or the cost of your favorite pew,
Or the style of clothes the members wear;
For it isn't the church; it's you.

It isn't the way the work is done,
Or the way the money's spent,
Or whether the Gospel's all brought in,
Or whether there's some that's sent.
It isn't the kind of creed they love,
Or peculiar things they do,
Or whether the doctrine suits your taste;
For it isn't the church; it's you.

For the chain's as strong as the weakest link,
And it breaks with a heavy load,
But a church that's full of the links that pull
Can level the roughest road.
If you can get in tune with the Master's will,
With your heart and your labors, too,
You will love your church, though it has its faults,
For it isn't the church; it's you.

—The Christian Evangelist.

MID-OCEAN MEDITATIONS.

By Dr. O. E. Goddard.

Why am I going to Brazil? Why do we send missionaries to Brazil? Why build schools and churches in Brazil? Why should our people contribute hard-earned money to carry on our work in Brazil?

Brazil has had a form of Christianity for centuries. Brazilians are affable, suave, attractive people. They have a republican form of government. Their country has almost unlimited natural resources. Who are we that we should assume responsibilities for the religious welfare of these attractive people?

The usual and proper answer is that these people have had the misfortune of being under the domination of the Roman Catholic Church and, therefore, have not had Christianity properly, adequately represented. Perhaps no reader of these lines will question the accuracy of the answer. It is not my purpose to go into any tirade against the Roman Catholic Church, nor to array appalling facts to show their corruption. It is my purpose to call attention to the facts that since we are in Brazil because the Roman Catholic Church is not an adequate exponent of Christ, we are assuming quite boldly that our church is an adequate exponent of the teachings of Jesus. It is infinitely important that we should be. It would be a double tragedy for the Roman Catholics to come claiming to bring the true teachings of Jesus, and not do it, and then for us to come claiming a better interpretation and representation of Christ, and not give them Christ as he is.

The blunder of the Roman Catholic Church is exalting externals, ceremonies, sacraments above measure, and arrogating to itself powers that belong only to Christ. It is easy for our church to blunder on that line. Indeed it is exceedingly difficult for our church not to fall into similar errors. If Protestantism has not and does not fall into similar errors, it will be the miracle of the age. If we do fall into similar errors why should we obtrude ourselves into Roman Catholic countries? Some serious and pertinent questions: Are we adequately representing Jesus? Are we putting the emphasis where he put it? Does the Protestant member, preacher, missionary, remind one of Jesus? Are we reproducing the Christ on earth? Are we setting up the kind of society Jesus came to establish? What does it take to make a good Methodist, a good Baptist, a good Presbyterian, a good Episcopalian, a good Lutheran? Have we set up some connectional standards that do not get to the root of the matter? If one professes religion, joins the church, quits all his scandalous meanness, attends church and pays his dues, and is unquestionably orthodox, believes in the Bible from cover to cover, would he not be in good standing in any of our churches? Yet he could measure up to all this and not be a Christian at all.

If Jesus was ever concerned about these matters, the New Testament does not reveal it. If a member believes in verbal inspiration of the Holy Bible, the literal interpretation of the Holy Scriptures, the virgin birth of Jesus and the physical second coming of Jesus, does he not feel that he is more loyal than the average Christian and feel that he is called on to defend the faith of the fathers? Important as these creedal matters are, is it not true that a man can believe all that steadfastly and not be a Christian at all? Did Jesus ever show any solicitude about men subscribing to these doctrines? Does not this give rise to the question—Are we emphasizing what Jesus emphasized?

Why should I be so desperate in defending some things that Jesus did not concern himself about? Are we not unduly concerned about matters we have pushed to the fore and neglecting more important matters that were paramount in the mind of Jesus? If we are doing this we are falling into errors similar to those of which Rome is guilty. If I have interpreted Jesus rightly, his first concern is personal commital of a person to him. "Come unto me, and I will give you rest." "No man cometh to the Father but by me." "Ye will not come to me that ye may have life." "I am the way, the truth, and the life." The first step is a whole-hearted committal of a person to a Person. Christianity is founded upon a Person, not on a book, creed, sacrament, or philosophy. "Falling in love with Christ" is the first step.

The first step is not submitting to a ceremony, or subscribing to a creed. It is a surrender to Christ as Lord, Master, Savior, Redeemer, King. Nothing else need be obtruded here. In Methodism experience has the primacy. Paul got his experience first. Then evolved his creed. Some folks now want us to make our experiences conform to and fit in with their interpretation of a creed, but this is not the Pauline, nor the Wesleyan, plan. The primacy of experience must not be overlooked in Methodism. This experience comes from this personal committal of the individual to Christ. This seems to be the primary matter in the mind of Jesus.

This whole-hearted surrender to Christ commits the convert to Jesus—to his whole program. It then becomes his duty to identify himself fully with Jesus. He must take Jesus seriously in all matters—surely in these, on which Jesus put the major emphasis. Where did Jesus put the emphasis? The Golden Rule—The Law of Love—The Missionary Commission, "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men do to you, do ye even so to them, for this is the law and the prophets." It is not a theory to be admired, an ideal to be dreamed of. It is the law of Christ's Kingdom. Do we make it so?

What a revolution it would make were it required of all who join the church. Who are we that we have dared to set aside the law that Jesus gave to regulate conduct in his Kingdom? Again, "Master, which is the great commandment in the law?" "Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." All the law in the kingdom of Christ came to set up is concentrated here. Love God and act accordingly. Love your fellowmen and act accordingly.

All the wrongs men count against God and against their fellowmen are violations of the law of love. The application of this would right all wrongs and produce a perfect society on earth. There could be no injustices, no exploitation, no domination of the weak by the strong. Here all industrial difficulties find their solution. Let employer and employee obey the law of love and all difficulties vanish. Here race problems find their solution. Let every race apply the law of love, and racial problems vanish like mist before the rising sun. Bring the world to an appreciation of the law of love and wars would be no more. Every perplexing problem in the world to-day could find its solution in the application of the law of love. Why do we not emphasize this? Where is the church that requires its members to practice the law of love? If we practice the golden rule and the law of love, we must be missionary. To ignore the needs of non-Christian nations, would be to violate both the golden rule and the law of love. Accepting these two make a missionary passion and program inevitable.

Now, as I see it, what Brazil needs is the golden rule, the law of love and the missionary passion. If, however, the church which we transplant to Brazil is a reproduction of the church at home, other things than these three fundamentals will be obtruded. This is the pity. Would that the church at home were a Golden Rule Church, a Law of Love Church, so that what we reproduce abroad might be a real New Testament Church. The end of these meditations is—Let the church at home take Jesus seriously, putting the emphasis where he put it. Cease wasting our time and energy over non-essentials, and bring to Brazil and other countries where we work the living risen Christ as he really is.

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

The toll of life from modern inventions and discoveries is appalling. Electricity, that strange, subtle, unknown energy, so useful, so powerful, claims its victims by scores. The motor cars place the juggernaut of India far behind in the numbers it crushes, maims, kills. Twenty-seven million of these death-dealing machines, like the Assyrian chariots seen in prophet's vision by Nahum, "rage in the streets;" they rush to and fro in the broad ways; the appearance of them is like torches, and they run like lightnings. And the sad part of it is we have become so accustomed to wholesale slaughter from these chariots of gas and fire that a passing sigh is about the one tribute paid to the memory of the slain. Verily all that a man hath will he give for his life except to ride the speed demon and get there, whither bound, the quickest and shortest way. And in most cases this speeding is the most unreasonable, unconscionable thing known in the annals of folly.

Horace has told us that crossing the seas does not change the mind: it is surely a pity that something more than travel might change the mind—if he possesses one, of the lawless killer with a steering wheel in his hands.

Momentum I believe is mass and motion combined, and an old law of physics is that two solid bodies cannot occupy the same portion of space at the same time. So when mass and motion meet going in opposite directions "destruction wasteth at noonday" and at night. Make laws against all this and they cry, and many are made and in the making, but if a thing shaped like a man has not sense enough to regard physical law, so far as he is concerned civil law is in vain. For too often he is dead and the pity is he killed some innocent one is his folly. It resolves itself into this—only good common sense, prudence and quick judgment, combined with faith in the providence that guides and sustains will and can help. Men are more than sparrows, but they cannnot travel as safely as this tiny bird flies!

The life, reign and death of Saul, Israel's first king, is a study, a subject for a master tragedy, a warning. Unlike many of the later kings of his people, he was not bound by precedent, or corrupted by wicked and vicious example, but came to his throne fresh from the pure air of the field and flock. Moreover, he had in Samuel, the last and greatest of an illustrious line of judges, a wise and sane counsellor. His father, Kish, is said to have been a man of valor, so there must have been some military training in the younger days of his life, and after his accession to royalty the greater part of his life was spent in waging war. The end of most great military rulers is tragic, and Israel's first king is not an exception to the rule. Envy and jealousy, joined with a dark, suspicious, foreboding spirit of distrust toward his loyal friend, David, and even toward Jonathan, his son, embittered his life. The mountain peaks of human greatness are not infrequently shrouded in lurid thunder clouds.

It must be a lonely thing after all to be a king. To sit alone on an apex of power with none for real companions and fellowship. The music of David's harp failed to soothe the deeper tones of discord in his own soul. The princely, loyal, filial love of Jonathan was rewarded with a spear thrown to smite him to the wall. The counsel of Samuel is so far forgotten that the Witch of Endor becomes a priestess to his disordered soul. All because, I conclude, that in his younger days of life he failed to curb and control an imperious, willful temper and become master of himself. Failing to rule his own spirit, he signally failed to rule others, and the battle on Mount Gilboa is but the last scene in this tragic tragedy. David's elegy of this event has in it a pathos that stirs the heart even across the ages.

ORTHODOXY.

By Rev. John W. Ramsey.

In the New Orleans Christian Advocate of June 23 there is a very plausible but misleading editorial on the subject of orthodoxy. In the first paragraph, the editor says: "We wonder if there are many really orthodox people anywhere in the whole world," which is considerable territory for one editor to cover and, if there be so few orthodox people in the world as editor seems to think, the "whole world" is in a sad plight. Indeed, if what the editor says is true, we must have fallen onto the times of which the apostle spoke when he said: "For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears." In his next statement, the editor assignes his reason for pushing the line of his horizon so far out: "By so much as one man differs from another man in opinion, by so much is he unorthodox according to the standards accepted by the first," which, of course, is a very broad and attenuated definition of orthodoxy, if it may be regarded as such at all—as I shall endeavor to show when I come to define orthodoxy. According to the editor's definition, the essential importance of the subject of a man's opinion or the object of his faith has nothing to do with his orthodoxy or unorthodoxy. An orthodox Jew does not eat meat; I am a Jew, but I eat meat, hence, I am unorthodox. My mental attitude toward a thing, whether it be meat, the Bible, or God, determines my orthodoxy. The subject matter has nothing to do with it, according to the editor. So he reasons and thus he would reduce orthodoxy to the vanishing point of insignificance, the objective of the sophistical and subtle reasoning of the modernist when he says: "It does not matter what a man believes if his life is right," as if a man's belief did not affect and give direction to his life. They forget that Jesus said: "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."

I deny that orthodoxy, in the real meaning of the word, extends to "every detail of opinion and belief." If that were so, Baptists would regard Methodists as unorthodox, and Methodists would discount the claims of the Baptists to orthodoxy when, in fact, neither assumes that attitude toward the other, although differing widely concerning the non-essentials of salvation. Both denominations, as is well known, are generally regarded as evangelical and orthodox in their common acceptance of the great fundamental teachings of the Bible and the underlying principles of the Christian religion, which have been accepted through the ages by all who "earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints." For either to do otherwise would be nothing short of denominational bigotry.

I also deny—and my denial is worth as much in the open market as the editor's affirmation—I also deny that "rigid orthodoxy implies a closed mind and a crystallized intellect." Winess John Wesley, whose catholicity as well as his orthodoxy cannot be consistently questioned by any loyal Methodist; witness also Luther, Huss, and a thousand others whose intellects, towering far above the most influential intellectuals of the present day, dominated their own day and made history for future generations to read. What of Paul, also, the great apostle to the Gentiles, who was endowed with the mightiest intellect of that age, if not all ages, whose clear thinking and logical reasoning really laid the foundation for the Christian religion and established the chief corner stone thereof in the hearts of men? Was he "rigidly orthodox?" The Judaizing Christians did not think so; and there are those now who do not think so; but in my opinion, he was the most rigidly orthodox theologian the world has ever known, and my suspicion is that it was his "rigid orthodoxy" that cost him his head under the reign of Nero, the cruel Roman tyrant. Is the editor ready to say that Paul had a "closed mind and a crystallized intellect?"

Once again: "To assume that one man has stated a truth for all time to come, or that any group of men has done so, in a form that can never be properly changed, is to attribute to the human mind a degree of infallibility that cannot be sustained by an appeal to history." If by man or men the editor means mere human beings, there is some truth in what he says; but there appeared upon the stage of history some two thousand years ago the man, Christ Jesus, who spoke the final word in truth. "I am the way, the truth, and the life," said he. To his disciples he also said, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." The skies may fall, but his word shall stand forever, despite the decrying of creeds and orthodoxy by modernists. Jesus was the embodiment of truth and the principles which he enunciated are the Ultima Thule of Truth. Also, while it must be admitted that mere form of statement of truth is not essential to truth itself, yet the forms of truth to which the minds of men become accustomed are worth while in that, for one thing, they exercise a formative influence upon the convictions of the mind and assist much toward establishing the faith of men. Furthermore, why should one think it necessary to contend for changing the form, unless such change expresses the truth in a better way, thereby making truth more easily apprehended? For instance, take Paul's statement of the doctrine of the resurrection and the atonement made for the sins of the world on the cross by Jesus Christ. Is there a man living to-day whose keen intellect can formulate these fundamental teachings in a clearer or more comprehensive a manner than did Paul? Why change the form merely for the sake of changing, unless there be back of the desire to change a sinister purpose to covertly emasculate the truth? Is it possible to change for the better the "Apostles' Creed," which is accepted by all orthodox Christian as containing the basic principles of the Christian religion? In this connection, it will be remembered that a few years ago there were those who agitated the question of changing the creed of Methodism. Why? Was it because the truth had outgrown its old shell, or was it because they wanted to modify or eliminate some truths which they did not believe?

What is orthodoxy anyhow? For one thing, it is the bugaboo of modernists who are striving so strenuously to bring it into disrepute. What is orthodoxy? The answer to that question will reveal the source of the editor's mistake and disclose the ground of his fallacious ratiocinations. To quote: "Technically, the rule of orthodoxy may be applied to only a few things," and immediately the editor proceeds to modify his statement by adding: "Actually, it extends to every detail of opinion and belief," which is a process of reasoning that logicians have denominated as reductio ad absurdum. "Details of opinion and belief" are mere nothings and, therefore, orthodoxy is a mere nothing—so reasons our editor. But what is orthodoxy. Mr. Webster defines: "Orthodox—sound in opinion or belief, especially in religious doctrines, hence, holding the Christian faith as formulated in the great church creeds or confessions." Accordingly, an orthodox Christian is one who accepts the "Apostles' Creed," which is a statement of the fundamental doctrines of the Bible; and an orthodox Methodist is one who accepts the gospel as interpreted by the creed of the Methodist church. Yet they want to laugh orthodoxy out of court—it makes me tired!

It occurs to me that the acceptance, which is orthodoxy, of these essentially fundamental teachings of the Bible; or their rejection, which is heresy, is no mere quibbling over "details of opinion and belief," but their acceptance vitally concerns the salvation of immortal souls. Hence, I am not willing to remain silent while the editor of one of our church paper speaks disparagingly of orthodoxy. I confess I have but little patience with this modern hue and cry against orthodoxy and creeds, and the doctrine that it makes no difference what a man believes if he lives a right life. They who preach such nonsense are apparently oblivious of the fact that the life is the product of the creed. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he," said our Lord, and Paul said, "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness." While I do not live altogether in the past, I am old-fashioned enough to accept unreservedly every tenet of the "Apostles' Creed," and I believe every article of the creed of the Methodist church. I am, therefore, an orthodox Christian and an orthodox Methodist—and I rejoice in my orthodoxy. Lastly, if the time should ever come in my life when I cease to accept the creed of my church, to whose doctrines I have sworn to be loyal, I shall be honest enough to withdraw from its ministry and membership—so help me, God!

ALEXANDRIA DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Alexandria District Conference met in its fifty-seventh session at Bunkie, La., Wednesday, July 6, at 10 a. m., with Rev. C. C. Wier, presiding elder, in the chair. The beginning of this session was a very beautiful and inspiring service as the presiding elder, assisted by Rev. I. T. Reames and Rev. W. S. Henry, administered the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper to a fine gathering of preachers and laymen from the district.

After the Sacrament had been administered the conference was organized. Rev. D. B. Boddie was elected secretary of the conference. The roll was called and the presiding elder announced the committees, and the conference got down to work.

The preaching was done by Rev. Cleanth Brooks, of First Church, Alexandria, and Rev. H. W. Bowman, of Oakdale. Both these brethren brought thought-provoking messages. The sermon by Brother Brooks was a very spiritual message and brought the congregation to a deeper sense of the gift of the Spirit of God. We all went away from this service feeling that we had been close to God.

The reports from the pastors showed that progress is being made over the district in spite of the fact that several of the charges are affected tremendously by the Mississippi flood waters. Two of the charges, Melville and Lottie, were almost if not wholly covered by the flood.

Mrs. T. W. Hardee, of Pleasant Hill, District Secretary of the Woman's Missionary Society, represented the woman's work, and made an interesting address to the conference.

Dr. Briscoe Carter represented the educational interests of the conference; Rev. R. W. Vaughan, the Orphanage; Rev. C. D. Atkinson and Rev. A. K. McLellan, the Sunday school work.

The Wednesday evening program was in the hands of the laymen, and was presided over by Mr. W. D. Haas, Jr., District Lay Leader. This was a fine service, with the following addressing the conference: Dr. J. R. Rushing, one of the associate lay leaders; Rev. Claude K. Smith, pastor at Pineville, and Hon. T. W. Holloman, Conference Lay Leader, of Alexandria.

Rev. C. B. White, our pastor at Evergreen, was recommended to the Annual Conference for admission on trial.

Mr. W. D. Haas, Jr., was elected as District Lay Leader, and Dr. J. R. Rushing and Mr. R. D. Lamson were re-elected as associates. These are three fine Christian men, who are doing a great work for the church.

The following lay delegates were elected to the Annual Conference: W. D. Haas, Jr., Bunkie; H. H. White, Alexandria; Dr. J. R. Rushing, Benson; T. W. Holloman, Alexandria; H. T. Wadley, Tioga; R. I. Gould, Alco; J. L. Ballard, Opelousas; Mrs. W. T. Cunningham, Natchitoches; S. D. Marler, Oakdale.

The following alternate lay delegates were elected to the Annual Conference: W. T. Murray, Alexandria; J. U. Morrison, Alexandria; Leon Campbell, Barbreck; Mrs. H. L. Johns, Natchitoches.

Rev. L. N. Hoffpauir and his Bunkie people know how to entertain a conference, for we all had a great time and enjoyed the fine hospitality of these good people. The conference adopted by a rising vote resolutions of thanks to the pastor and his people for their untiring efforts to make us comfortable and happy.

Just before the conference session came to a close a resolution setting forth the feeling that the entire district has for our beloved presiding elder and expressing our sorrow in the fact that this is his fourth year on the district and that the law of the church forces him to leave the presidency of the district at the approaching session of the Annual Conference, was read and adopted by a rising vote. Brother Wier made some touching remarks, and in his talk he paid a high tribute to his aged mother, who resides in Houston, Tex., attributing his success in a large measure to her prayers.

D. B. BODDIE, Secretary.

THE CONGO.

By Bishop James Cannon, Jr.

The Minister of Colonies in Brussels had given me a letter addressed to the Governor General of the Congo at Berna, stating the fact and the purpose of my visit to the Congo, and requesting that I be given all assistance possible compatible with the rules and regulations of the government. It was truly a veritable "Aladdin's Lamp," which I never used without securing what I needed if it could be done. In none of my many trips have I been shown such uniform courtesies, or been given such valuable practical assistance. When I found at Dar-es-Salaam that the sudden change of boat and train schedules would leave me stranded at Albertville nine days, and at Kabalo three days, I was quietly disgusted, and expressed myself in plain, not to say strong language, to the Belgian Consul. He was quite sympathetic, and when I asked him whether he could facilitate my movements be sent a telegram to the Belgian Consul at Kigoma quoting a good part of the letter of the Minister of the Colonies, and emphasized the upset of my plans by the change of schedule, and expressing the hope that he might help me. When I reached Kigoma three days later, I was met at the train by the Belgian Consul, who took charge of my baggage, and informed me that he had taken up the matter with the Director of Transport at Albertville, who had wired that he would arrange for special train from Albertville to Kabalo—275 miles—and had asked for special steamer from Kabalo to Kongolo—fifty miles—and that he thought that a special train would take me from Kongolo to Kibombo—the railroad station within fifty miles of our Tunda station. He said that the request of the Colonial Minister to assist me would be gladly complied with by all Congo officials. I found that he had reserved a good cabin for me on the steamer Baron Dhamir, so that I had the day at my disposal.

I took the opportunity presented to drive to Ujiji, the village made forever memorable by the difficult harrowing experiences of David Livingstone, and the place where Henry M. Stanley on his search found him. Dr. Blackie, in his "Life of Livingstone," records that Livingstone had reached Ujiji after an absence of two years on his last trip to the Luababa (Congo) River, broken down with fatigue, fever and dysentery, only to find that his store of supplies had been sold by the Mohammedan in charge, who said they thought he was dead.

Five days after his arrival, Stanley reached Ujiji, came into the village, and when he saw Dr. Livingstone, walked up to him deliberately and said quietly, "Dr. Livingstone, I presume." "Yes," said Livingstone; "I thank God, Doctor, I have been permitted to see you," said Stanley; "I feel thankful I am here to welcome you," replied Livingstone. In this quiet, undemonstrative fashion, these two great explorers met, after Livingstone had been lost sight of for three years, and after four months of delightful fellowship they parted, Stanley to come to America, and Livingstone to make his last journey to the headwaters of the last branch of the Lualuba and to Chitembo village, where he died at night alone on his knees (his regular attitude) in prayer.

There is a stone commemorating the meeting, but it is quite insignificant and commonplace as a memorial of such a dramatic event. My route from Lake Tanganyika to the Lualuba was practically the same as that taken by Livingstone, but it took me only three days by steamer and train to cover the ground which took him three months in his weak, enfeebled condition on foot, in hammock and canoe. I read his account taken from his journal of the last trip through this section, as I went through it on the train, and while the story is thrilling, the outstanding fact in the narrative is the Livingstone attitude of devotion and simple, unfaltering trust in God and in the saving power of Jesus Christ. Here are one or two characteristic extracts from his journal: "We now end 1866. It has not been so fruitful or useful as I intended. Will try to do better in 1867, and be better, more gentle and loving, and may the Almighty to whom I commit my ways, bring my desires to pass and prosper me. Let all the sins of '66 be blotted out for Jesus' sake. May he, who was ful lof grace and truth impress his character on mine."

Later, when surrounded not only with apparently insurmountable difficulties and in daily danger of his life, he writes: "It is a mistake to imagine that the Divine Majesty on high is too exalted to take any notice of our mean affair. The great minds among men are remarkable for the attention they bestow upon minutia. An astronomer cannot be great unless his mind can grasp an infinity of very small things, each of which, if not alluded to, would throw his work out. The Duke of Wellington's letters show his constant attention to minute details. And so the supreme Mind of the universe is revealed to us in his Son. The very hairs of your head are all numbered. A sparrow cannot fall to the ground without your Father! He who dwelleth in the Light which no man can approach unto condescends to provide for the minutest of our wants, directly, guarding and assisting in each hour and movement with an infinitely more vigilant and excellent care, than our own interest and self-love can ever attain unto. With his ever-watchful loving eye constantly upon me I may surely follow my bent, and go among the heathen in front, bearing the message of peace and good will and all appreciate the statement that it is offensive to our common Father to sell and kill his children (referring to the infamous slave trade which was finally overthrown as a result of his interesting efforts), I will therefore go, and may the Almighty help me to be faithful." What simple, boundless trust in God!

The night ride on Lake Tanganyika to Albertville, ninety miles, was delightful; clear water, good breeze, half moon, excellent dinner, good bed and mosquito net, and the best selection of Victrola records I have ever heard anywhere—great choruses, great orchestra, some fine quartets, not a single jazz number. It made me wonder, until I caught the look of delight on the captain's face and learned that he had belonged to a great choral society in his home city.

We reached Albertville at sunrise in a genuine tropical downpour, which was so protracted and so severe that it put the deck kitchen out of commission. Finally when the rain slackened, I went to the railway officers, and after shifting about from one official to another, I found one who could speak English, and who, when I gave my letter from the Colonial Minister said at once, "The directors have arranged to send you to Kabalo by special train to-morrow morning, and you will reach there to-morrow night."

With this definite arrangement made, it seemed almost certain that I would be able to reach Kibombo, the railroad depot to our Tunda station, nearly two weeks earlier than I had wired to Wembo-Niama from Dar-es-Salaam. One result of this would be that none of the missionaries would be able to meet me at Kibombo, so it became necessary to take action to meet that situation. I had my boxes carried to Tanganyika Hotel, where I had a fairly clean, comfortable room, except that while I was taking a nap in the afternoon, I was awakened by two rats engaged in a scuffle for a piece of bread which had dropped on the floor. I could not get one of them to go out of the room, so I was obliged to kill it and throw it into the street.

I went to the Intertropical Confina, the best magazine for caravan supplies, and purchased some absolute necessities for the caravan trip; first of all, a good iron trunk,blanket, pillow, mosquito net, mosquito net boots, sheets, two cases of carbonated water, canned sardines, ham, milk, fruit, biscuits, peas, soup, several tins of crackers, and a number of other items to make the trip in health and fair comfort. The most important point to watch in traveling in tropical countries is purity of water, a regular substantial, but not too heavy diet, and protection from mosquitoes and vermin.

I was much interested in the lady at the magazine. Being somewhat surprised at her very good English, spoken with an American accent, upon inquiry, I found that she was a Russian lady, who came to the United States to take training in nursing before the war, living in the United States several years, and went among the first volunteers to nurse in Belgium. While there, she married a Belgian gentleman. They had both planned to come to the United States, but found that the new immigration law had made it quite difficult, and so had come out to Albertville in the Belgian Congo to take charge of this quite important supply magazine. She was greatly interested in my plans, and exceedingly eager to sell me an army cot, but the price of $25 was more than I thought such a cot was worth, and I decided that I would take my chances sleeping on my blanket spread on native mats on the ground at the rest houses, which as a matter of fact I did without any discomfort or damage. Having completed my purchases, I took the train the next morning in the pouring rain for Kabalo, having a coach all by myself, except for a railroad official and his wife, who went part of the way, the coach being attached to a few cars with mail and express. The run to Kababo was made within the day, and I was 200 miles further on my journey.

NOTES FROM GRENADA COLLEGE.

By Dr. J. R. Countiss.

The recent commencement of Grenada College was one of the best in its history. Bishop Candler delivered a masterful sermon on "Christian Experience," and Dr. Henry Felgar Brooks made a charming address on commencement day. Sixteen young women received the B.A degree, and six special diplomas were awarded in the fine arts departments. The past session has been one of the most successful in my administration of seventeen years. We had the best trained and most efficient faculty we have ever employed, most of whom will be with us for the coming session. Young teachers are prone to change locations frequently and the turnover in the faculty is one of the serious problems in the small college. We find that those who have chosen teaching as a life work and who have taken their master's or doctor's degrees are less inclined to resign and seek other locations.

Grenada College was, I believe, the first church college for women in Mississippi to abolish its academy, and also the first to employ a full time professor of Christian education. It has never had adequate financial support, though it has received ten times as much money during my administration as in all former years. Nevertheless, it has fought its way to approval as a standard four-year college whose graduates receive life-time professional license to teach and whose credits are accepted at full value by leading colleges and universities. Several of its graduates have taken the M.A degree with honor in one session.

The pride of the institution has always been in its products. Every graduate for more than twenty years has been a professed Christian, and most of them have borne the name creditably. It is a small college and it is a matter of honor here that each student shall be given a chance to develop the best that is in her. Of the 227 graduates during my administration, all have been Christians; 214 of them have become salaried women, 200 of these having been teachers. One hundred and twenty of them have married, and one has been divorced. Only one has died. Four have gone as foreign missionaries, six have been professors in colleges, two are the wives of ministers, three are full time employes in church work. A number are officials in the Woman's Missionary Society and in the Conference Epworth League. All things considered, I feel that the school has rendered a large service to our young women, and that its work was never so much needed as in a day when so many young girls seem content to become parasites on society rather than diligent workers in home and church and State. Indeed, we are very proud of our record as evidenced by the lives of the young women who have been trained here.

With all the increase in prices, the cost of board and tuition here has been raised but fifty per cent since 1910, though the salaries of teachers have increased by more than 200 per cent, and their number has doubled. Our endowment is being increased, and it is our hope to bring it fully up to the required standard within the year. The church should run a first-class college, or none at all. A church college should educate and it should be soundly and thoroughly Christian.

THE STEPS OF GROWTH IN PETER'S LIFE.

By Mrs. Courtney Badon.

"Follow me and I will make you fishers of men." Christ was looking for men to be leaders and teachers for him when his time was ended on earth. Simon Peter was good timber; although rough, cross-grained and twisted, he was hard wood. You can not do much with poor lumber, but the Master could fashion Peter into a good piece of useful furniture. Peter, rough, ignorant, uncouth and "fishy" as he was, was called from this fishing to preach the gospel. Most of us would have passed him by, but Jesus knew there was good in him, and fashioned him into one of the greatest of his apostles.

Peter was weak and we should not judge him too severely because of his fall, lest we condemn ourselves, for we are weak as long as the carnal nature dwells within us. Peter was honest when he declared he would never deny his Lord. He did not intend to lie, but the temptation was both sudden and severe. Peter's fall was bad, but it taught him a lesson that did him good the remainder of his life. He realized his weakness.

It was good for Peter that he walked on the sea, but it was better that he sank into the waves; it was needful for him to learn his own weakness and the Master's strength. He, left alone, could not walk on the sea, but the Master could lead him across the waves during a storm. Thus Peter learned the power of Jesus. We can be strong only when our weakness is tied on to the Master's strength. Had not Peter learned that lesson, he would have been a failure forever.

When Jesus died on the cross, Peter's faith died in his heart, but the empty tomb and the risen Lord brought his faith back to life and it was stronger than if it had never died, for there was about it a resurrection glory, a glory that made him one with the Master.

On Mount Olivet's top, when the Master went back home for his eternal crowning, you can imagine what feelings must have surged through Peter's soul as he stood gazing up into heaven, while his Lord was being taken up in the cloud. He felt that his Master was gone forever. But amid his grief a heavenly voice spoke unto his astonished ears, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Peter's faith is strengthened more and he is growing stronger and stronger.

Pentecost was the greatest day Peter had seen. It brought power to him and the other disciples who tarried in the upper room. It took away Peter's worldly love and his cowardice and made him more than conqueror through the indwelling Spirit of God. In the pentecostal baptism with the Holy Ghost and with fire, we find the source of Peter's courage and power. We must look to that hour to understand his miracles, and his waiting before Pentecost. Peter reminds one of an electric globe, minus the current. Pentecost turned on the current and Peter became a bright and a shining light. He no longer wished for earthly profit, but counted it a joy to preach the gospel of his Lord and even to suffer shame for his name's sake.

THOUGHTS ABOUT JESUS.

By Frances Minor Crymes.

How have we thought of Jesus? As a sad, sorrowful, broken-spirited man, with drooping shoulders, lacking capacity for pleasure, without enjoyment of social converse? As a preachy young man, seizing every opportunity for a sermon, throwing cold water upon every flame of joy he chanced to see?

This conception of him is unfair. While he was ever ready to speak a word in season, he enjoyed greatly many pleasures. For instance, he compares himself and his disciples to a bridal party in the honeymoon period. Yet in the days of persecution he remained joyful; for he says: "Rejoice in that day, and leap for joy."

St. Paul tells us that the fruits of the Spirit are love, joy, peace; Jesus, being spirit-made flesh, was the embodiment of those fruits.

When Levi made a great feast in his own house, to which Jesus was bidden, the scribes and Pharisees commented on his association with sinners, the crowd being a mixed one, not all being believers in Jesus. His answer to the Pharisees was wonderful: "Can you expect a bridal party to fast?"

To the man sick of the palsy he said: "Be of good cheer, thy sins are forgiven." Again he said: "I have overcome the world—be of good cheer." He appeared to Paul in prison, bidding him be cheerful. It should be easy for us to think of him as carrying an atmosphere of bright cheer around with him, for he scattered the gospel, which literally means "good news."

The marriage at Cana of Galilee, to which Jesus, his mother and his disciples were invited, was evidently what is now termed a big affair. His attendance shows that he was in harmony with happiness, and had no intention of wet-blanketing the natural exuberance of youth; that he would smile with the rest at the gayety manifest on such a joyful occasion. He contributed to the success of the entertainment, wearing no look of scorn, or reproof, nor of indifference; certainly not an expression of top-lofty aloofness.

He had good health, he bestowed health as one of life's greatest blessings, thus filling the hearts of the healed ones with joy.

We recall that in the parable of the lost sheep, the shepherd laid the sheep, when he had found it, upon his shoulders, rejoicing; so, the Good Shepherd rejoices when a sinner repents.

In the same connection we read the story of the woman who lost a piece of money, and, finding it after diligent search, called her friends to rejoice with her. Jesus knew the high rapture of recovering after diligent effort, that which had been lost; the joy he counted above all others was in service. As for us, how many chances for joy we let go by us every day, heedlessly.

In the parable of the treasure hidden in a field, we read that the man who found it, in his joy, sold all he had that he might buy the field. Jesus left the glories of heaven that he might buy this world, giving as purchase price his very life.

The faithful servant who used his master's money rightly, making it bring in good interest, was told to enter into the joy of his master. He had made his master's interest his own, so he shared his master's joy.

In one of the Beatitudes we are enjoined to rejoice in persecution, and to be exceedingly glad, for that we share the reward of the prophets persecuted in the past.

Let us not think pityingly of Jesus because he lacked what we think necessary for earthly happiness; his sources of joy were boundless. The knowledge that he was doing the will of his Father was sufficient to cheer him at the hours when black despair would have crushed one not divine.

He tells his disciples, toward the end of his earthly life, that he has opened his heart to them that their joy might be full, for though he was soon to leave them, they were to see, shining through all the darkness, the bright light of hope, and that they were to keep in mind that he had promised to return, making them rejoice with a rapture that nothing could take away.

The story of Jesus—his life, his death, the testimony of his followers as recorded in our New Testament, is the most joyful book ever written; beginning with the joyful chanting of angels, bidding the whole world rejoice, joy runs through it like a scarlet thread, for throughout is to be felt the ripening of the promise—"I will come again!"

FOR A BETTER ADVOCATE SERVICE.

By Rev. Marlin H. McCormack, Jr.

It may be recalled that some weeks ago the acting editor of this paper called attention to the embarrassing fact that the paper is now facing a crisis in its history, and stated that unless something was done immediately to relieve the situation it would be impracticable to continue the publication after the Annual Conference sessions. This condition is obviously the result of a growing indifference on the part of the patrons and readers toward the Advocate. The success of any paper depends primarily upon the interest of the readers, and without it failure is inevitable.

Why is it that our people are losing interest in our great paper? There must be some definite reasons for such cold indifference. It behooves us to make an effort to ascertain the causes of trouble and try to remedy them.

It is foreign to our intention to assume the attitude of a critic of the methods employed by those in charge to publish the Advocate, but it seems that under the prevailing conditions a few suggestions might be in order. They should at least provoke thought on the matter, and when one gets the Methodists of three Conferences to thinking on a matter something will happen.

In the first place we would say that our Advocate in its present form is not a paper that will appeal to or interest the rank and file (who are the bone and sinew) of our church. Why? Because they are not interested in full page controversies, week after week, by two extremists on a subject that has been hackeneyed for over twenty years. They are not interested in two pages of editorials each week on subjects that have been more than sufficiently discussed by the daily newspapers (and we say this with all due respect to our editor, who is pronouncedly among the very best in the church). What people want is a Conference organ filled each week with the current news of the church work. They want to know what the various charges are doing in a spiritual, social, evangelical, and financial way. (And unike some of us preachers, they are intensely interested in the smaller circuits.)

They would have the news of the Sunday School Board work taken out of the obituary column and placed in the headlines on the front pages. They want to know about the work of the Epworth League, the Woman's Missionary Society, and the other departments of our church work. They want to know what is being done with their missionary and benevolence money. They want to hear often from the firing lines of the church militant. They are not interested in the silly evolution laws passed by those little groups of politicans that we call legislatures, nor do they care about insignificant resolutions passed by our General Boards. They read our Conference papers for the purpose of getting the news of the work of the kingdom of our Lord. And while we are not in favor of catering to the whims of any one, it is our judgment that the wishes of the majority of the readers of the Advocate deserve careful attention; and if we wish the success of the paper to continue as it has in the years gone by, we must see that they receive it.

If our editors will cull out about ninety-nine per cent of the irksome arguments of our polemical brethren, and give us a spicy, newsy, simplified Conference organ, subscriptions will begin to flood the office and renewals will not be so long past due as some of ours are. This would mean a blessing for the paper and the churches to which it goes.

The people want a paper that they can call "our paper" instead of "the preacher's paper," and when they get it it will be an easy matter to get them to include it in the budget of the church.

These things have been said not as a criticism but as a humble suggestion from one who is sincerely interested in the success of the Advocate and one who loves the editor and believes him to be the best man for the place that we have. All in favor say, Aye!

BISHOP CANDLER'S LIFE OF GALLOWAY.

By Rev. A. M. Shaw.

In writing the life of Bishop Charles Betts Galloway, Bishop Warren A. Candler has rendered the church a distinguished service, the value of which is beyond computation. It will be a pity if any Methodist—particularly any Methodist preacher—fails to read this book. No book that I have read this year has inspired me so much as this, and I cannot too strongly commend it to others.

A character so massive and superb as that of Galloway, a life so rich and fine and sincere, a career so active, and crowned with such wealth of achievement, furnishes such ample and varied biographical materials as would greatly embarrass a writer less skillful than Bishop Candler. But his well-known genius for judging men, his intimate knowledge of this particular man, and a rare talent for selecting what is most vital and pertinent, have enabled him to produce a life-like portrait of the man, a luminous history of a radiant life, and an informing chronicle of history-making movements to the prosecution of which one of Methodism's most consummate ecclesiastical statesmen devoted his versatile gifts and matchless energies for forty years. Only a few of the outstanding excellencies of the work can be particularly indicated here.

1. Bishop Galloway is made to live again. His early years, his student life, his zeal as an itinerant, his heroism and marked success as a pastor, are briefly and lucidly set forth. His fidelity to his work in sharing the lot of his people when yellow fever took him so near to death's door that his obituary was published—which he was privileged afterwards to read—is an inspiring detail. His rapid rise, his Christlike modesty and his unspoiled simplicity when fame had so richly garlanded his young brow, give us a picture of the man which is both glowing and just. Whether Bishop Candler himself tells the story, or lets Bishop Galloway and other writers tell it, the man, the editor, the administrator, and the preacher, stand out in life-like lines in this book.

As we read, the gentleness, poise, and dispatch of the great presiding officer come back; we hear again the resonant, full-toned voice of the mighty prophet, whom Dr. J. M. Buckley called "the most brilliant orator, the greatest preacher, and the best-loved man on this planet!"—and we see the majestic form, the eagle eye, and the cavalry dash of the crusader-bishop.

2. The book calls attention to the writings of Bishop Galloway, which are too much neglected now. He who reads the specimens here preserved will want to read all he can get of what Bishop Galloway wrote.

Like the epistles of Paul, many of the letters of the Bishop were by-products of his strenuous missionary labors. From these letters and the author's story, the reader gets informing glimpses of the earlier stages of missionary work among the Indians, the Mexicans, and in the South American republics and the Orient; and an inspiring vision of conditions on the fields, and the program of world evangelism.

3. The book would be worth more than it costs if one read it only for the account of Bishop Galloway's connection with the temperance and prohibition movement. How his mighty challenge needs to be sounded again from pulpit and platform to-day!

Especially has Bishop Candler brought us into his debt by reproducing the full text of Bishop Galloway's controversy with Hon. Jefferson Davis on the prohibition question. The man whom Galloway greatly loved and honored, who had been one of the giants of the United States Senate, and the gifted and honored leader of the Confederacy, was no match for the brilliant bishop of Southern Methodism. On the Bishop's side especially the discussion is a fine example of high-toned, ethical controversy. No offensive personalities; no impugning of motives; unreserved reliance upon the force of truth.

4. Many other special excellencies of this work could be mentioned; but perhaps its greatest merit lies in the fact that it shows us the man, Charles Betts Galloway. His brilliancy and versatility were doubtless, in a measure, native gifts. But his earnest consecration, his unswerving loyalty to Christ and his church, his strenuous application, immense industry, and consequent vast achievements, were results of his deep convictions and his resolute will.

I place this volume along with Wesley's Journal and numerous other "books of power," as a volume to be read partly for light, partly for entertainment, but mainly for inspiration.

A PREACHERS' INSTITUTE AND ELSE.

By Rev. E. S. Lewis, P. E.

Recently we have had two splendid institutes for the pastors of the Grenada District. The first one was held at Durant, where seven of the eleven pastors in that territory were present. One brother wrote he "clear forgot it." The pastors in the northern end of the district met in First Church, Water Valley. Eight pastors and some others were in attendance. Brother Dorman was with us at Water Valley and Brother Augustus at Durant. At each place the ladies were kind enough to give us a bountiful dinner. At Durant we were entertained in the home of Dr. R. C. Elmore, and at Water Valley we had dinner at the Masonic Temple, furnished by the good women of First Church. Both days were pleasant and profitable.

The work of the kingdom is making fair headway in this territory. Plans for a great church building are now being considered by the Grenada people. Revival meetings are being held at several points in the district, and many others are planned. The pastors are helping one another, a plan which in most cases will save the local church a good deal of money and will lay on the heart of the membership a larger sense of responsibility for the revival. There is a better state of feeling throughout our territory than heretofore. There are fewer divisions, less suspicion and a larger appreciation of the place of the church in the life of the community. On a number of our charges, particularly the circuits, the salary of the pastors is considerably ahead of this time last year. Three or four good charges on circuits are planning for more time next year, which is a mighty good sign.

We will have two, maybe three, for admission on trial. Our pastors are raising some money to assist in the repair of the churches and parsonages in the flooded territory, and some of the men are doing their utmost for the Genada College Special. At the recent conference on the Abbeville circuit we raised the entire amount which was lacking to make the full quota. If this can be done on the Abbeville charge it can be done almost anywhere else; that is, if you have proper conditions to begin with. Selah.

Our people have a growing sense of appreciation of the leadership of the great church to which we belong. The work of the Woman's Missionary Society was never more wisely directed and more richly blessed of the Lord. The young people's work is growing, and there are more adults in our Sunday schools than ever before. Here and there may be found a little detachment who want something else and do not like anything that is going on. There are a few bellicose brethren here an there, but they don't amount to much. One editor of a little nondescript paper is quoted as saying that we have some "gosling bishops" in the church. That is ugly, to say nothing of the general rules of the church which forbid "uncharitable or unprofitable conversation, particularly speaking evil of magistrates or ministers." In another quarter there are those who are hurting to have a joint debate with somebodly. Really, we might do well to call everything off and stop long enough to let the fellows who are hurting to have a joint debate get it out of their system. They won't be much account till they do.

Conference time will soon be here and we must get busy.

A SWARM OF B'S.

By C. G. Shutt.

I am sending you a swarm of bees. I do not know who hived them (or collected them), but if you will allow them to settle for a week on your Children's Page in the Advocate, I am sure some boy or girl will profit thereby. You will notice that they are all working bees, not a single drone among them.

"B hopeful, B cheerful, B happy, B kind,
B busy of body, B modest of mind,
B earnest, B fruitful, B firm and B fair;
Of all Miss B havior B sure to B ware.

B brave to B ware of the sins that B set;
B sure that one sin will another B get.
B just and B generous, B honest, B wise,
B mindful of time and B certain it flies.

A GOOD MAN NEVER DIES.

By Lion K. Jung, Chief of the X-Ray Department, Severance Union Medical College, Seoul, Korea.

Charles Morris, whom many knew as "the ideal missionary," died in Korea a few months ago. This unique and affecting tribute comes from the Korean Mission Field for March, 1927:

It was an unusual winter morning—raining so hard that it reminded me of the Oregon weather—when I entered the office building of the Severance Hospital, not long ago. Just outside of my office door I met a doctor of whom I asked about the patient in Room No. 6. He replied: "When I saw him this morning he whispered to me, "Doctor, we have been friends for a long time. Thirty years ago I met you in New York when you were there on your first furlough from Korea, and that year I left the States, and ever since I have been in this field. Now I think I am ready to leave this world, but I have no regret—I am perfectly happy—and I know there is a place waiting for me.' Isn't that a wonderful spirit?" the doctor went on. "Yes, he is a wonderful man—we all love him, and all the Koreans who know him do, too."

Within an hour I went to see the patient in Room No. 6. As I entered the room, the first thing that attracted my attention, and inspired me most, was the same smile which I saw on his gaunt face the day before when he was brought into my office for an X-Ray examination. I can never forget that smile as long as I live. It was a smile of loving kindness, sympathy and satisfaction.

His life was sinking. He knew he could not last very long. Right after the X-Ray examination, he went through an abdominal operation and they found inoperable carcinoma. The surgeon solemnly predicted that he could not live more than a few days. When I stood by his bed I noticed that his mental condition was exceptionally clear and sympathetic. His cool, clammy hands held in mine, he whispered, concerning my wife, "How's Alice? I was awfully sorry to hear her baby died."

Suddenly I wondered at what he was saying, for I could not understand how a man could be that way. He was perfectly happy and said he had no regret over his own death, but he showed great sympathy and sorrow over another's misfortune. At last, when I told him good-bye, he whispered again, "Please give my love to Alice—we all love her so much." The Alice whom he and his fellow-missionaries love so much is a unique example of the missionary "product." Since her childhood, Alice was raised and educated in the mission schools, and she is now teaching in her Alma Mater.

Now I can clearly understand why the missionary was so happy and had no regret on his dying bed. The aim of his thirty years' labor was accomplished. There are many others like Alice in Korea to whom he brought new life in teaching them the great message of the gospel. Far away from home and friends, he spent thirty long years, the best part of his life, in a foreign land where the language and modes of life, the customs and everything are so different. Year after year he worked from station to station, and traveled from village to village overcoming unbearable difficultis and hardships. sometimes he stopped over night in a filthy inn by the roadside with nothing but a hard clay floor to sleep on, and highly seasoned native food to eat. But everything was tolerable to him. Every day he journeyed tirelessly from morn till night and told the quaint people in the remote villages the wonderful message of Jesus Christ. But now they can hear him no more, for he has left this world.

A few days later an old man walked into my office and inquired for Morris Seunkyosa (missionary). When I told him of Mr. Morris' death, he said surprisedly, "Why—how can he die?" And when I asked what he meant, he replied, "Morris Seunkyosa told me a good man never dies." Then he related that once he was an inn-keeper by a roadside in the far north. And he confessed that he was a bad man, sold bad liquor to travelers and stole money from them who were staying at his inn. But once Morris Seunkyosa came to his inn to stop over night and told the inn-keeper the wonderful story of the Bible. The old man changed his life, and, ever since then, has been a good Christian. Then the old man conluded with tears in his eyes, "At least Morris Seunkyosa will never die in my heart."—Exchange.

A MOTHER'S PROPHECY.

An interesting story is told of the young manhood of George Washington, which shows clearly the kind of mettle that was in him. Washington was only about eighteen years of age at the time, and he was helping a party of surveyors in the midst of a great forest. One day, near a rushing stream of water, he heard the voice of a woman screaming in terror.

As soon as she saw Washington she cried out, "Oh, sir, will you not help me? My poor little boy has fallen into the water, and these men will not let me try to save him."

"It is of no use," said one of the men. "If she jumps into this rocky river she will be dashed to pieces in a moment. She cannot possibly save the child, and will only lose her own life."

But Washington scarcely waited to hear these words. He remembered the bright, sunny-haired little boy, whom he had often seen playing before a cabin nearby.

He took a rapid glance down the angry, rushing stream. Soon he saw the little boy's white dress, and without another moment's hesitation he threw off his coat and leaped into the roaring rapids.

"Thank God! He will save my boy," cried the mother. "Oh, my boy, my darling child!"

At times it would seem that he would surely be dashed to pieces on the sharp rocks.

Again the sharp current would bear him under till he would be lost to sight. Twice did the child disappear beneath the waters and rise again. On and on struggled the brave Washington, almost in reach of him, but unable to grasp him.

At last they neared the most dangerous part of the river, the falls themselves. The mother trembled with anxiety lest now the young man should give up his perilous task.

Not so; he only redoubled his efforts. Just before they reached the falls he seized the boy and held him up with his strong right arm.

What a shout of joy came from those who were watching from the shore!

But, alas! suddenly both man and boy disappeared over the falls. The mother ran forward in terror, but soon gave a glad cry as she saw them at the foot of the falls unharmed. The brave Washington was still holding her child and making his way toward the shore.

Washington, himself, was nearly exhausted when he finally reached the shore with the child, safe, though unconscious.

It is impossible to describe the gratitude of that mother when her child was at length sleeping sweetly in her arms.

"God will reward you," she said to Washington. "He will do great things for you in return for this day's work, and the blessings of thousands besides mine will be yours."

This mother's words were a true prophecy. In later years Washington plunged into the turbulent waves of war which threatened the very existence of the American colonies with the same heroic spirt that had led him to risk his life in saving the child. And God gave him victory. As a nation we will never know how much we owe to the indomitable courage and fidelity of George Washington.—Selected.

CHINESE ANIMALS.

Chinese horses are not numerous and are ill-fed and poorly cared for. They are of a poor and stunted breed. Donkeys are most commonly used for riding and drawing vehicles. Dromedaries are used as beasts of burden, particularly in the north. The slate-colored buffalo (water buffalo) is used in plowing and in the wet rice fields. The use of milk is a rare thing; Chinese do not like it. Cattle improvement has never been encouraged, consequently cows are scarce and of inferior variety. The pig has been given the best care of all the domestic animals and is given many privileges. We have made many importations of this stock into our own country. Chinese sheep and goats are large and are found in great numbers. There is really only one pure type of dog. It is about the size of our spaniel, pale yellow, reddish-brown, or even black; it has coarse bristly hair; the head is much like the head of a fox—peaked with sharp upright ears. This dog, frequently imported to America as the "Ming" or "Chow" dog, is a good watchdog, clever, and affectionate to its master only.

Domestic fowl are found in great numbers and, with mutton, form the staple meat food. The wild fowl are plentiful also. Immense flocks of wild geese and ducks are on the wing at all seasons. Sparrows, thrushes, larks, and swallows are common. Ring doves and quail are common; the latter birds are trained to fight. A crow peculiar to China has a white ring around its neck. The Chinese rat attains to an unusual size and is said to be eaten by some of the lowest orders of natives.

Birds of prey and scavangers are present in vast numbers. There are, besides, common insects, scorpions, lizards, and centipedes, also huge spiders that destroy some of the smaller birds. The butterflies are large and strikingly brilliant.—R. D. Van Hoosier, in Watchman-Examiner.

"TIME OUT."

Teacher—"Why do you always add up wrongly?"
Scholar—"I don't know."
Teacher—"Does any one help you?"
Scholar—"Yes, my father."
Teacher—"What is he?"
Scholar—"A waiter."

Bill—How are you coming on in the world?

Jake—Fine. I'm a stockholder in the street car company. How about you?

Bill—I'm interested in the street car company, too.

Jake—Howzat?

Bill—Well, I'm a strapholder.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

Louisiana Conference—Rev. W. W. Drake, D. D., Rev. R. H. Harper, D. D., Rev. S. J. Davies.

Mississippi Conference—Rev. J. T. Leggett, Rev. W. H. Saunders, Rev. J. E. Gray.

North Mississippi Conference—Rev. J. H. Felts, Rev. J. W. Dorman, Rev. L. M. Lipscomb.

DIRECTIONS.

All checks and money orders should be made payable to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Communications pertaining to subscriptions and other business matters should be addressed to the Manager, or to the New Orleans Christian Advocate. The Printed Label on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after four weeks, notify us, and we will make it right.

Communications intended for the Editor should be directed to him at 512 Camp Street. Correspondents will observe the following rules: 1. Write on only one side of the paper. 2. If you have a typewriter, by all means use it; otherwise use a good quality of black ink. 3. Leave a space of at least two inches at the top of the first page; leave a margin of at least one inch on the left-hand side of the page; do not crowd the words and the lines together. 4. Take special pains to write proper names correctly and legibly. 5. Use letter paper if you can get it—not note paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

Editorial

ONLY FOUR HUNDRED TO THE CONFERENCE AND FIFTY TO THE DISTRICT.

When we called attention recently to the fact that a crisis had been reached in the financial condition of the Conference organ we felt the Methodists of Louisiana and Mississippi should be informed about their own. A crisis has been reached, but the crisis will be passed. The Advocate will continue to carry on, as it has for three quarters of a century. As an entirely practicable way to meet the difficulty we are urging that the pastors in Louisiana and Mississippi secure only 1200 new subscriptions to the Advocate at the regular rate of $2 per year. Dr. Drake, of the Publishing Committee, in writing and approving the appeal for 1200 new subscriptions by September 1, suggests the fact that this will mean only four hundred to the Conference and only fifty to the District. And there are 198,000 Methodists in Louisiana and Mississippi! Surely this will be no impossible task.

As a pastor, the writer has often been reminded that the pastor is the "key to the situation." Well, this is true. The pastors in Louisiana and Mississippi can secure 1200 subscriptions by September 1 if they will. Two active pastors here in New Orleans, Rev. E. C. Gunn and Rev. L. W. Cain, are already sending in subscriptions, while Rev. M. S. Monk, of Monroe, pastor of one of our strongest churches in Louisiana, writes that he is working to secure a large list in his church.

Miss Frances Ulmer, the very capable editor of Epworth League notes of the Mississippi Conference, in this issue urges the Leaguers in her Conference to assist in securing subscriptions to the Advocate because of the valuable space given by the Advocate to the League notes of our three Conferences. This is gratifying and encouraging, as are the number of letters we have received recently from elderly people, writing that they have been readers of the Advocate since childhood and that it is ever a welcome visitor.

It would be a delicate matter for those who edit the Advocate to decline to publish suggestions and criticisms which "A Crisis Reached" has seemed to call forth, and we have given them space. It might not be seemly for us to take issue with these suggestions and criticisms. But we do dare to suggest that the quality of the Advocate, however valued, can not be the reason for a too small subscription list. The approximate 190,000 Methodists in Louisiana and Mississippi who do not read the Advocate can hardly know the quality of it, while the number of those who write to ask that their subscription be discontinued is negligible.

We shall not refuse criticism and we shall hope to profit by that which is constructive and helpful, but we can not at the present time "cash in" on criticisms in lieu of subscriptions. And, finally, though we do not wish to preach at you, Question 9, to be asked at the first Quarterly Conference, is this: "Who are appointed to assist the pastor in the circulation of our Christian literature?" And Question 16, to be asked at the third Quarterly Conference, is this: "What has been done by the pastor and his assistants to put our Christian literature into all the homes of this charge?" (Black-faced type ours.)

Brethren, this is the season of third Quarterly Conferences, and it is a good time to make a better answer than, "Nothing as yet," to Question 16, as it concerns your Christian Advocate.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. J. W. Price is now living at Wesson, Miss., and he requests that correspondents address him at that point.

Rev. J. B. Peters, pastor of First Church, New Orleans, plans to spend the month of August in Virginia, his native State.

On the evening of July 10, at the outdoor church service at Pascagoula, Miss., it was estimated that not less than 500 people were present. Rev. J. W. Sells is the pastor.

The presiding elders of the Louisiana Conference met on Wednesday of this week in Alexandria to discuss matters in reference to the relief of those who have suffered from the flood.

During the first six months of 1927 there were nine lynchings in the country, all the persons lynched being Negroes. There were two lynchings in Arkansas, one in Louisiana, four in Mississippi, one in Missouri and one in Texas.

Dr. A. S. Lutz, pastor at West Monroe, La., in his church calendar for July publishes a complete program for the month, a program which shows that this strong church is actively at work in all departments during the summer.

Rev. H. D. Suydam will assist Rev. W. A. Bailey in a revival next week at Duck Hill, Miss., and from August 24 to September 4 Brother Suydam will assist Brother Pearson in a meeting at Liberty.

The contract has been let for a two-story building of brick for the educational work of First Church of Alexandria, La., the cost to be about $115,000. Dr. Cleanth Brooks, formerly of the Memphis Conference, is in the third year of his pastorate at Alexandria.

Rev. L. E. Crooks, pastor at Standard, La., publishes an attractive monthly paper, The Methodist Visitor. In addition to the announcements of services and meetings of interest to his people, the paper contains articles helpful to the Christian life.

We learn from the bulletin of the Broad Street Church of Lake Charles, La., that one-half of the annual budget of the church had been raised at the end of the second quarter. Dr. R. H. Wynn, pastor, and his congregation are planning a splendid new house of worship in the near future.

The Shiloh camp meeting will begin on Saturday evening, Aug. 6, and continue through the following week, closing on the second Sunday of August, so we are advised by Rev. T. H. King, our pastor at Johns, Miss. Rev. J. A. Wells and Rev. W. W. Nelson will do the preaching.

Rev. Will Gordon, of Lyman, Miss., called at the Advocate office on Wednesday of last week. He reports having remodeled the church at Pass Christian at an expense of about a thousand dollars. He was in New Orleans contracting for pews for the church.

Brother S. Taylor Jackson, Pioneer, La., writes us that he was born in 1853 and that the Christian Advocate has been "an appreciated visitor" to his home since his early childhood. Such a letter is "an appreciated visitor" to the Advocate office; it assures us that the Advocate is worth while.

A Wesley Brotherhood was organized at Amory, Miss., where Rev. W. R. Lott is pastor, with thirty-seven charter members, at a banquet on the evening of July 7. Mr. W. C. Abrams was chosen president and Mr. J. C. Wax secretary-treasurer of the organization.

The daily vacation Bible school held at First Church, New Orleans, closed a few days ago after having run through a period of four weeks. Fifty-two were enrolled in this school and the results were good. Mrs. D. M. Campbell, a sister of our pastor at Denham Springs, La., Rev. R. L. Clayton, was in charge of the school.

Rev. W. H. Lewis, presiding elder of the Brookhaven District, Mississippi Conference, reports that E. W. Hope, recently pastor of the Bayou Pierre charge, has surrendered his credentials, and that Bishop Candler has authorized the appointment of Rev. C. C. Griffin to supply the work until Conference.

Mr. G. P. Cromer, a general song evangelist of the church, asks us to announce that he will be open to engagements from July 24 to August 14 and also during the month of September. He will be glad to get in touch with any pastor who may need a singer and young people's worker. The address of Brother Cromer is Stanford, Kentucky.

The Shreveport Methodist churches met in a joint third quarterly conference on the lawn of the presiding elder of the district, where they were hospitably received by Dr. and Mrs. Holmes. A picnic supper was served at 6:30 in the evening, a season of fellowship was enjoyed, and then the business of the conference was taken up.

Rev. Louis Hoffpauir, pastor at Lafayette, La., has received fifty-three into the church since Conference, so we learned from the organist of the church, Mrs. Robert Cunningham, who was visiting Mrs. R. H. Harper in New Orleans last week. Brother Hoffpauir has set the goal for the year at one hundred new members, and he seems likely to reach the goal.

Rev. George LaGrange, pastor of Bayou Blue charge, and Rev. C. J. Thibodeaux, pastor of Lafourche charge, both of the French Mission section of the New Orleans District, have been conducting a revival at Bayou Cane, near Houma. This is a promising field among the French people, and it is hoped that a church can be organized there.

A report from Mrs. T. L. McKnight, secretary of the daily vacation Bible school recently closed at Parker Memorial Church, New Orleans, shows that thirty-eight were enrolled, that the spirit of the school was excellent and that the co-operation of the pupils was all that could have been expected. The workers, Misses Ruth Barnes, Corinne Pfaff, Alma McNamara and Zoie Shallcross, deserve praise for their faithful efforts.

Rev. W. R. Lott, pastor at Amory, Miss., is preaching a series of Sunday night sermons on some of the parables of Jesus. On next Sunday evening the subject will be, Spiritual Towers, and thereafter on Sunday evenings through August 28 his subjects will be, Two Temple Visitors, Soda in Flour, Choice of Foundation, and A Significant Separation.

Brother P. M. Franklin, Oxford, Miss., sends us such an encouraging letter that we are including it in this column. "Dear Advocate: Am sending my renewal. Have been taking the Advocate about twenty-five years. I feel it has brought untold blessings and information to my home. I take six or seven other papers, but would give them all up before I would the Advocate. May its circulation continue to increase by the thousands. God bless the Advocate."

We are not sure that a notice appeared in our columns of the death of Mrs. T. S. Randle, widow of one of the members of the Louisiana Conference. Sister Randle died at San antonio, Tex., on Feb. 26, and was buried on Feb. 28 at Yoakum, Tex. Sister Randle was very faithful and active as an itinerant's wife; she loved the church and never seemed happier than when in the hour of worship, or in attendance upon the Annual Conference. She was formerly often present at our annual gathering, but of late years she had resided at Yoakum, Tex., too far away to attend.

Our pastor at Arcola, Miss., Rev. H. D. Suydam, is issuing a neat eight-page monthly paper devoted to the interests of his charge, composed of Arcola, Murphy, Lock and Darlove. We find in the July number that the churches at Murphy and Lock suffered great damage from the flood and that a considerable sum will be needed to repair them. Notwithstanding the great disaster which the people have suffered on this charge, they are carrying on. A revival meeting is being held at the present time at Murphy, with Rev. J. H. Holder doing the preaching.

Of the article in this issue entitled, "The Steps of Growth in Peter's Life," by Mrs. Courtney Badon, of Auburn, Miss., Mrs. B. D. Flowers, teacher in the Mars Hill Consolidated High School, of Smithdale, Miss., writes as follows: "The enclosed paper was presented in my Sunday school class yesterday by a consecrated, enthusiastic pupil of 82 years young, Sister Badon, of Adams church." This thoughtful article, concerning the ever interesting Peter, which we are giving to our readers, shows a mental and spiritual alertness at an advanced age. And it is interesting to note that the copy submitted was written in a remarkably firm and strong hand.

While any one familiar with the Greek would suspect that it was the linotype man who confused the word "orthos," in Rev. J. L. Decell's recent article in the Advocate, we desire to state that Brother Decell's copy has "orthos." We regret that the Advocate has it "arthos," and also spells "Manicheans" without an i. While the assistant editor studied Greek we fear he is like one of his classmates who, when questioned concerning a certain problem dependent upon something already studied in geometry the year before, replied, "Why, Professor, I finished geometry last year." We fear that in like fashion the assistant editor finished Greek some years ago, so that he failed to notice that "orthos" had changed as "arthos."

Among the many disasters [illegible] brought to Greenville, Miss., was its interference with the "Big Brother" paper, which had been coming regularly to our desk from the Big Brother class of our church at Greenville. But Mr. Waddy West reports through a letter to the office that the class is resuming its work, after being forced for six weeks to abandon their meetings on account of the flood water being in their classrooms. Writing on July 15, he says: "We have planned for next Sunday 'American Legion Day,' and these boys promise to give us the largest attendance our class has ever had. Our former attendance record is 249; our classroom will only hold 250, but they say we will have to make room for 300 next Sunday."

Recently Dr. Goodrich, pastor of First Church, Shreveport, conducted the funeral services for a deceased Chinaman. About a dozen Chinese friends attended the funeral and they requested that the service should conform to Christian custom. On Wednesday evening following the funeral six or seven of these Chinese friends attended prayer meeting, and after service the brother of the deceased expressed a desire to make a thank offering to the church for the pastor's kindness in conducting the funeral. He said he understood the pastor himself expected no remuneration for the service rendered but asked that he be allowed to make a thank offering for the work of the church. Whereupon the gift—$50—was accepted and the giver, Mr. Joe Do Chow, was assured that it would be applied on the missionary activities of the church.

Rev. C. J. Thibodeaux has recently closed a good meeting of two weeks' duration at Griffin, a rural community a few miles below Lockport, La., on Bayou Lafourche. This is the community made familiar to the readers of the Advocate by Dr. W. W. Drake, formerly presiding elder of the New Orleans District, as the community where a church and a cemetery are urgently needed to make the work of Methodism permanent. Dr. Drake placed $1,000, which he had raised toward the enterprise, in the hands of his successor, but until the present time it has been impossisble to secure a piece of property in that section for the building of a Methodist church. But now we are glad to report that Brother Thibodeaux has found a property which can likely be purchased, and we hope soon to have the church and cemetery so long planned for this community.

ANNUITY BONDS

SAFETY is the first requisite of an investment with a view to regular income.

ANNUITY BONDS have advantage over other investments in that they provide an income that cannot shrink.

YOU may in your lifetime without loss of income or any risk pay over to the Board of Missions, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the amount that you had intended leaving in your will to be used in sending the Gospel "to every creature."

YOU may avoid taxes, various fees or any litigation in connection with your benevolent gifts which sometimes greatly reduce one's bequest. Annuity Bonds enable one to be the executor of his own will.

ALL THIS—and at the same time you enjoy during your lifetime an income that cannot shrink—an income that stands between you and want.

TO EPWORTH LEAGUERS OF MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

A Chance for Service.

Last week it was our privilege to visit the office of this paper and talk with the acting editor, Rev. R. H. Harper. He told us that the Advocate needed money and it would take twelve hundred subscriptions to furnish the needed amount. Dividing the number among the three Conferences that this paper serves, gives four hundred subscriptions for each Conference. As the Advocate has so splendidly served the Epworth Leagues, especially of our Conference, we think that it is time for the Leagues to serve the Advocate. So, we appeal to the Leaguers of our splendid Conference to give of their time in securing the needed four hundred subscriptions. Leaguers, let's put this splendid paper in the home of every member of our church.

Your editor,

FRANCES ULMER.

AN URGENT APPEAL.

The following appeal in the form of this resolution was passed at the recent session of the Greenville District Conference in its meeting at Cleveland. The pastors have suffered severe cuts in salaries, and in most cases have had little if anything paid on their salaries since the flood came in April. Church property has been greatly damaged, and owing to the great loss sustained by the people they are not able to carry on. They must be helped, and the many thousands of loyal Methodist people in North Mississippi must help.

The Appeal.

Be it resolved, by the Greenville District Conference now in session at Cleveland, that an appeal be made to the effect that an offering be taken in each church throughout the North Mississippi Conference to help relieve the distress of our pastors and their families and the rehabilitation of our property in the flooded area; this offering to be sent at once to S. V. Wall, treasurer, Cleveland, Miss. That this appeal be given publication by sending it to the New Orleans Christian Advocate and to the presiding elders of the North Mississippi Conference.

JUST STUFF.

By Rusticus.

About the article in a recent Advocate by Hon. T. M. Evans, "Concerning Modernism," etc., he stated what he himself admitted were facts, and what some of us have reason to believe is true, and suggested that there be a separation, and also saying that certain editorial and secretarial places were filled by these destructive Modernists. He suggested that some writer had said that these things existed, but offered no remedy; while I believe that separation is the solution, and that it will finally come—but who is to do the separating, and how are we to tell who is to fall on either side? I am just asking these questions, for I have no suggestion to offer as to a means to know who are orthodox and those who are not.

Now Mr. Evans must have some knowledge of who is modern, and who is orthodox from his viewpoint, but he did not tell us in which colleges they are, nor editors of which papers, nor secretary of what, and if he were to tell us who they are they would have a great many witnesses (all good and true) who would be able to swear that they are true followers of whom? John Wesley? Luther? Calvin? Billy Sunday? Harry Emerson Fosdick? Confucius? Mrs. McPherson? Jesus Christ? Is it not true that everybody that does not believe just like me is not orthodox?

Now I believe that Mr. Evans is absolutely right, that there must needs be a sifting process, for there seems to me to be put over some things by somebody that are undermining the faith of our folks, and when our young preachers read such books as are being distributed, that deny the very existence of almost everything that a man might base something upon, and sit at the feet of men in our schools who deny the miracles, and the virgin birth, and believe the monkey theory, and I do not know just what it is, but we are facing the fact that some of our young preachers are strong on organization and social service, etc., but lack the real power of God in their ministry.

Now I do not want Mr. Evans to appoint me on a committee to tell these fellows where to head in, for I have my ideas, and mine might not be in line with his. I believe the time is coming soon when, unless we call a halt along some of these lines, our own beloved Southern Methodist Church will be rent asunder; and, if some of the stuff that I hear and hear about is real Methodist interpretation of the Bible, then I say God speed the day. A leading member of one of the leading churches in Louisiana told me that her pastor, who has been there for several years, had not at one time mentioned such a thing as repentance, but it was, "Think of the beautiful and you will be beautiful within;" she added that if some one should be so moved as to repent of his sins under his preaching that he would get down on his knees and ask his forgiveness for disturbing his mental equilibrium. God pity such a church! And yet we seem to have them all over this country, filled by men who must not be crying aloud the old gospel truths. I heard a prayer last night by a prominent doctor, an M. D., and in it he said, "Oh, Lord, may this church get religion." That prayer needs to be offered for all the churches and a goodly number of the preachers.

As to the Advocate campaign, if we could get the folks to take the paper, if we could get them to renew after they once get it, if we could get some more articles like Mr. Evans' in the paper, if we could get more of our preachers, or presiding elders, or somebody, to put something in the paper that would be readable, (but anything that would cause any one to think or cause the least bit of controversy, seems to be excluded from the columns of the paper,) if we could get into it something of news about the churches and individuals of Louisiana and Mississippi, then we could have a large reading, and there should be no deficit. But when people do not find anything that interests them, it is mighty hard to get them to subscribe, as those of us have learned who have tried to get subscriptions and renewals. This is a plain statement and should probably be ruled out of the paper, but it is facts that we are facing. The best thing that I have seen in the Advocate was about the "Cultivation Period" some weeks ago. We have driven and driven and continue to drive, whether we call it that or not, until our folks have gotten suspicious of everything that sounds like a "Cultivation Period."

Why do we not collect more Conference collections? Christian Education, etc.? Do our church schools give any more than the State? Some of our young people come from some of them who are not as true to the church and as active as those who come from the others. Their faith is gone. What is the use in paying good money to produce such results? Ask the people.

Mr. Editor: Tell some of our Epworth League (would-be) leaders to cut out the stuff at the assemblies and institutes that bring our young people back without any reverence for God's house, "by the singing of those songs that do not tend to the glory of God," in the church auditorium, and some of them anywhere, for example, "Ol' McDonal' had a farm," and so on, ad nauseam.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

ZONE MEETING AT WESLEY.

Zone No. 1, of the Ruston District, held the second quarterly meeting at Wesley church, May 20, the leader, Mrs. W. A. McKenzie, of Homer, presiding. The attendance of forty-five was good, considering the rainy weather.

Mrs. Hefley, of Homer, led the devotional, choosing as her subject, "The Importance of Prayer," and giving many reasons why we should pray without ceasing, having the Master himself as our gretest example.

Mrs. Kent, of Homer, spoke on the subject, "The Woman's Missionary Society Speaks Out Loud." Mrs. Bridges, of Athens, spoke on "The Gibson Auxiliary," and the report of the district meeting at Arcadia was given by Mrs. Pittman, of Athens.

Other features of the program included a duet by two young ladies of Wesley, a reading by Miss Watson, a playlet given by the ladies of Wesley, and reports from auxiliary presidents. Mrs. Moreland of Homer, Mrs. Garrett of Wesley, and Miss Pittman of Athens, made reports showing substantial gains in the woman's work in their respective churches.

Brother Dring, of Athens, pronounced the benediction at the close of the meeting, and after the meeting all present enjoyed the delightful lunch prepared by the ladies of the Wesley church.

MRS. J. H. PITTMAN,
Secretary.

ZONE MEETING AT JACKSON.

The third zone meeting of the Baton Rouge District was held in the Methodist church in Jackson, La., on May 26, Mrs. I. G. Gueydan presiding. There were four members present from St. Francisville, nine from Clinton, four from Ethel, five from Baton Rouge, and fifteen from Jackson; also nine Presbyterians, and four Baptists, making a total of fifty.

Rev. J. H. Bowden, pastor at Jackson, led the opening prayer and then made a talk upon the book of Jonah; Mrs. C. S. Miller sang the solo, "The Silent Voice," with Mrs. U. T. Broach at the piano; a recognition service was then held, with Mrs. Wadsworth present from St. Francisville, Mrs. Irwin from Clinton, Mrs. Hawsey from Ethel, and Mrs. Kit Dudley from Jackson; reports showing a new Missionary Society organized at Ethel; a silver tea, for the benefit of the Belle Bennett Memorial, given at St. Francisville; and other items of interest from other points in the zone; talk by Mrs. Rust, State Superintendent of Supplies; topics of missionary news read by different members; violin solo, "A Dream of Paradise," by Mrs. I. G. Gueydan, with Mrs. U. T. Broach at the piano; vocal solo, "In the Garden," by Mrs. M. U. Hubbs; "A Study of Our Common Interests and Problems," by Mrs. T. D. Dawson, and a report by Mrs. J. H. Chambers, of Baton Rouge, upon the annual meeting and the Council, were the chief features of the program.

A collection was taken for the rural worker. The following were elected officers for the ensuing year: Mrs. E. W. Chaney, of Clinton, president; Mrs. M. U. Hubbs, of Clinton, secretary. Rev. J. H. Bowden installed the officers, and after the benediction all enjoyed refreshments and good fellowship.

MRS. C. S. MILLER, Secretary.

BATON ROUGE DISTRICT MEETING.

Baton Rouge District meeting was held at Ponchatoula, June 21, 1927, the new District Secretary, Mrs. L. A. Sims, presiding.

Reports from the presidents of auxiliaries show that the work is progressing. In accordance with Mrs. C. A. Loyd's request, many are striving to make every member of the auxiliary a member of Mission and Bible study. We are waking up to the importance of the educational program of the work. The financial work seems to be in good condition. Some relief has been sent to flood-sufferers.

The reports of zone leaders were encouraging. The work that has been done in the zones has been an inspiration to the old auxiliaries, as well as a help to the younger ones. Also many new auxiliaries have been formed as a pleasing result.

We were glad to have with us the following guests: Mrs. C. F. Niebergall, State president; Deaconess Ora Hooper, rural worker for Baton Rouge District; Mrs. R. H. Harper, from New Orleans; our presiding elder, Rev. H. N. Brown; Rev. W. R. Harvell, Hammond; Rev. B. M. Andrews, Amite, and Rev. A. J. Coburn, Ponchatoula.

Rev. H. N. Brown conducted the Quiet Hour, using Psalm 73.

After a delicious plate luncheon, served by the Ponchatoula Auxiliary, the meeting was called to order in afternoon session by Mrs. Sims.

Rev. W. R. Harvell conducted the devotional, reading the narrative of the Syrophenician woman, and talking thereon.

Deaconess Ora Hooper spoke very enthusiastically of her work, which she is to begin in September.

We are always glad to hear of any girl who has given herself for life service, especially of our Emma Burris, of Franklinton, who entered Scarritt this spring.

A vocal duet by Mrs. Ball and Mrs. Cooper, of Franklinton, with Miss Ozie Taylor, of Hammond, at the piano, delighted the audience.

Mrs. C. S. Stewart, of Amite, in a very forceful way, presented the Jubilee. Objective goals given are: 1. High spiritual life; 2. appreciation of our inheritance; 3. extension work; 4. valuation of our work; 5. thank offering.

A helpful report on the Junior Epworth was given by Mrs. Chambers, of Baton Rouge.

Mrs. C. B. Johnson, of Hammond, presented the Korean products, which are made of the finest Egyptian cotton. She wore a dress of the cloth, and made a strong appeal to each auxiliary to dress themselves up also, thereby helping young men of Korea through school.

In Mrs. Harper's message on Young People's work, she said the trouble was the movement is adult minded and the youth won't accept it. We have been concerned too much with organization, and not enough with the education, service, and social problems.

The question brought before us by Mrs. Plummer, of Bogalusa, in the round table discussion was: "Why Do We Not Have More Members of the Church, Members of the Missionary Society?" There can be no better answer than those given: Lack of love for Christ, lack of consecration, lack of knowledge, and lack of responsibility felt on the part of the members of the auxiliaries.

We were plased to have with us Mrs. Niebergall, who gave us a number of helpful talks, also answered questions, and offered many helpful suggestions.

Greetings of love and appreciation were sent to Mrs. H. N. Brown, former District Secretary, for her good and faithful work among us.

MRS. J. COBURN,
Recording Secretary.

SARDIS DISTRICT MEETING.

The first day's session of the District Conference of the Missionary Societies of the Sardis District, was held in Longtown, May 31. This was the first time we had gone to the strictly rural section, six churches coming together to entertain the conference, and it was inspiring to see the cars rolling in and delegates and visitors gather together to plan for the Mas-

COULD NOT PUT ON HER SHOES

Mrs. Daugherty Was so Weak

In a little town of the middle West, as a discouraged woman. For four months she had been in such poor health that she could not stoop to put on her own shoes. Unable to do her work, unable to go out of doors or enjoy a friendly chat with her neighbors, life seemed dark indeed to Mrs. Daugherty.

Then one day, a booklet was left at r front door. Idly she turned the ges. Soon she was reading with ickened interest. The little bo[o]klet is filled with letters from wom[e]n in nditions similar to hers who had und better health by taking Lydia E. nkham's Vegetable Compound.

"I began taking the Vegetable Compound," Mrs. Daugherty writes, "and ter I took the third bottle, I found re- f. I am on my eleventh bottle and don't have that trouble any more, d feel like a different woman. I commend the Vegetable Compound to eryone I see who has trouble like ne, and you can use these facts as estimonial. Sunday School

By Rev. C. D. Atkinson.

On July 6 and 7 I attended the Alexandria District Conference at Bunkie. Only one pastor was reported waterbound. Pastor Knight, of Melville, said he had a recent photograph showing two girls swimming in front of his church. The note of faith and progress was sounded in all reports of the pastors and committees. Many encouraging items of Sunday school work were reported. Rev. H. L. Johns reported having given sixty credits in his Daily Vacation Bible School, and he is hard at work on his Standard Training School plans for Sept. 18-23. Three members of his faculty have been secured, Mrs. Templeton and Dean Smith being among them.

Rev. W. E. Anding, of Provencal, announces a Sunday school rally for his four churches, to be held on the fourth Sunday at Shady Grove church. While at Bunkie we noticed the Sunday school Bulletin gave the attendance last Sunday as 150, and by the side of this bulletin there was a large chart, "Program of Work," with a progressive seal on it. Mrs. W. M. Mantiply is superintendent of this school.

The following district officers were elected: District Secretary, Prof. Henry Rickey; Elementary Superintendent, Miss Flavilla Bradt; Adolescent Superintendent, Mrs. J. M. Burnett; associate, Miss Mary Lyles; Adult Superintendent, Mr. Bowden; Missions, Rev. B. D. Boddie.

Rev. A. S. J. Neill, pastor at Glenmora, is very hopeful in regard to the work of his Sunday school.

The date for the Alexandria Standard Training School was set for Sept. 4-9, and plans are under way to make it a most successful school.

Brother Vaughan, of the Ruston Orphanage, was present at the recent conference, and stated that the Easter offering was the largest ever sent in, and stated to the writer that most of this offering came through the Sunday schools.

The Cokesbury School at Clay, under the direction of Rev. Claude H. Mayo, opens Friday, and Brother Mayo writes the office that the books have arrived and that everything is in readiness for the "guests." We trust that many "guests" will attend and the school will be a huge success.

Brother J. Q. Long, of Colfax, writes as follows: "Herewith enclosing check for the sum of $13.79, being the collection taken in the Colfax Methodist Sunday school on the fourth Sunday in each month, for several months past." The check has been forwarded to Brother A. M. Mayo.

We are in receipt of an interesting letter from Prof. J. E. Stephens, of Millsaps College at Jackson, who has been assisting us in our Standard Training School work this year. He writes from Northwestern University, where he is doing summer school work, having his family with him. They are enjoying the cool weather, and, Prof. Stephens tells us, are wearing overcoats.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Miss Virginia Thomas, for some time Conference Elementary Superintendent, severed her connection with the Conference Board July 1. Her pure life, her trained mind, her consuming passion to see the kingdom of God come, made a large contribution to the work over the entire Conference. She will live long in the hearts of all who love and work with little children. During the summer she will teach in the Daily Vacation Church School at Lake Junaluska. In September she will enter Northwestern University to further pursue her studies in religious education. We wish for her an ever enlarging usefulness in her chosen field of labor.

All inquiries pertaining to the work in the elementary department should be addressed to me until further notice. We need at least three women in each district who will look after and supervise the work near them.

We are holding from four to five Cokesbury schools each week. Sharp and Hammontree "set the woods on fire" in the Tyro circuit. The revival fires are still burning and will likely continued for a long time to come. The community around Free Springs has been wonderfully stirred. When one door is closed against us the Lord opens two others. The Spirit is leading us. Brother Mohler is supervising and looking after the work in a great way.

This week I am keeping Brother W. P. Bailey at McCool. The church he has been instrumental in building is a gem, it is the prettiest thing in the town. We have a class of ten and it is possible that six will do the work for credit. We have but few out of whom leaders can be made. The few Methodists and Presbyterians are working together. The Baptists outnumber the other two churches three to one. Brother Bailey and his wife have done the impossible here, and they are working whole-heartedly to build the kingdom in these parts according to the Methodist standards. Nothing less than the faith of Christ will bring the final victory, steadfast, unwavering, persevering faith that works miracles. I rejoice in the privilege of sharing the labors with these excellent young people.

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 83

Old Folks Need a Mild Laxative —Not a "Physic"

Most men and women past fifty must give to the bowels some occasional help, else they suffer from constipation. One might as well refuse to aid weak eyes with glasses as to neglect a gentle aid to weak bowels.

Is your present laxative, in whatever form, promoting natural bowel "regularity"—or must you purge and "physic" every day or two to avoid sick headache, dizziness, biliousness, colds, or sour, gassy stomach?

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin helps to establish natural, regular bowel movement even for those chronically constipated. It never gripes, sickens or upsets the system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless and pleasant to take.

Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine or write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, for a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE and just see for yourself.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

By Miss Frances Ulmer.

General Epworth League Board Adopted Program for Year 1927-28. Emphasis to Be Placed Upon Department of Spiritual Work.

At a meeting of the General Epworth League Board in April a program was adopted in which the emphasis was placed upon the Department of Spirtual Work. We quote from the Epworth Era:

"The emphasis this year is to be upon the Department of Spiritual Work, and, beginning with July, the activities in the Epworth League and the devotional meetings and the calendar events will emanate from and cluster around the beautiful climax of the gospel according to St. Luke—'The Emmaus Way' (Luke 24:13-35). The general purposes of this program are to discover the possibilities of Christian comradeship; to open the Bible as a book for life; to recognize the living Christ in every day living; to live a radiant life in comradeship with Christ; to share this comradeship with others. All this will be comprehended under the general theme, 'The Comrades of the Emmaus Way.' In July we will have prayer hikes and joint young people's meetings with other young people's societies, thus striving to develop the uttermost comradeship. In August we shall have a team month in devotional meetings, with open air services and emphasis upon the Devotional Bible Readings. In September Bible Study will be emphasized, and the half hour preceding the remainder of the devotional program will be used in the study of a specially prepared book on the Gospel according to St. Luke, entitled, 'The Most Beautiful Book Ever Written.'"

At another time we will discuss more fully the program arranged by the Board, but we wanted here to call your attention to the theme of the programs so that you may carefully study your Era and make your plans for the best devoitonal meetings in the history of your League. Begin now.

PICNIC AT TISDALE'S BRIDGE.

(Reported by M. C. Jordan.)

Monday, July 4, the Senior Leaguers, Hi Leaguers and Epworth Juniors from Hattiesburg, Petal, Richton, Moselle, Ellisville and Laurel, Miss., motored to "Tisdale's Bridge," about five miles from Moselle, for a picnic. The weather was fine for such a gathering, and every one had a wonderful time. The idea of this union picnic was born at the Assembly when Laurel and Hattiesburg failed to get to play a game of baseball together. So, the game was "the thing," which took place before noon at the picnic. Much to Hattiesburg's regret the final score was 13 to 10 in favor of the Laurelites; but never mind, there will be another assembly and another baseball game.

At the close of the ball game there was "pink" lemonade galore. And, just about the time that the committee thought the young people's thirst (and perhaps appetites) were satisfied dinner was announced. There was certainly a fine table spread, and from the way that the eatables disappeared you could not tell that any one had had any lemonade.

After lunch, Rev. Mr. Vaughan, from Ellisville, took all who wanted to play tennis, and went about two miles and spent the afternoon in tennis matches. The others of the crowd rested, played ball, went home, or fought battles with watermelons. Most of the crowd left about 2 or 2:30. In fact by 2:45 every one except the Hattiesburgians had departed. They were the first to arrive and the last to leave.

I think that it was the opinion of every one present that it would be well to repeat the performance next year.

The chaperones were Rev. and Mrs. B. L. Sutherland, Laurel; Rev. and Mrs. Vaughn, Ellisville, and Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Weems, Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Harrell, Hattiesburg. There were between 175 and 200 present.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

I am writing to inform you that beginning with the September number of the Epworth Era we shall have a rich literary feast for our young people in Dr. S. A. Steels autobiography. For many years Dr. Steel has been one of the most prominent ministers in the Southern Methodist Church. He is known all over the United States and Canada as a man of supreme eloquence, as a minister of deep consecration and loyalties, a gentleman of the old South and yet a man abreast of the times in thinking and in writing. Dr. Steel was the first editor of the Era, coming to that position in 1894.

Dr. Steel was a boy during the war between the States. His early experiences link the new South to the old. He came from a minister's home under the old conditions and has himself been the head of a Methodist itinerant's home under the new. The story is full of interest—human interest. If it were told by almost anybody it would engage the reader's attention; but told in the brilliant, fascinating narrative style of Dr. Steel, it is compelling.

Will you not co-operate with your Epworth Era agent and the other officers of your Conference Epworth League in endeavoring to secure as large a number of subscriptions to the Epworth Era as possible in order that our Epworthians may have this fascinating story of a Southern boy's emergence into a great life of usefulness?

These subscriptions, if individual, will be at regular rate of $1.25 a year. In clubs of five or more to one address, $1 each, per year. But it is worth while to remember in making your appeal that the Epworth Era, beginning with the October number, will be enlarged to a sixty-four page magazine, and will in every respect be well worth more than the subscription price. Order blanks are sent, and I trust that under the impulse of a strong appeal at the Assembly we may boost Era circulation very considerably.

ter's work. We were met with great kindness and hospitality by the pastor, Rev. A. C. Johnson, and his co-workers.

The morning session opened by devotional, conducted by the pastor-host. The faithful services of the organist, Miss Goodwin, assisted by Brother Johnson's three splendid boys, with their different musical instruments, added much to the pleasure of the day. Organization was completed and committees appointed. Miss Embrey, of Pleasant Grove church, extended a hearty welcome in behalf of the six churches composing the Longtown circuit, and Mrs. T. T. O'Bryant, of Batesville, responded.

The secretary's report indicated an increase in societies, Standards of Efficiency and in numbers attaining the Honor Roll. The increase in the budget was 22 per cent over the previous year, in addition to the splendid offering to Bennett Memorial. Next came the delegates' reports. It has never been my privilege to see such a splendid representation at a district meeting, only one of the societies in that section of the district failed to have a delegate.

The superintendents of young people and children were given a few minutes to stress the importance of their work.

Mrs. J. B. Harrison, of Charleston, gave a reading, "Hester Armstrong Learns to Tithe," which taught a useful lesson. Rev. and Mrs. George Baker were requested to come to the front and meet their old friends. He was formerly pastor of Longtown circuit. Revs. T. M. Bradley, J. M. Bradley, S. B. Potts, A. T. Clanton, and W. C. Calceron, and Miss Ford, were introduced. Mrs. L. C. Short urged us to vote for men who would stand for the enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment. Mrs. T. M. Clark's message to the individual auxiliary was very instructive.

The last number on the morning's program was "Tasks Before Us," by Rev. J. M. Bradley.

After benediction by Rev. T. M. Bradley, we adjourned to the tables, which were placed out under the shade trees, and enjoyed lunch.

The afternoon session began with devotions, conducted by Mrs. J. B. Davis, of Sledge, assisted by Mrs. Ruffian Sledge. Mrs. Ralph Jenning's vocal number was very much enjoyed. Six zone leaders reported. Mrs. Annie Redding gave the results of the Bennett Memorial campaign.

Mrs. Starr brought "gleanings" from the Annual Conference. With a short report of the Council meeting from Mrs. Clark the afternoon program was closed by Brother Johnson leading the congregation in singing "On Jordan's Stormy Banks We Stand," and the benediction by Rev. T. M. Bradley.

Session of the Second Day.

Wednesday morning, June 1, we made our way through a pouring rain to Olive Branch to attend the second day of the Sardis District conference. Being the first on the ground, we wondered if we were in the right place, but on further investigation saw the tables prepared out under the old oak trees. This convinced us they were expecting us, and in a few minutes the pastor, Rev. Mr. Boyles, drove up, and then a few more from time to time, until "the clouds rolled by," and the crowd began to gather in earnest, though regretted that it was then too late for Pleasant Hill and Mount Pleasant circuits and perhaps others to have representatives.

Brother Boyles gave the devotionals for morning service. A most cordial welcome was extended in behalf of the Olive Branch auxiliary, which was responded to by Mrs. Grady Johnson, of Hernando.

The meeting was called to order, the secretary and committees appointed. There are some splendid auxiliaries in this end of the district, as was evidenced by the good reports. Again the Young People and Juniors were not expected to be represented, but all of the superintendents in attendance were requested to give a report of their work. Mrs. C. L. Graham announced the rally day which was to be held in Coldwater June 15, and extended a most cordial invitation to all of the Young People and Juniors (with their superintendents) to attend. Too much stress cannot be placed on children's societies. Until there is an organization for them in every church in Southern Methodism we are not doing our duty.

Revs. Sharp, Boyles, Davenport, Bailey and Bradley were introduced, also Mrs. Berkley (mother of Ruby Berkley) and Mrs. Price, secretary of Aberdeen District.

Mrs. T. M. Clark gave the closing number of the morning session with a condensed report of the Council at Shreveport, La.

After benediction by Rev. J. M. Bradley, we adjourned for the bountiful noonday lunch, which was served in the church; the grounds were still too damp to use the tables prepared out under the shade of the trees.

Mrs. Price led with devotional for the afternoon session. Mrs. Annie Redding dismissed the Bennett Memorial with a few happy words, stating the goal had been reached and the Woman's Missionary Society of the Southern Methodist church now owned a beautiful building in the city of Nashville, named in memory of our sainted leader, Miss Belle H. Bennett. Mrs. C. L. Graham gave an inspirational report from the last Annual Conference, which had met at Starkville.

Three zone leaders were present, which completed the roster of nine, composing the Sardis District.

Resolutions of appreciation are always in order for Olive Branch, which obeys the Scriptural injunction (to be given to hospitality) in the spirit as well as the letter.

Rev. J. M. Bradley gave the last number on the program, "Tasks Ahead," and the benediction was pronounced by Dr. Sharp.

MRS. R. M. SHORT,
Secretary Sardis District.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETING, SARDIS DISTRICT.

The district meeting of the Young People's and Children's Missionary Societies of the Sardis District was held at Coldwater, June 15, 1927. When the delegates and visitors arrived they found the church beautifully decorated with ferns and fragrant flowers, and a most cordial welcome awaiting them. The morning session was given over to the Children's Work. Mrs. Ferrell, from Batesville, assisted by one of her Juniors, opened with devotionals. Organization was effected, committees named and secretary appointed.

We regretted very much the absence of Mrs. Flora Hooper, the new Conference Superintendent of the Children's Department, but were forunate in having present throughout the day Miss Julia Lake Stevens, Council Superintendent for the Young People's Work.

Two former district secretaries were

The report from each society was good, showing that much earnest work had been done during the past year. As each delegate reported, the representatives from the society were asked to stand, and Sardis led with twenty, the largest number in attendance. Senatobia won the Conference pennant for the greatest number of points attained.

An angel passed in its upward flight
With a seed of love and truth and light
And said, "O, where can this seed be sown
Where 'twill yield most fruit when fully grown?
To whom can this precious seed be given
That it will bear most fruit for earth and heaven?"
The Saviour heard, and said with a smile,
"Place it in the hand of a little child."

After an interesting program, the closing number on the morning's session was given by Miss Stevens, which was very instructive as well as entertaining, explaining the Chinese customs and habits, and the benediction was pronounced by Dr. Sharp.

A most delicious lunch was served at the noon hour, served to about one hundred and twenty-five people, at the church. After lunch there was an hour of social intercourse. Then the business of the day was resumed, and Mrs. W. H. Ratliff, the new Conference Superintendent of the Young People's Work, presided over the afternoon session.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S RALLY.

The Young People of Sardis District enjoyed a rally at Coldwater on June 15. About fifty Young People were present. The Juniors had the morning program, after which the Coldwater ladies served a delicious lunch to over 100 people.

The Young People represented every Young People's Missionary Society in the district except two, who were rained out.

The devotional was given by Mrs. Ratliff; the entire program was in the capable hands of the Young People. Their reports show good work, and the program was interesting and inspiring. We were fortunate in having Miss Julia Stevens, Council Superintendent of Young People. Her message was the source of much inspiration and help.

A separate meeting for Juniors and Young People is a new feature carried out in only two of our districts this year. It is a success, we hope every district will adopt it next year.

We want to thank the Coldwater ladies for their hospitality, and the pastors of that district who gave the Young People the encouragement of their presence and help.

MRS. W. H. RATLIFF,
Conference Superintendent of Young People.

MISS WU LEAVES FOR COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY.

Miss Wei Lein Wu, of Soochow, China, after graduating in the McTyeire School, of Shanghai, China, came to Whitworth College and entered the sophomore class in the fall of 1924. She became a diligent student in the regular literary course, also taking Home Economics. Her grades were always splendid and she was the first honor student in the senior class graduating May 31, 1927.

Miss Wu belongs to a cultured class in China. She and her mother, who is a widow, are Christians. She is naturally timid, but through the persitent efforts of her many friends in this country, she has been induced during her three years in Mississippi to make numerous talks, chiefly before gatherings of Girl Reserves. She has always acquitted herself so modestly and creditably that she had a great many more calls for addresses than she could answer.

Miss Wu left Brookhaven July 3 for the Teachers College, Columbia University, in New York, where within the next year she hopes to make a Master's degree. It is her pronounced purpose, after she has finished her course at the Columbia University, to return to China and engage in service for the church and the cause of Christianity. In her quiet way she has, during the past three years, been an interesting figure on the Whitworth campus, and will be missed.

H. G. HAWKINS.
Brookhaven, Miss.

Calomel Attacks the Bones and Deadens the Bowels

Never take calomel. It is mercury—a dangerous drug. If you are constipated, bilious, sick, headachy, stomach sour, meals don't taste right, hot days make you drowsy and lazy, take Dodson's Liver Tone. That's all you need.

Calomel salivates. That's why you have to take salts the next day to get it out of your system so it will not eat your bones. You have to stay at home a day to recuperate from the shock it gives you. No wonder Dodson's Liver Tone is so popular. All you do is take a spoonful at night. By morning you are cleaned out good, head is clear, you feel as light as a feather; you are not sick, no danger of salivation, and you can eat anything you want. Think of that.

Get the big bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone from your nearest store. They all have it. Keep it in the house so you will have it handy to take nights before going to bed.

NOTES FROM CEDAR GROVE.

By Rev. S. L. Riggs, Pastor.

The Cedar Grove charge, which is now the south end of Shreveport, La., has been making some progress along all lines this year. I found about 300 members on the roll after Conference. We have made progress along material lines. About $500 worth of improvements have been put on parsonage, mostly including new garage. Our ladies are doing fine work. The Sunday school has grown. Last Sunday the attendance was 187, the offering $9.25. We have three Leagues, which are doing fine work. We have just closed a gracious tent revival. We began June 8, with local men of the city doing the preaching once a day until June 13, when Brother J. A. George, of Ripley, Miss., arrived. Then we had services twice a day and cottage prayer meetings in the afternoon. Brother George having been trained as a lawyer and having practiced law for some time, makes him a very close reasoner, very logical, and he preached a great gospel. He is free from all cranky habits. As a result of the meeting the church is greatly revived, and fifty-five new members added to our church and about ten to other churches. This makes eighty-two members added to this little church since Conference.

VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL AT KOSCIUSKO.

The Daily Vacation Bible School, which had been in progress at the First Methodist Church, Kosciusko, Miss., for the past two weeks, under the direction of Miss Elizabeth Stinson, of Nashville, as superintendent, closed Friday noon of last week with an exhibit of the work done and an example of the devotional exercises, memory verses and prayers taught the children. One hundrd and twelve children were enrolled, with a faculty of twelve.

The children were in three groups—children from 6 to 9, boys from 10 to 14, and girls from 10 to 14. The hours were from 9 to 12 each morning, with change of periods for Bible study, hand-work and play each fifteen to thirty minutes. The songs were taught the children by Mrs. C. A. Parks. Miss Ruth Hanks was at the piano, and Miss Catherine Campbell and Mrs. W. M. Harrell had charge of the hand-work sections.

Rev. W. W. Milligan, pastor of the Kosciusko circuit, had charge of the Bible hour and hand-work period for the boys' group. Miss Marie Davis taught Bible to the larger girls, and Mrs. R. P. Neblett assisted in the general working of the school, and told stories. Miss Bessie Spain served as secretatry, and Miss Jessie Hanks was her assistant. Miss Bessie Strahan was one of the assistants.

An offering was taken each morning, and the total amount, at the close of the school, was sent to the Orphans' Home at Jackson, as was also the larger part of the hand-work to the hospital rooms of the Orphans' Home. Miss Stinson is in Sardis, July 18-25, for another school of the same kind.

AN UNUSUAL EXPERIENCE.

By Rev. J. H. Bowden.

I had such an unusual experience some days ago that I thought it might be well to tell others about it.

I closed my meeting at Ethel, La., last Sunday, July 3, with eleven additions to the church, eight coming upon profession of faith. As nice as that was it was no unusual thing. The unordinary thing that happened was the conversion of a man who had been a member of the church for thirty-five years.

In all my experience I have never seen a happier man. His face was illuminated with a light that comes alone from the knowledge that Christ has forgiven our sins. In further proof of his inward change let me say this:

He sent me a note Tuesday to come out to see him. I went; we took a stroll into the woods and sat down under the shade of a tree. After conversing for a while he told me his troubles. Along with many other Methodists, who are not quite so honest, he made a pledge to the Centenary fund. "I realize that the salvation of my soul and my religious happiness depend upon my willingness to pay a debt I owe to God. It is going to hurt me to do this, for I am not making as much now as I was when I made the pledge, but here's my check." I unfolded it, and to my surprise found it was a check for $500.

Possibly, after all, a genuine revival is all we need in our church to make our financial columns balance.

LAUDERDALE AND ELECTRIC MILLS.

There has been no sudden upheaval on our charge; but we are making steady progress in different ways. We are reporting some accessions almost every quarter, congregations increase gradually at both points, we are meeting our regular assessments, have responded to all the special calls for help, and there is some real growth in grace. We have recently closed a great meeting at Lauderdale, in which our young brother, E. T. Crisler, of Port Gibson, led the singing and endeared himself to our people by his modest Christian demeanor and helpful service.

Our Epworth League is in better condition than heretofore, the Sunday school makes some progress, and the small Mlissionary Society is active and continues to do good work.

It looked for some months like matrimony among us was dull, but of late our people have gone to marrying. Mr. David Owen brought in an attractive bride, then Dr. M. L. McKinnon brought a most accomplished one, then Mr. J. R. Miller brought one from out Alabama of the right sort. A few days ago our fine Miss Connie Hall was married to a man who took her away, but not so far but she gets back to our church now and then. To-day, July 12, all our business houses closed for the marriage at church of Miss Leila Mae Naylor to Mr. Dudley Dean Culley. Both are teachers in the local school, and Miss Naylor is the daughter of our Mr. and Mrs. T. H. Naylor, of many activities in the church and community. I do not know how long we can keep up the recent rate. Anyhow, the quality is good so far.

ROLFE HUNT.

FROM THE COMMISSIONER OF BOARD OF FINANCE.

Last Sunday was spent with Brother W. B. Alworth at Hawkins Memorial Church, Meridian, Miss. He had planned the day as Superannuate Day by notifying each member of his church by writing them a postal card inviting them to the service. He had a program, and it was successfully carried out.

At 11 o'clock I preached to a full house, Brother Witt and wife, and Rev. C. M. Martin and wife, honored superannuates, were present. Brother Witt led in prayer at the beginning of the service, and Brother Martin at the close, and they talked with the Lord as we listened, and all hearts seemed to feel his presence. That night a program was splendidly presented, "The Fruits of His Labor;" each one carried out their part in a most splendid way; they had been trained by Mrs. Schambergh and Mrs. Crabtree. Any preacher putting on this program will surely reach the people and results will follow.

This pageant can be had from Dr. Luther Todd, St. Louis, Mo. At the close of this pageant the writer asked for this year's quota, and in a short time we had $365.65. Brother Alworth told me what he had done to prepare for this day, and said that he was sure that he would succeed in this undertaking. I believe what he has done, any preacher can do if he goes at it with determination and prayer.

We were entertained in the home of the good pastor and his faithful wife Sunday at dinner. Brother Witt and wife and Brother C. M. Martin and wife were also entertained. It was a splendid dinner; my how these preachers' wives can cook.

Brethren, let's face this matter and present the claims of the forgotten man to the people, and I believe that they will do the rest.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

Who seeks for heaven alone to save his soul
May keep the path but will not reach the goal,
While he who walks in love may wander far,
But God will bring him where the blessed are. —Van Dyke.

It is remarkable how much some congregations, and stewards in particular, require of the pastor and how little they propose themselves to give.

It is doubtful if red shoes, a green tie and a gray suit will add to a preacher's prestige and influence when he undertakes to enter the pulpit on a Sabbath morn weighed down with such impedimenta. While our ministers do not wear a distinctively clerical garb, it is doubtful if they should enter the pulpit clad like the average fan at a baseball game.

In some churches the third stanza of the hymn, any hymn, all hymns, grand hymns, sublime hymns, has as much chance as a mouse in a convention of cats. It is remarkable what liberties some choirs will take with the hymn the preacher announces. Without any warning whatsoever they jump from the second to the last stanza, often to the confusion of those who suppose that they should be singing the third stanza, and often with utter disregard of the wording of the hymn. It is abominable to handle our great hymns in any such fashion.

It would seem that the majority of people attend church to be entertained. If the music is not good and the preaching dull, they feel that the service is a failure. It never seems to occur to such people that they should go to church to worship. And some preachers seem to fall in with the idea that the worship feature of the service is of no consequence when they speak of everything that precedes their sermon as the "preliminaries." The sermon can be given the large place which should be accorded it without thus belittling the worship part of the service.

Some men were gambling one day, and a one-eyed man was found to be cheating. Finally another man took out his revolver and said: "Some one is cheating in this game. I am not going to name him, but if he don't stop, I'm going to shoot out his other eye." It has always been a puzzle that anyone should imagine that our educators did not mean evolution when they showed such great concern for the "proper teaching of science" in our schools. Whoever heard of our educators showing such concern lest laws should be passed that would interfere with the "proper teaching of science" before the discussion of evolution became acute? They did not call any names, 'tis true, but they left a tail sticking out of the discussion. If they meant evolution, they should have said evolution.

We doubt if our preachers of the present day can improve upon the Apostolic Benediction found in II Corinthians 13:14, and indicated for use, in our Order of Worship, at the close of every regular service. Yet various changes and additions are made in the Benediction. The pastor of a large and important church in one of our Conferences even dispensed with the Benediction entirely and dismissed the congregation with a wave of the hand and, "Good-bye, that's all." We also doubt if our preachers of the present day can improve upon our beautiful ritual for our several forms and ceremonies. Yet some of them seem to think they can improve upon it, or else they have no respect for it. For they cut out what they please, butcher the ritual, and race through what they do use in a mechanical way. The Discipline says that certain parts of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper may be omitted if the elder "be straitened for time" when they come to the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. They abbreviate the ritual and rush through this sacred service in a scandalous fashion. And the people do not like this, if the opinion of a number of persons, who have spoken to the writer along these lines, is of any value. But some men like to show their independence, even though they may absolutely mar a sacred service. It is doubtful if their independence will serve grammar and good English, much less order and dignity and piety.

The other day we fell to wondering why the cafeterias usually arrange the desserts so that one comes to them first when it would seem that desserts would logically come last. The only reason we can imagine is that a man is more likely to take a more substantial food after he has taken a dessert than he is likely to take a dessert after he has taken a more substantial food. After he has taken roast beef, etc., he may in some instances decide that he can do without a dessert, whereas, on the other hand, after he has taken a dessert he will feel that he ought to have at least a more substantial food. But, dear Timothy, do not be so concerned for the desserts of your discourse that you will serve them first and in quantities too large. Give the people, hungry for the Bread of Life, something substantial, and they can do without the dessert, without your learned reference to some prize topic or theory of the day—topic which may be the laughing stock of men on the morrow. It is the prime business of preachers to preach the gospel, not to discuss the issues of the day and entertain the people for about twenty minutes. And how can any man, who claims to be called of God to preach, stand in the pulpit and squander the time in getting off something which he would excuse as "non-essential," if he were questioned about it?

The Conferences are drawing near and our pastors and our people should be concerned about the Conference collections. If this matter is delayed, as in too many churches, it is uncertain that the full amount can be raised, as other things will be pressing and there will not be time sufficient to cultivate the people and awaken their interest and enthusiasm.

It was a fitting thing that in appreciation of Commander Byrd's carrying a Bible in the trophy box of the airplane "America" on its first flight to Europe, a large copy of a leather-bound Bible was presented to him on behalf of the American Bible Society by Mr. Gilbert Darlington. A gold-lettered inscription on the cover of the Bible reads: "Presented by the American Bible Society to Commander Richard E. Byrd and the crew of the 'America' who were the first to carry the Bible to Europe by air."

When Jesus heard of the death of John the Baptist in the gloomy castle of Herod beyond the Dead Sea, he retired to a sequestered spot on the northeastern shore of Galilee. But he could not be hid. If it be true that the world will make a beaten path to the door of the man who renders even a small service, it is also true that the man who renders a great service to his fellows can not be hid anywhere on earth. And the multitude from the cities of the section, journeying on foot around the northern end of the sea, found Jesus. What an amazing spectacle! Imagine here a small group from one section of a city joining another group from another section and moving along the main street and out into the highway leading from the city, and at intervals joined by great companies of people from other cities until at last five thousand men, besides women and children, came to Jesus on that notable day.

Never fear, then, my brother, that your talents will not be recognized and your worth not appreciated, if you render a real service to your fellows. If you are more concerned to serve your fellows than to have your talents recognized, the world will highly esteem you; if your interest is in the multitude and not in yourself, the multitude will be interested in you; if you have the mind of Christ, which is the mind to serve, the multitude will come to you.

COME HOME AND REST.

At sunset, when the rosy light was dying
Far down the pathway of the west,
I saw a lonely dove in silence flying,
To be at rest.

"Pilgrim of air," I cried, "could I but borrow
Thy wandering wings, thy freedom blest,
I'd fly away from every careful sorrow,
And find my rest."

But when the dusk a filmy veil was weaving,
Back came the dove to seek her nest
Deep in the forest where her mate was grieving—
There was true rest.

Peace, heart of mine! no longer sigh to wander;
Lose not thy life in fruitless quest,
There are no happy islands over yonder;
Come home and rest.

—Henry van Dyke.

THE NEED OF GREAT TEACHERS.

By Bishop Warren A. Candler.

The president of a leading university in the Northwest has published recently an article in which he speaks with wisdom upon several points relating to higher education.

Among other things he says:

"A renaissance of great teaching is one of the desperate needs of American universities. The greater the complexity and confusion of an era, the greater the need for teachers with a genius for guidance, interpretation, and stimulation. Better teachers on our faculties will mean braver spirits in our student bodies.

"A cynical and indecisive intellectualism is a blind alley into which modern education is in danger of heading. Our universities may allow the assembly of information to outstrip the achievement of insight. The passion to add to the sum total of human knowledge may dampen the ardor to add to the sum total of human wisdom. Great teaching is needed to lure us away from a cynical intellectualism into a creative humanism."

In these affirmations concerning the imperative need of great teachers in colleges and universities he asserts a conspicuous fact.

President Garfield was accustomed to say, "If Dr. Mark Hopkins were on one end of a log and a good student on the other end, there would be a university on that log." This was a strong way of saying that the teacher is the most important factor in an institution of learning. Good buildings are necessary, but they are not so necessary as good teachers.

Endowments with which to give teachers adequate support are required; but some of the greatest teachers have toiled successfully on small salaries. Indeed, the greatest teachers of the past put the least emphasis on their material support. Those who loved and admired them ought not to have allowed them to suffer; but they were willing to suffer in order to fulfill their high mission as educators.

In those days there were such men in the colleges and universities as Mark Hopkins, Noah Porter, James McCosh, Philip Schaff, Landon C. Garland, James A. Duncan, Andrew Lipscomb, James H. Carlisle, Atticus G. Haygood, and others.

No railing accusation is brought against the educators of to-day when it is said the great men mentioned above have now no successors equal to them.

It is but just to say that in both the legal profession and in legislative halls an equal decline in greatness of the men filling them is manifest. In the Congress of the United States we find no such men as James G. Blaine, George F. Edmunds, Thomas F. Bayard, Benjamin H. Hill, John T. Morgan, L. Q. C. Lamar, and other mighty statesmen of a former generation. The lawyers of the present time are not the men of such conspicuous ability as Daniel Webster, Reverdy Johnson, Roger B. Taney, Judah P. Benjamin, Rufus Choate, and other great men who lived somewhat later than these illustrious men of the legal profession.

In the Christian ministry also there seems to have been a decline in power. Fifty years ago one might have heard in New York sermons by Richard S. Storrs, Thomas Armitage, Theodore Cuyler, Charles F. Deems, John Hall, and Henry Ward Beecher. Can one find now in New York any man in the pulpit equal to these great preachers?

Again, in those days one might have heard in London Joseph Parker, Dean Stanley, Charles H. Spurgeon, Canon Liddon, and many others scarcely less notable in pulpit power. But there are no such men in London now.

All this must be said in giving just consideration to the decline in the matter of great teachers. But perhaps educational conditions which have prevailed for fifty years have been the cause, in part at least, of the decline of power in these learned professions. Immensely wealthy universities of the present time seem not to be as effective as the same institutions were in the days of their poverty and struggles. For example, Yale College, under the presidency of Dr. Timothy Dwight, produced more mighty men than Yale University produces with all its wealth to-day. Under the presidency of Dr. Dwight were educated Lyman Beecher, John C. Calhoun, and many other men of equal eminence, although Yale was then quite poor.

Princeton University in the days of its poverty brougth forth such men as James Madison, John Forsyth, Walter T. Colquit and Alfred Colquit, not to mention many others whose names might be given. Is Princeton University turning out such men to-day?

Is Harvard University accomplsihing as great results in the days of its opulence as it achieved in the first half of the nineteenth century and the latter part of the eighteenth century?

There is a feeling that there is something the matter with the colleges and universities of the United States, and especially that there is something wrong with those that are richest.

Perhaps they are depending too much on their money. And yet large funds have not destroyed the force of Oxford and Cambridge Universities in England. It cannot be that American institutions possess too much money, but it may be that they do not use to the best purpose the money which they have.

The mania for intercollegiate athletics has damaged students and hindered the work of teachers. No such mania exisits in any other land but our own. The American people make too much ado over the physical element in education, and they subordinate the higher things to this material element. Teachers cannot do the best work nor students achieve the highest success amid all the distractions arising from exciting sports—sports which often run into absolute immorality, such as gambling and drunkenness.

Excessive devotion to elective courses of study also has doubtless had a bad effect. When a youth enters college he is confessedly ignorant, and he is, therefore, seeking instruction. But under the elective system he is allowed to say what studies will cure him of his ignorance. He might as well be turned loose in a drug store in his infancy to select the drugs needful to cure him of measles or whooping cough. An immature student does not know what his mind needs, and if he is allowed to determine that matter for himself, his course of study is likely to run like the current of a spring branch, the way of least resistance. But the way of least resistance is the way of least effort, and the way of least effort is the way of least intellectual development. The old established collegiate course for the bachelor's degree, which course was common until the last half of the nineteenth century, was the best prescription ever compounded for developing the mind and strengthening the power to think.

We are now reaping the fruits of scholastic blunders, and the teachers in colleges and universities are the men who have been educated under the elective system in study and the athletic distractions in sports. This may account for the scarcity of great teachers.

But if the things mentioned explain the scarcity of great teachers, what shall we expect in the near future? Will not the men who are now coming forth from the colleges and universities under present conditions be even weaker men? And will there not be a continuous decline in the teaching profession unless there is a return to better methods of education?

At any rate, when a president of a great State university laments the lack of great teachers it behooves the educators of the country to pause and consider what he says.

The nation cannot get on without great teachers and great preachers. Nor can it attain the highest degree of blessedness in the absence of great statesmen.

The greatest problems which have ever confronted the American people for solution are now calling for solution, and yet there is lack of men of the highest ability to solve these pressing problems.

We have abundance of laws enacted annually by legislative novices, and we have an overabundant crop of lawyers to expound this plethora of legal enactments. But we have an increasing contempt for law and an alarming measure of lawlessness.

It is but just to say that in the realm of physical science there has not been such a decline as in the other fields to which reference has been made. This may suggest that we are putting too much emphasis on physical science and too little emphasis upon the higher things that belong to the world of the spirit. If this be so, we must prepare also for a withering of science and a weakening of scientists. The source of mental strength and high achievement is not in the physical, but in the spiritual, and from that high source all human greatness must take its rise.

Whether these reflections be well taken or not, it remains that we need the return of the day of great teachers.

LEWIS FAMILY REUNION.

At the Lewis family reunion held at Homesville, Miss., July 7, there were about seven hundred present. It was a great day that the descendants of Quinae Lewis, who was born in North Carolina in 1794, and who died in Homesville in 1881, and his beloved wife, Pattie, held in honor of their great Christian characters.

At this reunion the following address was made by Rev. J. Tillery Lewis, pastor of the First Methodist Church of Tupelo, Miss., and is published at the request of those who arranged for the reunion:

"We are on sacred ground, yea on holy ground. The prayers and labors of 'Uncle Quinae and Aunt Pattie' helped to found this church and community, and contributed much to the moral and spiritual growth of Mississippi and our beloved Southland during the last seventy-five years. Theirs was the old-time religion, and it's good enough for me.

"When Abraham took his westward journey from Babylon he no doubt went out in behalf of religious liberty. He desired a home in a place where he could worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience. From that day down to the present, or until the founding of the United States of America, humanity has gone westward chiefly in behalf of religious and political liberty. I doubt not but that our ancestors in Wales were with Cromwell in his fight against the king and parliament as they strove for religious and political liberty. Somewhere between 1670 and 1725 a man by the name of Lewis came to Virginia from Wales. Most of the Lewises who came to Virginia from Wales up to 1750 came from the same family. Most of the Lewises of our Southland came from one of these Lewis boys who came to Virginia prior to 1750. Other Lewises from Wales went to Massachusetts. Most, if not all, the Lewises in the United States of America are descendants of the Lewises of Virginia and Massachusetts. You will find Lewises in about all the States of the Union. A striking characteristic of the Lewis family, wherever they are found, is the fact that they are good law-abiding citizens who are great lovers of their women folks and their homes. Few Lewis men are known to divorce their wives. I do not know of any such in our family. Another characteristic is the fact that there are few money-grabbers among the Lewises. Most of the Lewises seem to place greater value upon the spiritual verities of life than do they upon the material wealth of life.

"The father of Quinae Lewis was Benjamine Lewis, who was born in Virginia about 1760. His parents died when he was quite young, and he was reared by a Mrs. Hill in Virginia. When the Revolutionary war broke out young Lewis was a lad, small of stature, about fourteen or fifteen years old. His foster-father, Mr. Hill, who was a wealthy planter of Virginia, was offered protection by the British army if he and his family would sign papers of allegiance to England. Mr. Hill promised to sign the papers of allegiance to England, but when he proposed to young Lewis that he sign the papers with them he refused. Mr. Hill threatened to force young Lewis to sign papers of allegiance to England and arranged to have the officer of the British army at his home on a certain night when young Lewis was to be forced to sign papers of allegiance to England. Young Lewis tied his clothes in a bundle, went to General Green's headquarters and proposed to enlist in the Continental army. General Green looked young Benjamine over and said to him: 'Why, young man, you are too young to fight, you are just a lad, go back home until you are large enough to become a soldier.' Young Benjamine then told the General his story, and said: "You will have to do something with me because I will not sign papers of allegiance to England, and I cannot go back home without acknowledging allegiance to Britain, and that I will not do.' He was given duties about the camp until he was enlisted as a private under General Green. He was with General Green in the battle of Eutaw Springs, S. C. In the battle of Eutaw Springs, or some other of the battles in which he fought, young Benjamine Lewis was left on the battle field and was slowly making his way in the direction in which General Green's army had gone when a small company of cavalrymen bore down upon him from the woods nearby and demanded of him as to which army he belonged. He did not know whether the cavalrymen were British or Colonist soldiers, and was puzzled as to what answer to make, when the Captain said to him rather roughly: 'Speak up, young man, and tell us quick whether you are with the British or with the Colonists.' Young Benjamine then said: 'Well, I do not know to which army you belong. If I tell you I am British, and you happen to belong to the Colonists, you will kill me. If I say I am with the Colonists, and you are British, you will kill me. So, if I must die, I will die with the truth on my lips. I belong to General Green's army and am trying to get to him.' The Captain smiled, pushed his foot out to young Lewis and said: 'Jump up behind me, young man, I am going right to General Green now.' In after years when telling this experience to his children and grandchildren he would always remark: 'It pays to tell the truth, it saved my life one time.' Possibly no one incident in the life of any man had more to do with developing love for truth in a family than did this incident in the life of Benjamine Lewis. My own father used to tell his children this incident, and always wind up by saying: 'Be truthful and honest at any and all cost. It is better to be truthful and honest, and die a poor man, than to falsify and be dishonest even though you should gain great wealth thereby.'

"Quinae Lewis, our grandfather, was in the war of 1812, and was at Charleston, S. C. Lemuel Lewis, son of Quinae, was in the Civil War, and belonged to Company A, Thirty-third Mississippi Regiment. Martin Lewis, son of Quinae, was in the Civil War and was killed near Mobile, Ala. James Lewis, another son of Quinae, went to the Civil War, but never came back. N. P. Reagan, grandson of Quinae Lewis, went to the war when only 16 years old, and served till the end in 1865. John A. Lewis, son of Lemuel Lewis, was in the Spanish American War, Company E, Second Louisiana Infantry. John H. McCormick, grandson to Quinae Lewis, was in the Spanish American War, and served in the Philippine Islands for many months. Edward McCormick was in the Spanish American War from Mississippi. N. E. Alford was in the Civil War from Louisiana. The following descendants of Quinae Lewis were in the World War: W. L. Brent, J. E. Brent, J. M. Brent, C. W. Alford, Roy A. Bullock. Judge J. M. Reagan, grandson to Quinae Lewis, of Texas, had three sons to cross the ocean, some in the infantry and one in the navy. Dr. Bryant Lewis, grandson to Quinae, was a surgeon in the world war. Dr. Bryant Lewis is now a medical missionary in Africa.

"We are all proud of the part that has been played by our family and ancestors in the founding and building up of this great United States of America. Some descendants of Benjamine Lewis, father to Quinae Lewis, have fought in every war waged by the United States of America. But it is not of the war record that we are most proud, nor of what we are inclined to boast. The peace-time record of our family is far above and beyond the war-time record, though the war-time record made by the family is not to be despised. 'Uncle Quinae and Aunt Pattie,' as our grandparents, were lovingly called, were more deeply concerned about advancing the kingdom of God upon earth than they were concerned either about making war or laying up earthly riches. They left to their posterity one of the greatest spiritual and moral inheritance that any family of earth ever fell heir to. For close on to fifty years there was a degree of home religion practiced by these two saints of God that is seldom equaled by human beings. Far and near 'Uncle Quinae and Aunt Pattie' were known for their deep spiritual piety, and whenever they went to a camp meeting, or a revival, souls were soon brought under conviction by their prayers and labors and sinners were converted. For almost one hundred years family prayers have been had in the homes of these two grand Christian characters, as their children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren have followed their custom of family prayer each day of the year. As a result of this fervent home religion that has been passed down from generation to generation, there have been, first and last, forty descedants of 'Uncle Quinae and Aunt Pattie' who have gone into the ministry. Possibly no other one family has done as much as has 'Uncle Quinae and Aunt Pattie's' descendants for the kingdom of God in Mississippi and our Southland. One thing that we may well be proud of regarding the life of our dear grandfather was the fact that he did not believe in slavery, and refused to go into the slave business. He did not think that kind of business right before God.

"I do not take much stock in tracing one's ancestry, but the older I get, the more I learn and the wiser I grow the more am I proud of the fact that I am the descendant of characters like 'Uncle Quinae and Aunt Pattie.' Of course this fact carries with it tremendous obligation. Jesus said: 'To whom much has been given, of him shall much be expected.' That being true, we the descendants of 'Uncle Quinae and Aunt Pattie' must study much, work hard and pray without ceasing to live up to God's expectations of us who are the descendants of such devoutly spiritual saints. God grant that we may help to hasten the day of the coming of our Lord!"

WHITWORTH COLLEGE NOTES.

By Dr. H. G. Hawkins.

The head of the Domestic Science Department of Whitworth College for next session is Miss Dorothy Warner, who during the past session taught Home Economics in St. Catherine's, an Episcopal school at Bolivar, Tenn. Miss Warner is a graduate of Hood College, Frederick, Md.

Miss Vallie Allsup, of Hattiesburg, Miss., has been elected director of Physical Education Department of Whitworth College for the coming session. Miss Allsup is a graduate of Whitworth College of the class of 1922, and since her graduation has taught Physical Education for two years in Grenada College and three years in the city schools of Dallas, Tex.

The teacher of Voice and Public School Music Methods, and director of Glee Club for next session is Miss Catherine Jane Jordan, of Guntersville, Ala. Miss Jordan is a graduate of Woman's College, of Montgomery, Ala., and has studied Voice in New England Conservatory of Boston, and elsewhere. She has had several years' experience as a teacher, and last session was in charge of the Voice work at Andrew College, Georgia.

The Whitworth State Normal School has been in session for five weeks, with an enrollment of 153. A part of this number are to remain four weeks longer, as they are taking college credit courses. Recently the student body, of whom all are teachers, passed resolutions expressing the utmost approval of the faculty they had, of kindnesses shown them by the citizens of Brookhaven and the pleasant surroundings which were found in Whitworth College, also asking a repetition of the normal and summer school here next year.

Rev. B. F. Jones, D.D., has been engaged the last several weeks collecting endowment pledges made in the city of Brookhaven. The trustees of the college urge that all who have made subscriptions throughout the Conference be prompt in making their payments. The income which the college gets from the interest upon its endowment is already of appreciable advantage. As soon as Whitworth has secured a large enough endowment it may resume the Senior College relation, but for the present the college is proposing to do only two years' work, but these two years are to be recognized as standard anywhere in the educational world.

One of the trustees of the college is quoted as follows: "The frank recognition of the circumstances and resolute dealing with them marks the beginning of a new era in the history of the college. From now on we will build on a foundation that will stand any superstructure, without fear of a tremor. We will promise nothing that we cannot perform, and our growth will be steady."

Young ladies who have finished two years' study at Whitworth College are entitled automatically to a Mississippi State two years' teachers license, which is renewable, and transferable to other States.

DID JACOB STEAL ESAU'S BLESSING?

By Rev. S. S. Bogan.

Inasmuch as many take it upon themselves to arraign Jacob before the bar of their own judgment and try him for stealing his brother's blessing, and, to the satisfaction of their own minds, convict him of theft, though the evidence and testimony in the case will not sustain the charge, nor justify the verdict, therefore, I ask the question, Did Jacob steal Esau's blessing?

I think those who answer this question in the affirmative do violence to the facts sustained by the testimony and evidence of the record.

Being an heir in the house of Abraham was peculiarly significant; for it carried in its possession, not only the inheritance of his father's estate and the legal bearer of the insignia of his father's house, but in this case he was also heir with his father of the blessing of promise made to Abraham, "In thee shall all the nations of the earth be blessed," by which he became the legal and chosen progenitor in his generation, of the coming one, the Christ.

Now, with Jacob it was not a matter of self-preferment, nor did he take this honor upon himself, but was chosen and called thereto of God before he was born: therefore, to say that Jacob stole his brother's birthright and its accruing blessing is contrary to the fact in the case, and a libel upon his good name.

The factual basis and legal right of Jacob's claim to the birthright and its accompanying blessing is a "Thus saith the Lord," which by its very nature and source supercedes all other claims and disqualifies all other claimants.

The Lord said to Rebekah while as yet her sons were not born, "The elder shall serve the younger." To the mind of the oriental this could mean but one thing, the conferring of the birthright upon the younger; therefore, in this case, a plain and unmistakable declaration of Jacob's right to the birthright and all that appertains to it.

Jacob was unfortunate in that circumstances conspired against him and for years denied him possession of his birthright and withheld from him the blessing of the heir. The diclaimer of his rights was the counter claim of his brother on the ground of seniority, and Isaac's purpose and action in the matter in recognizing and giving preference to Esau's claim solely upon the ground of seniority and tribal custom, while he ignored the "Thus saith the Lord" that preferred Jacob, and was on the eve of conveying unto Esau that which by right belonged to Jacob.

The word of the Lord spoken to their mother before they were born, "The elder shall serve the younger," clearly defined the proper disposition of the birthright, and indicated both the heir and the relative position of the brothers, and that of their posterity in the years to come; therefore, should have occasioned no quarrel, nor misunderstanding, when it came to recognize the heir and confer the blessing.

It is hard to view the action of Isaac as sincere and in harmony with his true convictions, for surely he could not have been ignorant of the "Thus saith the Lord," nor is it reasonable to suppose that Rebekah hid the word of the Lord from her husband, and told it only unto Jacob. Besides this Isaac must have known that Jacob possessed a double right to the birthright. It was his first of all and chiefly by the dispensation of God, and secondly, by purchase right of possession. Therefore, we must conclude, that Isaac was gravely at fault in sustaining Esau's claim and abetting his desire to defraud his brother of his blessing. It was this persistent purpose on the part of Isaac to recognize and prefer Esau at the risk of any hazard that forced the hand of Jacob and his mother in making good the right of the younger.

You will call to mind that years before, Jacob, while fully recognizing his inalienable right as heir, to avoid giving offense to his brother and settle the matter amicably, went so far as to concede Esau's tribal and natural right as first born, and took opportunity by the forelock and purchased outright the birthright of his brother, and the occasion and circumstances do not invalidate the transaction in the face of the fact that Esau made that sale legal and binding by the required oath. And Esau sat down and did eat and drink the price of his birthright and rose up and went his way. But in the meantime, he had forever forfeited any further claim and right to the birthright, so had no shadow of a claim upon the blessing; for it belonged to the heir—the possessor of the birthright.

It is not unlikely that Esau was insincere in this whole transaction and looked upon it as a ruse to meet a present need, though he had conformed to all the legal requirements of a valid transaction. But unfortunately for Esau, whatever his purposed design in the matter, a legal process of law takes no account of the motive and mental reservations of the parties to the transaction.

To say the least, Esau had bartered away his inheritance, and made to Jacob a legal bill of sale of his birthright, with all its benefits and rights and privileges, and by virtue of which he was now the legal heir. And this incident in the life of Esau is made the ground of the Apostle's exhortation to the Hebrews, when he says, "Lest there be any fornication or profane person, as Esau, who for one morsel of meat sold his birthright, for ye know how that afterward, when he would have inherited the blessing, he was rejected: for he found no place of repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears."

There you have the status of the whole affair in a nutshell. Esau forfeited the blessing when he sold the birthright, it belonged to Jacob by right of purchase possession; to say nothing of the "Thus saith the Lord," which was the chief ground of Jacob's claim.

The gift and calling of God in any given case is always predicated upon his foreknowledge of persons and events, before they are born, or come to pass.

The fault was not in Jacob, but in Esau. The Apoostle by the Holy Spirit does not say that Jacob stole his his brother's blessing, in that case, he might have proved his theft and recovered his blessing, but his failure to obtain the blessing must be accounted for upon the fact that God rejected him.

Esau took advantage of his father's natural weaknesses, his love for him and his paternal indulgence of his selfish whims, and thought to set at naught his brother's claim and repudiated his oath by making void Jacob's title to the birthright by procuring for himself the blessing. Thus, he was just in the act—had it been consummated—that would have created and confirmed that anomalous condition of affairs and actual fact, of a servant bearing rule over his master.

These are the more salient facts in the case that forced Jacob and his mother to resort to the use of strategy to circumvent the exercise of paternal indulgence in an act of authority that would have been calamitous in the extreme. But under prevailing circumstances this could be done only by anticipating the act of Esau, and beating him to it.

Of course we grant that the human element in this comedy is irregular, and on the face of it has the appearance of injustice to Esau, but close investigation of the facts in the case reveal that it was seeming and not apparent. Though from Esau's viewpoint it may have all the elements of reality. Yet the fact remains that Esau was more culpable than Jacob, and the evidence in the case fully dissipates the seeming innocence of Esau. He was to blame.

However, the culmination of the comedy, or near-tragedy, while grieviously disappointing to Esau's expectations and humbling to his pride, was in no sense unjust to him.

Jacob's offense was against his father, whom he deceived by personating Esau, his brother, by which ruse he wrung from his father his own blessing, though Isaac in giving it, thought to bless Esau.

Isaac was very much of a materialist. He was perfectly willing to proceed in so grave a matter upon the evidence of smell and touch, while he discredited the evidence of the voice. Yes, he was sure it was Jacob's voice, but then, the hands are the hands of Esau. Do I not feel them, and his smell is as the smell of the field, it is Esau, my first born. So he blessed him and was not the wiser until Esau really came, and then he realized what he had done, and trembled very exceedingly, and said, "Who? where is he that hath taken venison and brought it me, and I have eaten of all before thou camest, and have blessed him? Yea, and he shall be blessed."

Now, what was Jacob's sin? Isaac said it was sublety, and Esau called it supplanting. What do you call it? As for me, I deny that he is guilty as charged by those who say he stole his brother's blessing. He did nothing of the kind.

SIGNIFICANT FIGURES CONCERNING MONEY INVESTED IN CHURCH BUILDINGS.

By Mr. M. W. Brabham.

It appears to be a popular pastime for a good many writers of to-day to entertain the public with their opinions concerning the church, and particularly to point out the evidences which to them betoken an inevitable decay. These writings are cast in the form of fiction, essay, and so-called popular articles. The writer with the facile pen seems to be given a hearing if he can be destructive enough in his criticisms.

Some of the criticisms of the church appear to have a sincere ring to them, indicating that the writers are genuinely concerned, but most of them bear the brand of appeal and propaganda smacking of superficiality and insincerity. From all of these it is quite possible that the church has something to learn, and certainly nothing is to be gained by merely refusing to give them any consideration.

There are as many angles of approach by way of reply as there are angles of criticism. The purpose of this brief article is merely to point out one of the many evidences of an ever enlarging and increasing interest in the work of the church. It is not our purpose to give the facts concerning the ever expanding program of training, the constantly growing increase of time devoted to religious work or matters of that sort, as interesting as they are. A few figures relating to a single aspect of the case are given herewith with the thought that they may be of interest to friendly critics and to others who are willing to weigh them at face value. We refer to the amount of money invested in church buildings during the past ten or eleven years.

In 1916 the total valuation placed on all church buildings then in use was $1,600,000,000. These figures do not include the value of colleges, universities, hospitals and other enterprises owned and maintained by the churches. They refer to local buildings used for congregations alone. In 1921 the records show that an additional $60,000,000 was invested. In 1922 the figures jumped to $80,000,000 for the twelve month period. In 1924 $149,000,000 was invested, nearly doubling that for 1922. In 1926 the investment of new money amounted to $284,000,000. And for the current year 1927 all preceding years are being eclipsed as the estimated amount of new money, based on contracts and plans announced, will exceed $340,000,000.

The figures given for the several mentioned years taken together with the years for which we have not given figures, show that practically as much new money has been invested in ten years as there was in actual use up to 1916. In other words, the total valuation to-day is double that of 1916.

The mere investment of money is not the only interesting and significant part of the matter. The type of buildings planned and erected constitute a very decided cause for optimism. The improvement in exteriors and interiors has been decidedly marked. Many of the grotesque buildings characterizing the last forty years have been torn away or at least not duplicated. Architects have awakened as never before to their opportunities for creative work in church designing. They have sought to familiarize themselves with the programs of the church and its various organizations so as to provide buildings not only beautiful but useful and durable as well. Building committees generally have assumed a different attitude and made possible better buildings. All of these things have led to a working out of standards which are scientifically made and provide for features on the basis of hour loads to be borne by each part of the building, allotment of space per person to be accommodated, and due consideration for air, light, heat and other important matters.

All in all, the past ten years constitute a rather graphic and interesting sort of reply to the critics of the church who seem to think that it is going out of business.

THE MESSAGE OF THE RAINBOW.

By H. Walter Featherstun, D.D.

The most fearful tragedy ever seen had occurred. Multitudes of men, women and children had been swept from the earth by a flood coextensive with the inhabited world. It was an awful measure; but it was evidently the only way to stop the rising tide of corruption. Of all the thousands—possibly millions of the earth's population, only eight were left. After an imprisonment of possibly a year, they debarked, and gathered in worship around a rude altar whereon lay a sacrificed lamb. God came down, as he had done before, and talked with them. A shower cloud hung in the west.

"Far up the blue sky a rainbow unrolled
Its soft tinted pinions of purple and gold.
It was born in a moment; yet quick as its birth
It had stretched to the utmost ends of the earth;
And fair as an angel it floated as free,
With a wing on the earth and a wing on the sea."

And God said: "This is the token of the covenant which I make between me and you and every living creature that is with you for perpetual generations."

The language of this record does not require us to suppose that this was the first rainbow that had ever been hung in our sky. It may be that for two thousand years or more men had been seeing this splendid phenomenon. On this occasion God ordained it to be ever afterward the token of his covenant made with the world that day.

It is a very beautiful token of a very blessed covenant. Made up of all the tints and shades of blue and gold, red and green, most harmoniously blended, and framed into a magnificent arch, it stands unrivaled in all the realm of nature, and remains the marvel of creation, and the admiration of all intelligences.

On the black bosom of the storm cloud it is magnificent; spanning wood and field of softest vernal hue, it is most beautiful; playing over the rushing waters of Niagara, it is exquisite; in a moonlit sky at night, its beauty is weird and strange.

John, on Patmos, in his visions of heaven and the hereafter saw it encircling the throne of God and spanning the evergreen gardens of God, and crowning one of the lordly angels of his Patmos visions. Ezekiel, six hundred years before John's day, had visions of the throne of God spanned by a rainbow. Some of earth's beauty has been translated into heaven; and our rainbow re-appears in realms celestial, and it is worthy of such translation.

"How wide is the sweep of its beautiful wings!
How wondrous its circle! how radiant its rings!
If we look on the sky it's suspended in air;
If we look on the ocean the rainbow is there;
Thus forming a girdle as brilliant and whole
As the thoughts of the rainbow that girdle the soul.
Like the wings of the Deity calmly unfurled
It bends from the sky and encircles the world."

God said: "This is the token of the covenant, which I make between me and you and every living creature that is with you, for perpetual generations: I do set my bow in the cloud, and it shall be for a token of a covenant between me and the earth. And * * * the waters shall no more become a flood to destroy all flesh." None but God could have made so magnificent a structure. No painter has been able to paint a perfect rainbow. No human hand has yet been found sufficiently cunning even to simulate this splendid art work of God.

The supernal beauty of this token carries a meaning, and tells us that the covenant it betokens is a covenant of supreme love and mercy. God had been compelled to stem the tide of human wickedness by the awful tragedy of the deluge; but now foreseeing that this stern lesson would forever deter the race from such extremes of wickedness, he made a covenant of mercy with the world and mankind; and the rainbow on the bosom of the storm cloud is the divine token royal that no other such catastrophe shall ever befall our world and race. The token is placed just where it would be most expressive, on the black bosom of the threatening storm cloud; and so it lies there, a smile of God, assuring us of his love and mercy and protection.

"And as it shines darkness looks white and fair;
Storms turn to music, clouds to smiles and air;
Rain gently spends his honey drops and pours
Balm on the parched earth, on trees and grass and flowers."

The covenant and its assuring token came just when the world most needed them. Noah and his family had seen cities and their peoples swept away. For about a year they had looked from their ark upon the wide watery grave of millions. At the rise of every cloud there recurred the awful problem: "Shall we build another home or plow another field, or plant another garden? Shall we not linger about this Ararat and the ark ready to seek their shelter at a moment's warning? It was then that God set his signet on the cloud and ordained a token of his covenant to never again drown the world. For thousands of years this splendid arch of colors smiling in beauty on the bosoms of our storm clouds has been rehearsing to us the beautiful story of God's love and care.

"When Science from Creation's face
Enchantment's veil withdraws,
What lovely visions yield their place
To cold material laws!
And yet fair Bow no fabling dreams
But words of God most high,
Have told us why thy robe of light
Was woven in the sky."

LEADING SPEAKERS ANNOUNCED FOR LAUSANNE CONFERENCE.

Fourteen countries and all the leading Protestant denominations are represented in the list of speakers announced recently by the Program Committee for the principal addresses to be delivered at the World Conference on Faith and Order, which opens on Aug. 3, at Lausanne, Switzerland.

Seven of the forty-one speakers will come from the United States. They are Right Rev. Charles H. Brent, Episcopal Bishop of Western New York, who will preside at the Conference and deliver the opening address; Rev. F. J. McConnell, Methodist Bishop, of Pittsburgh; Rev. William Adams Brown, of New York (Presbyterian); Rev. S. Parkes Cadman, of Brooklyn (Congregational), President of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America; Rev. M. G. G. Scherer, of New York (Lutheran); Rev. Robert A. Ashworth, of Yonkers, N. Y. (Baptist), and Rev. Peter Ainslie, of Baltimore (Disciples).

The forty-one opening speakers have been assigned to make formal addresses on the seven fundamental subjects selected for discussion at the Conference. These subjects are: "The Call to Unity," "The Church Message to the World—the Gospel," "The Nature of the Church," "The Church's Common Confession of Faith," "The Church's Ministry," "The Sacraments," and "The Unity of Christendom and the Relation Thereto of Existing Churches."

The speakers from outside the United States chosen to introduce the discussion of these subjects are: Rev. H. B. Workman (Wesleyan Methodist); Right Rev. Charles Gore and Rev. Canon O. C. Quick (Church of England), of England, and leading men of Germany, Switzerland, France, Sweden, Norway, Scotland, Ireland, Bulgaria, Denmark, Greece, Hungary, India, Czechoslovakia, and Canada.

The formal addresses delivered by these men will be printed in three languages—English, French and German, and distributed in advance to the 500 representatives at the Conference for discussion at the general business sessions.

HEADQUARTERS WORLD CONFERENCE ON FAITH AND ORDER.

MEETING OF THE EDUCATIONAL COMMISSION.

The Educational Commission of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, met in Asheville, N. C., July 5, to 8. Various subcommittees had arranged meetings just preceding these dates. The meeting was attended by nearly all of the members, and marked progress was made in the tasks before us. The spirit of the Commissions has been one of Christian unity, all the members standing ready to approach the problems with the desire uppermost in their minds that the bests interests of the whole church must be served. The Commission reports progress, and again requests that any suggestions will be cordially received, and asks that the church join in prayer for the leadership of the Spirit.

PAUL B. KERN, Chairman.

GOLDEN RULE AMBASSADOR TO THE NEAR EAST.

Rev. Joseph E. Vandagriff, pastor of Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church, of Fresno, Calif., and president of the Fresno Federation of Churches, has been chosen by his fellow-citizens of Fresno, and accepted by the Young People's Advisory Committee of Near East Relief, as Golden Rule Ambassador to the Near East.

When the Golden Rule Sunday campaign was being promoted last December the Young People's Societies of Fresno, supported by the pastors and the lay members of the various churches, succeeded in interesting practically the entire population of the city in observing the day. Catholics, Protestants, Jews, Mormons, Christian Scientists and Buddhists; Americans, Armenians, Mexicans, Chinese, Japanese and Negroes sacrificed their usual Sunday dinners and ate frugal meals that they might contribute the more for food for the war orphans of the Near East. The contributions made by the inhabitants of Fresno amounted to $31,530.90. In recognition of the splendid work done by the people of Fresno, their city has been designated as the "Golden Rule City."

Mr. Vandagriff has sailed to visit the Near East Relief centers in Greece, Armenia, Palestine, Syria, and Egypt.

FIRST-PAGE STUFF.

By Duncan Francis Young.

In reading the first page of an average daily newspaper one is forcibly reminded of the lines,

"Vice is a monster of so frightful mien
As to be hated needs but to be seen;
Yet seen too oft, familiar with her face,
We first endure, then pity, then embrace."

In a recent issue of a morning newspaper, heading the last column and captioned "He Likes Same Kind of Drinks," Prentice Purdy, to supply a name, formerly an official of a State department, strutted his stuff for more than two columns, concluding as follows: "He likes the same brand and concoctions that I do—reference solely and specifically to the well-known forbidden refreshment." If this person Purdy was an official of the State government he must have taken a solemn oath to uphold the Constitution and laws of the State and of the United States. This sworn officer states: "Together with thousands of others in the State I have repeatedly violated the prohibition laws by possessing and transporting a pint or thereabouts of liquor not legally acquired." What class of readers was this newspaper seeking to serve? What end could it possibly attain but a demoralizing one by such wanton expressions of lawlessness and disloyalty? Was it building up respect for constitutional government or was it lending "comfort to the enemies of the United States Government" and thereby verging upon treason? What does an oath or obligation amount to to a man who openly exults over violating it? Or did Pudy's pliable conscience justify him in his anarchy because "thousands of others" had been guilty of the same offense? What effect other than vicious could these expressions and the frank publicity of them have upon minds that might be easily turned toward wrongful thoughts and actions?

Purdy's recompense must have existed in the old adage, "An honest confession is good for the soul." For Purdy made quite a bold and complete confession. And as a consequence his soul must now be in state of complete goodness.

On the next column appeared the heading, "Smith to Know Fate Wednesday," this having to do with Senator Designate Frank Smith, who was charged with accepting the wrong kind of money, and too much of it, in his political campaign.

In the middle column another head read: "Mother Made Moonshine to Feed Children." The top of the three middle columns was adorned by the picture of this woman and her four children, with the explanation underneath that "she is now destitute until her husband returns from jail." He had been sentenced to serve time for operating a still. It was stated in his behalf that he had not been well enough to work at his trade as baker, and ran a still as a side line. Logically, if his health did not improve by his rest in prison he would have to resume operating a still when "he returns." "So I tried to think of some way I could make the money," the bootlegger's wife naively explained. Strange she did not seem to ever think of working for it. But her husband had done it that way, and maybe she had in mind Purdy, "together with thousands of others," who "liked forbidden refreshment."

Way down at the bottom of a column was this one-line head in small type: "Thieves Get $225." Near the bottom of another column was this two-line head: "Mother Refuses Cash, He Throws Lye at Her."

Maybe these folk wanted money with which to buy some of the "same kind of drinks." Or possibly they desired cash with which to pay the fine of some one who engaged in some "side-line" to make easy money. And, like the fellow in the remaining article, "Lord Sam Sails in High Temper," and the "thousands of others" who do not mind violating laws they do not respect, maybe these folk preferred to accept gifts, bribes and the pound of flesh rather than earn their bread by the "sweat of their brow."

Although the Yankees invaded the South and whipped the people to a fare-you-well and thereby took away the right of States to break away from the laws governing the United States, a Maryland senator, according to this first-page stuff, scored McAdoo for asserting that New York and Maryland were rebellious in refusing to enact State prohibition laws. Many peoples have many minds. Thieves feel that the law against stealing is unjust, and the forger finds the law against forgery unpopular. Indeed, all laws are disagreeable to the anarchist and the chronic law violator. Disrespect for law makes for lawlessness and the consequent fall of governments. Law and government make for security of life, limb and property. It is the part of every citizen who has property and people to protect to see that all laws are strictly and impartially enforced. The law-abiding must voluntarily take their medicine and the lawless must be forced to take it. When it comes to law enforcement many men of many minds must be forced to yield to the law that is made for all alike. Failing in this, the government is like a lock that is fastened with rusty nails.

We now come to consider the most important of the day's first-page stuff. "The Chief Executive Called for Reduction of Governmental Expenditures to Add to Our Military Preparedness." That is the solution. Be prepared, whether it be for war, high water or for death, or for the protection of family and fireside.

LETTER FROM KOREA.

I think Korea is one of the most interesting mission fields. I have been very much impressed by the fervor of the worship in the Korean church. I have also been impressed by the fact that the church is the center of all the activities. I have been impressed by the wise statesmanship of our missionaries that have been here in seeing the problem to lie wholly in the church and to give themselves to that task of building the church, making all other interests second.

Korea is a farming country. People live in small villages in the valleys and till the soil. This means that much of our time and strength is given to the rural community. I had occasion to visit one of our rural churches with Rev. C. N. Weems. They were building a new church. This is the third church that this particular community had built. The present church is being built by the village. The labor is given and nearly all of the money has been given by the local community this church is to serve. The church is loaned to the community during the week for a school. The church selects the school teacher, and Christian instruction will be given each day in the school, and there will be Sunday school every week and church services arranged as often as the preacher of the circuit can conduct them.

One feeture of the country church that appeals to me very much is their monthly Watch meeting. Once each month each church on the circuit sends its delegates to a Watch Night meeting. This is a layman's meeting, presided over by laymen. Those attending the Watch Night service are entertained in the homes of the Christian people in the community where the service is held. At a very early morning hour the group assembles and one of its members, appointed a month in advance, gives an address on a subject usually chosen for him by the group. Then each church represented gives an oral report of how things are getting along at their church, and the pastor's salary is paid. If some church member has lost interest a committee is appointed to visit him and to ascertain the trouble; if some member has lost his crop because of floods or drought a collection is often taken to give relief, etc. This brotherhood unites the circuit and is the backbone of the country church. Rev. C. N. Weems, the presiding elder, encourages this brotherhood, by arranging the quarterly conference on the same night that the Watch meeting is to be held. Whenever the brotherhood is strong the country church prospers in both spiritual and physical things.

The city churches have Saturday night prayer meetings. Each church divides its district up into circuits, as they are called, and a leader is appointed for each section. The meetings give the laymen a chance to lead. It is interesting to note that the church that has emphasized the Saturday night meetings in Songdo for many years, about six years ago became so large that it gave one hundred of its members to a new church enterprise in another section of the city, where a new, self-supporting church has been built, and in addition to that this church has carried the burden of a number of churches that have suffered financial depression and has helped foster some work in the country.

I am sure that reports from the workers on the field have reached the home office and that anything I might have to say would be more for friendly correspondence than for printed material. The woman's evangelistic plant in the heart of the city is doing a splendid work. Miss Graham is winning girls from the wealthiest homes in the community through her various activities there. She is being assisted by Miss Bertha Smith, who is doing work a large part of her time in the country church. Miss Graham has a large class of girls each Sunday morning in her Bible class, and Miss Bertha Smith is teaching a class of young men in an English Bible class each Sunday. These classes are helping to bind a fine group of young people to the church.

Mrs. Swinney and Clella Mae are quite well and happy. We have a lovely home. We are living in the home built by Dr. Cram, and if you people will hurry up and get through with him in Nashville and send him back to us, we will be glad to let him have this lovely home that we are now occupying. We hear something good about Dr. Cram nearly every day, and we need him out here.

CALLED MEETING BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

There will be a called meeting of the Executive Committee of the Board of Church Extension of the Mississippi Conference at Capitol Street Church, Jackson, Miss., Tuesday, Aug. 9, at 1:30 p. m., to give aid to the churches damaged in the flood area.

W. M. WILLIAMS, Chairman.

P. S. Write to W. A. Hays, Waynesboro, Miss., for blank application.

TO THE LAYMEN AND PASTORS OF THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Dear Brethren: Three years ago, with not more than perhaps a half dozen dissenting votes, you authorized the Board of Directors of the Methodist Orphanage at Jackson to tear away the old building that housed the orphan children and erect a new and adequate building. Accordingly, the Board borrowed the money and has had the building erected, and the children are comfortably housed in it. You have been receiving recently the strongest appeal the Board could frame, asking that you raise enough money with which to pay past due indebtedness and save our Orphanage. A few have responded to the appeal, but not near enough has been received to warrant us in believing there is any hope of continuing in the Orphanage business. Please, brethren, present this cause to your people and secure as much as possible at once. Don't wait till the Board advises you the home has been closed out for debt and then say, "That's a shame, why didn't they advise us and we would have taken up collections and paid it out." I confidently expect to hear from you at once. One dollar and twenty-five cents from each Methodist in Mississippi will save the home.

S. A. BROWN, Commissioner.

THE LAND OF BEGINNING AGAIN.

"I wish there were some wonderful place
Called the Land of Beginning Again,
Where all our mistakes and our heartaches,
And all our poor, selfish griefs
Could be dropped, like a shabby old coat, at the door,
And never put on again.

"It wouldn't be possible not to be kind
In the Land of Beginning Again,
And the ones we misjudged and the ones whom we grudged
Their moments of victory here
Would find the grasp of our loving hand-clasp
More than penitent lips could explain.

"For what had been hardest we'd know had been best,
And what had seemed loss would be gain;
For there isn't a sting that will not take wing
When we've met it and laughed it away;
And I think the laughter will help us thereafter
In the Land of Beginning Again.

"So I wish that there were some wonderful place
Called the Land of Beginning Again.
Where all our mistakes and all our heartaches,
And all our poor, selfish griefs,
Could be dropped, like a shabby old coat, at the door,
And never put on again." —From "Go Forward."

THE LITTLE HOUSE IN THE HOLLOW.

One day a large gray cat followed three little girls out of the woods. He stayed on and made his home with first one of them and then another.

The three little girls had names that just suited them. Goldie's hair was the color of red gold, Coral's cheeks were always pink, and Violet had big dark blue eyes. When the cat came they named him Silver Coat because of his smooth gray fur.

One autumn day the girls packed a basket with luncheon and went off for a picnic. Silver Coat followed, as he always did.

After they had read awhile they spread their dinner on a flat rock. But when they had finished and called Silver Coat to his dinner he did not come.

"He must have gone off hunting," Coral said.

"Perhaps he's asleep somewhere," Goldie suggested. "It's time for his morning nap."

But Violet said, "He is lost; we must go and look for him."

After they had been searching for a while they came out of the woods suddenly into a hollow between two hills. There was a weather-beaten little house at the end of the hollow.

"I have heard," Coral said wisely, "that a cross little old woman named Miss Prissy Partlow lives there all alone."

"Well, if she's cross lets keep away," said Goldie.

Violet hesitated. "I wonder why there's no smoke coming from her kitchen chimney. Perhaps something is wrong."

They walked over to the house. The front door was ajar, but they could hear no sound.

"Is any one at home?" Violet called.

Then a voice answered, "Please come in."

The girls found poor little Miss Prissy Partlow wrapped up on the bed; she looked very forlorn.

Several days before, she had hurt her ankle, she explained, and now she could hardly crawl round the room.

The girls asked if she had not been cold and hungry.

"Yes, I have, and that a fact," Miss Prissy replied.

"O dear!" said Violet. "This is dreadful! But we'll soon have things easier for you."

Then the three girls set to work with a will.

"There's plenty of wood out in the shed," Miss Prissy remarked, "but none in the house. Oh, how good a little blaze will feel to my chilly bones!"

Coral brought in wood and kindled a ruddy little fire. Violet bound up the invalid's ankle, and Goldie made some crisp brown toast and amber tea.

"Well, well," said Miss Prissy, "this seems too good to be true."

Coral felt ashamed. How could any one have called Miss Prissy cross?

"How did you happen to come here?" Miss Prissy asked.

"We were looking for our beautiful cat," Goldie said.

The little old lady looked interested. "What kind of a cat?"

"Oh, a silver cat." Coral said.

"Such a beauty," Violet said wistfully, "with a soft gray coat."

"And so fat and purry," Goldie added.

Miss Prissy looked thoughtful; she leaned back on the pillows that Violet had beaten up for her, and drank Goldie's good tea and looked at the crackling fire that Coral had made.

After a moment she said, "Listen; don't I hear something out in the entry?" The three girls turned and looked toward the entry door, which was slightly ajar. Something came slowly round the edge of the door. The girls gasped—it was Silver Coat.

"He belongs here," Miss Prissy explained. "His name is Sam. I don't know whatever made him run away. But," she added, for the three friends looked very sorrowful, "I'm not going to take him away from you."

"O Miss Prissy," Violet said, "Silver Coat—I mean Sam—is your cat, and so he ought to stay with you."

"Well," the little old woman answered, "we'll leave the matter to Sam—I mean, to Silver Coat."

"Now," said Miss Prissy, after a while, "since you have been so kind, I am going to ask one more favor of you. It is that you will carry a note to a good woman I know who will come and take care of me."

As the girls nodded willingly, she added, "But first hand me that little black tin box that sits on the bureau."

When the box was in her hands she drew a key from under her pillow. "Come closer," she told the girls. Then shut your eyes and don't open them until I tell you to."

They obeyed wonderingly. There was a slight rustling and rattling. Then Goldie felt something slip over her wrist with a click. An instant later something else slid down over Coral's black curl, and something else over one of Violet's fingers.

"Now you can look." Three pairs of eyes flew open, and three voices said, "O my!"

For on Goldie's wrist a gold chain bracelet was shining; on Violet's finger was a little ring set with a dark amethyst; and there was a gleam of red under Coral's chin.

"You must go now," Miss Prissy said, "for it's getting late. And if my good Sam wants to go with you, he may."

"Ask him, one of you," Miss Prissy said. "He sees you are leaving."

"Silver Coat," Violet said, "don't you think you ought to stay here with Miss Prissy?"

Silver Coat yawned in a dignified way.

Then Miss Prissy leaned on her elbow and looked solemnly into the big green eyes.

"Sam," she said, "don't you really want to go home with Coral and Violet and Goldie?"

Silver Coat yawned again; but that was all he did.

But the next evening, when they were studying their lessons together in Violet's home, they heard a strange tingle-tankle out on the porch.

Tiptoeing across the room, they opened the door. There on the threshold stood Silver Coat. With a loud purr of greeting he marched past them toward the fire.

"Oh, bless his heart!" cried the girls. "Where did he come from, and how can he ring like that?"

Silver Coat was settling himself on the rug with his paws folded under his chest and his tail curled cosily. The girls picked him up and found a tiny silver bell on a ribbon round his neck.

"Dear Miss Prissy found something for him, too," Coral said. "Something that just suits him to a T!"

But, for all their joy at seeing Silver Coat again, they were a little stern with him.

"Sam! Sam!" said tender-hearted Violet. "How could you run away and leave your poor lonely Miss Prissy?"

Silver Coat stayed two days, and then he disappeared again. From that time on Silver Coat had four homes, one with each of the girls and one with Miss Prissy.—Lucy Dana Hill, in the Youth's Companion.

LET US TALK ABOUT OUR NEIGHBORS.

Let me introduce to you my feathered friends, Mr. and Mrs. Bullock Oriole. We lived neighbors for eight years in Scurry County. We moved in the fall of 1918, and they came from Central America the following spring, selecting a building site in a grove just south of our windmill.

The gentleman of the family, who far outdresses his neat wife, wears a suit of brilliant orange and black. Although thinking his attire somewhat out of place in so quiet a community, I decided to pay him a get-acquainted visit, for his rich whistled song, which seemed a part of him, was a good omen that his heart was right.

I found that he is very sociable, and also his industrious wife seemed glad to welcome me. Mrs. Oriole was weaving into a cozy nest the materials which her husband had brought. Perhaps you know that she has the reputation of being one of the finest nest builders in the world. Their home was swung near the end of a slender branch, which was, of course, somewhat inaccessible to human guests, but proved a protection against prowling cats.

I learned that they are related to the Baltimore Orioles, Orchard Orioles, my old friends the Blackbirds, Meadowlarks, and others.

Soon five downy, wide-mouthed youngsters made their appearance, so the duties of father and mother Oriole were greatly increased. In providing food for their hungry children the Orioles were of great service to me and to other neighbors, for their food consists mainly of insects and injurious caterpillars which destroy crops and fruit trees. Vast quantities of insects and caterpillars are devoured daily by youngsters of their kind.

No doubt you have often started all the roosters in your neighborhood to crowing; even so you may whistle up the friendy orioles. This has proved a very interesting pastime for me when the day seemed long; it is just as good as calling a friend for a chat over the telephone.

The Oriole family always went south to spend the winter, but never failed to come again in the spring.

One day in June a dark storm cloud, accompanied by a furious wind, came from the southwest. Just before the rain began to beat down, I ran out to lock the windmill. The bough, in which the nest hung, was swaying almost to the ground; the nest was first mouth downward, upright, sideways. Would the supporting grasses and fibers stand the test? Would the fledglings be dashed to the ground? No, not while mother Oriole's strength lasted, for her yellowish-olive body was thurst into the opening, and with feet and wings clutching the rim of the nest, she was holding the little ones in safety. But would she be able to withstand the storm? As I rushed back to my shelter I breathed a prayer for the little family.

The clouds lowered and torrents of rain fell, beating down all small vegetation. At last the sky cleared, and clad in raincoat and boots, I hurried to the tree by the windmill. Mr. Oriole had come from his shelter in the nearby orchard, and was whistling a merry melody in his own language.

"Gods in his heaven—

SOME RESULTS.

We are glad to report that, in addition to the kindly words which have come from many quarters of our patronizing territory and the reports of plans to secure good lists of subscriptions to the Advocate, some tangible results are beginning to come from the appeal recently made for 1,200 new subscriptions to the Advocate at the regular price of $2 per subscription, "Only Four Hundred to the Conference and Fifty to the District." Rev. C. H. Mayo, whose good letter concerning the Advocate will appear in the next issue, reported that he would send in ten subscriptions by Aug. 1. He has already sent in the ten subscriptions. Rev. L. W. Cain, of Parker Memorial Church, of this city, has gone to work on a subscription list, starting with two subscriptions already turned in. Rev. E. C. Gunn, of Carrollton Avenue Church, of this city, has turned in seven subscriptions, and says he is expecting to get a total of fifty. In addition to these named, we have received the following: Rev. S. E. Ashmore, Carrollton, Miss., 1; Rev. W. W. Bruner, Belmont, Miss., 1; Rev. M. L. White, Lake, Miss., 1; Rev. M. K. Miller, Rose Hill, Miss., 1; Rev. M. M. Black, Richton, Miss., 1; Rev. S. J. Davies, Shreveport, La., 2; Rev. J. A. Alford, Rayville, La., 1; Rev. S. S. Bogan, Columbia, La., 1; Rev. A. M. Serex, Second Church, New Orleans, 1. Brethren, make it possible for us to report a very large list in our next issue. "Only Four Hundred to the Conference and Fifty to the District."

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. V. G. Clifford, pastor at Mendenhall, Miss., recently assisted Rev. L. F. Alford in a meeting at Raleigh, Miss.

Mrs. C. A. Thompson, of Columbus, Miss., in writing to renew her subscription, says: "I could not do without my Christian paper."

After Aug. 15 the address of Rev. H. M. Young, superannuate of the North Mississippi Conference, will be Booneville, Miss. He has been residing at Chester, Miss.

Rev. Percy Vaughan, our pastor at Ellisville, Miss., is assisting Rev. Eugene Wedgeworth in a meeting at Spring Hill church, Americus charge. The meeting began last Sunday.

The work at Minden, La., where Rev. Leon I. McCain is the pastor, is evidently going well during the summer, judging by the attendance of more than 200 at a recent mid-week prayer meeting service.

Carrollton Avenue Church co-operated in a Vacation Bible School which was recently conducted by the Protestant churches of the Carrollton section of this city. The attendance was good and the results very satisfactory.

In the "Circuit Rider," published every week by Rev. J. W. Sells, pastor as Pascagoula, Miss., appears a list of thirty-two members of the church on the Honor Roll as having paid in full to date their pledges toward the support of the ministry.

Last week we reported that Rev. G. A. LaGrange and Rev. C. J. Thibodeaux had been conducting a good revival at Bayou Cane, near Houma, La. We have learned later that Rev. A. D. Martin did the preaching at this meeting. The people in that section are almost entirely French.

The flood waters have almost entirely receded from all sections of Morgan City, La., and the activities of the church, which were never suspended during the flood, are getting back to normal. Fortunately our church and parsonage there are on high ground and they were not flooded.

Under the leadership of the superintendent of the Sunday school at Pascagoula, Miss., plans are being perfected for a Daily Vacation Bible School to be held at the church some time during the month of August. Our church will co-operate in this vacation school with other churches in the community.

Mr. Harmon Lee Smith, a member of our church at Ellisville, Miss., has recently filled three engagements as a song leader in revival meetings. He would like for the brethren to know that he will be open for work of this kind during the month of August. He should be addressed at Ellisville, Miss.

The Senior Epworth League of First Methodist Church, Shreveport, La., will conduct an open air service on next Sunday evening in Princess Park. Miss Hattie Renfro will be the principal speaker. The Senior department of the Sunday school of First Church enjoyed an outing on Wednesday of last week at Lake Forbing.

Rev. E. C. Gunn, pastor of Carrollton Avenue Church, of New Orleans, has just returned from the annual encampment of the Louisiana National Guard at Camp Beauregard, Alexandria, La. Brother Gunn was a chaplain overseas during the world war, and is now a major in the National Guard and chaplain of the Thirty-first Division.

Mr. George L. Carley, of Gulfport, Miss., writes us that Rev. C. C. Miller, of Franklinton, La., preached "two very fine sermons" in our Gulfport church on July 17. The pastor of the church, Rev. W. J. Ferguson, was assisting Rev. C. C. Miller at the time in a revival at Franklinton, and it was arranged that the latter should occupy the pulpit in Gulfport on July 17.

Sunday School Day was observed at Mendenhall, Miss., on July 10. The Junior congregation, composed of the Primary and Junior departments of the Sunday school, occupied a reserved section in the center of the church. The Leaguers occupied the choir, had the church tastefully and beautifully decorated, furnished the ushers, and rendered two special songs. The offering was good.

Rev. R. T. Ware, pastor of Texas Avenue Church, Shreveport, La., writes that Brother Thermon, an elder in the Church of the Nazarenes, is coming into our church. Brother Ware writes that Brother Thermon is a good preacher and a good singer, and that both he and Brother Lesly Spinks have some open dates. They should be addressed at 6502 Caddo Street, Cedar Grove, La.

A pleasant boat ride on the St. Tammany for several hours on the moonlit waters of beautiful Lake Pontchartrain was recently enjoyed by a large number of young people from the different Epworth Leagues of this city. Stunts were put on at intervals in the cabin of the boat. The judges awarded first place to the Epworth League of Louisiana Avenue Church for the best stunt of the evening.

"Winnsboro is fortunate to have Miss Daisy Davies conducting a revival, which began July 10," writes Mrs. H. W. Rickey, one of the members of the church at that point. The handsome new church was being filled at all the evening services, and there was a very good attendance at the morning services every day, at the time when the report was sent in. The meeting was to close on last Sunday, and we shall soon expect a report of the results attained through the meeting.

Mrs. Anna Onstott, 68 Wood Street, Mansfield, Ohio, has been visiting in Brookhaven, Miss., and she recently visited New Orleans and called at the Advocate office. She has become known as the "Teapot Lady," because of her interest in reproducing and distributing the Wesley Teapot, which was made by Josiah Wedgewood, and used by John Wesley for thirty years. Mrs. Onstott has traveled widely and has done much lecture work, her chief subjects being, "A Visit to the Shrines of Methodism," and "The Evolution of a Teapot." She is the widow of a Methodist preacher.

Rev. A. M. Martin, pastor on the St. Martinville charge, Louisiana Conference, writes that there was but little damage done to our property on that charge during the flood. The water reached a depth of six inches in the church at St. Martinville; the floor is all right, it would seem, but the pews will need to be revarnished. Brother Martin is still holding services three times a week in the refugee camp at Lafayette, to which town he was forced to go with his family when St. Martinville was inundated. The parsonage at St. Martinville and the church at Arnaudville were not damaged.

President H. G. Hawkins has been formally notified that Whitworth College, Brookhaven, Miss., has been authoritatively recognized as a member of the American Association of Junior Colleges. The last annual meeting of this Association was held last December in Jackson, Miss., for the two days immediately preceding the meeting of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools; and the next annual meeting will be held in connection with the meeting of the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, which usually assembles in March in Chicago, or some of the cities of the North Central States.

A good meeting has recently closed at Price Memorial Church, Greenwood, Miss. The pastor, Rev. J. O. Dowdle, was assisted in the meeting by Brother Buford Ellington, of Durant, Miss., a student in Millsaps College. Brother Ellington preached at the morning service and worked with the young people of the community, and the pastor preached at the evening service. The people say it was one of the best revivals they had ever had in the church. There were twelve accessions to the church, nine of them being upon profession of faith. Brother Dowdle writes of Brother Ellington as follows: "Brother Ellington is good help. I would not hesitate to recommend him to any pastor who needs the help of a boy preacher to work with the young, or the older either, but especially the young people. He is indeed a consecrated young man."

Rev. H. W. Jordan, pastor at Covington, La., came to New Orleans one day last week to visit a member of his church, who has been ill in the Baptist Hospital. While in the city, he called at the Advocate office. He reported that he and his people would begin before the end of August the erection of a Sunday school building at Covington. The building will cost about $5,000, and of this amount $1,800 is already in hand. He reports that the work is going well at Mandeville, a point on the charge, where Brother Fred Campbell, a local preacher, has been appointed to assist Brother Jordan. Mandeville is a large town on the shore of Lake Ponchartrain, and it is hoped that a Methodist church can be built there and more attention can be given to this point in the near future. At the present time our people worship in a union church building.

Last week, with a seasonal appropriateness, the editor wrote very interestingly on "Fishing With Worms." However, the assistant happens to know that the editor really prefers a rod and reel and a "Shannon Twin Spinner," and a larger prize than the President or any other will often catch with worms. And if the editor could have been with the assistant in the early morning of last Saturday, on False River, he would have forgotten all about "fishing with worms." The assistant, with Mrs. Harper, made a brief visit on Friday and Saturday to his mother and two sisters, near Baton Rouge. His brother-in-law, Mr. S. P. Woolfolk, suggested a trip to False River in the early morning of Saturday. Three a. m. found them crossing the ferry at Baton Rouge; nine a.m. found them leaving False River with a string of fine fish. They used the "Shannon" and a rod and reel, but let the editor fish with worms if he so desires.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETING, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

The Executive Committee of the Louisiana Conference Board of Church Extension will meet in the First Methodist Church of New Orleans on Tuesday, Aug. 9, 1927, at 10 a. m.

All applications going before the Executive Committee of the General Board of Church Extension at the September meeting should come before the Louisiana Conference Committee for consideration.

ELMER C. GUNN, President.

LETTER FROM DR. DRAKE.

Dear Dr. Harper: I was glad to see your suggestion in the Advocate a week or so ago, that the pastors of the three Conferences secure 1,200 new subcriptions to the Advocate at the regular rate, $2, between now and Sept. 1. To me it is unthinkable that our pastors and churches will consent to let the Advocate become in danger of collapsing, when the simple effort necesssary to secure these subscriptions will solve its difficulties, at least for the present. While I have been thinking over the matter, the suggestion has come to me from Brother McCain, of Minden, that the proposition be made a little more definite by asking that each of the patronizing Conferences be asked to take 400 of the needed subscriptions. On that basis, each district in the Louisiana Conference could be assigned a minimum of fifty, and the presiding elder be asked to get behind the matter, and through a committee, or otherwise, see that that number is secured. I pass on the suggestion to you and the readers of the Advocate as a simple and practicable plan.

It may be in order to call attention to the fact that numbers of our larger churches which did not co-operate in the plan of securing the large club in their congregations, ought to be able to secure good lists of subscribers in this time of emergency.

Yours fraternally,

W. WINANS DRAKE.

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

One who writes a good book, an interesting, instructive book, adds no little to the sum and substance of human life. Ever since, as a boy browsing in my father's library, I read Dr. Olin's Travels in those historic lands that cluster about the Mediterranean, and Thomson's "Land and His Book," I have been much taken by descriptive writings of these countries.

Dr. R. E. Smith, dean emeritus of Centenary College, of Louisiana, has recently given to the press a book on these time-honored subjects that, for sheer merit, intense interest, and rare descriptive grace, equals, if it does not surpass, any treatise on the countries of Europe, Asia and Africa, contigous to the great sea, that it has been my good fortune to read. The amount of information it contains is incalculable to the student of history. The social and political conditions of the various nations visited are portrayed with an understanding of one who has made a careful and diligent study of the same. Comparison between the effete civilization of some of the Eastern lands and happier conditions of our country cause us to wonder.

"Books," says Lessing, "are the true Elysian Fields through which the spirits of the dead wander, and into these fields a mortal may venture unappalled." When one reads Dean Smith's book, hands reach toward us across centuries, scenes of religions, living and dead, voice their pleas for recognition, seas, rivers, mountains and plains replete with the hopes, the fears, the deeds of vanished races, as well as the activities of the living, pass in panorama before the reader. I might say more, but some prudent one has given warning against painting lilies. I appreciate the favor shown me by the Dean in reviewing this book, and gladly add to other reviews my commendation. The preacher who may invest in this volume will add materially to his fund of knowledge concerning the lands and peoples so interestingly described.

The Bible! Who can fully understand all this wonderful message of life, grace and love? Its teachings cover the need of our race for all time, and glows with radiant promises and assurances of eternity, and eternity, says the wise one, is set in the heart of man.

More people are vitally, vividly interested in its study, its meaning, its spiritual wealth and worth than ever before. Though many differences appear here and there as to its interpretation, whether its readings should be construed literally, figuratively, or in accord with the general canon of other literature, yet I can easily see that so far as its great outstanding doctrines are concerned, more men are in agreement and accord than ever before. I like botany fairly well. I like occasionally in reading to follow the thoughts of men, who have classified and analyzed the vast fauna of this old earth. But when for pleasure or recreation I wander through forest and field, carpeted grasses, decked with flowers and majestic with leafy trees, I am not at all troubled about stamens and petals and calyxes, I am seeking beauty, and health and strength. Linneaus and all his crowd are forgotten.

So I read my Bible. I have read much the critics have written. But when I wander with Abraham over Syrian deserts, in thought, I like to kneel with him at the altars he so often built, and catch the inspiration of his mighty faith. A study of Moses' problems helps me to solve mine. The earliest defense of home and people made by some of the heroes of these elder days steels me in the struggle for righteousness now raging at home and abroad. Reading the burning words of Isaiah fills me with wonder, love and praise. I am not out gunning for critical bears or bugbaboos. Like most bears these animals run at the sight of a true hunter. I am not quarreling with this crowd, as long as they are honest. But here is the point. I am reading my Bible, seeking God, and truth, and life and comfort, and I find these therein. No doubt there is much in this book we fail to understand, but great lessons of faith, life and immortality, its treasures of deathless love crystallized in the purpose of him who said, "Search the Scriptures." These things are the real Bible. And you can find them if you seek with an open mind and understanding heart.

ANNUITY BONDS

SAFETY is the first requisite of an investment with a view to regular income.

ANNUITY BONDS have advantage over other investments in that they provide an income that cannot shrink.

YOU may in your lifetime without loss of income or any risk pay over to the Board of Missions, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the amount that you had intended leaving in your will to be used in sending the Gospel "to every creature."

YOU may avoid taxes, various fees or any litigation in connection with your benevolent gifts which sometimes greatly reduce one's bequest. Annuity Bonds enable one to be the executor of his own will.

ALL THIS—and at the same time you enjoy during your lifetime an income that cannot shrink—an income that stands between you and want.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, our brother and co-laborer in Christ, MORE W. CARNEY, SR., has been a member of the quarterly conference of the Baker charge for about twenty years, and acceptably, faithfully and efficiently performed his duties as a steward and Sunday school superintendent; and,

Whereas, he has been called from his place among us to his eternal home; therefore, be it resolved:

First, That knowing to be absent from the body is to be present with the Lord, we humbly bow in submission to the divine will.

Second, That we hereby express our appreciation of the faithful service he rendered, and hold in high esteem his memory as a friend, a neighbor, an upright citizen and a Christian gentleman.

Third, That his presence among us is greatly missed, and the vacancy caused by his going is a reminder to us that we, too, have only a transient place here.

Fourth, That we extend to his loved ones our sympathy and prayers that this sore bereavement may strengthen the tie between them and the one who said, "I go to prepare a place for you."

Fifth, That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the record of the quarterly conference, a copy sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and a copy be sent to his family.

Signed: Mrs. J. C. Register, Mrs. J. H. Tucker, Mr. C. D. Bogan, Mrs. G. D. Purcell, Quarterly Conference Committee.

HARMON WILSON.

Death has again been busy about his appointed task. Friends and loved ones have been made to grieve, a community is in sorrow and the commonwealth has lost a good man. On April 8, 1927, Harmon Wilson died after a lingering illness of several months. He was born Nov. 3, 1861; married to Miss Sarah E. Byrd, July 5, 1883, and there was born to that union ten children, two of whom are dead. Harmon Wilson was converted at New Prospect Camp Ground at the age of 20 years. Since that time he has never faltered in the faith. It was my pleasure and privilege to know him for more than forty years, and during that time he was always an active church worker. He would ride farther horseback to a protracted meeting or quarterly conference than any man I ever knew. He always contributed more money to the church than any other member of the congregation in proportion to his means. The life of Harmon Wilson was an inspiration to all who knew him. He was the purest man I ever knew. He was a member of the Masonic Lodge, Daisy Lodge No. 421. He gave much of his time to the work of Masonry, and served his lodge as Worshipful Master. It was fitting that he should be buried with Masonic honors by the friends with whom he had worked in the lodge. He was the embodiment of all the virtues that make for Christianity and good citizenship. He was the leader in his community, and his memory will prove an inspiration to those who are left behind. He never shirked a responsibility, and there never was any question about where he would stand on any moral issue. The world is better for Harmon Wilson having lived. But, alas, he has gone. The Pale Surgeon of the Evening's Relief has summoned him away, and he now sleeps in that green tent whose curtains never outward swing. He has gone to join the long row of self-sacrificing heroes and patriarchs, jewels that on the forefinger of all time sparkle forever. It was in keeping with his life that he had lived before his family and friends that he should summons them in the room just a few moments before his passing, and have them sing some of his favorite songs, and during the singing of these hymns he should shout, "Let us go home—Let us go home." And thus Harmon Wilson entered into his just inheritance. The largest funeral procession ever seen in that community made its way to the old Byrd cemetery, where Brother S. E. Flurry, of the Mentorium charge, conducted the funeral services, assisted by Brother W. W. Nelson, of Van Cleave charge, and the lifelong friend of the deceased, Brother Jeff Haven.

W. W. BROOM.

RUTH SYKES GUYNES.

"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." Can this not be said of our sister, missing from our ranks to-day? Ruth Sykes Guynes identified herself with the church in her young and useful years. For thirty-seven years she labored among her friends in the cause of right. She filled faithfully and well every office in the Woman's Missionary Society, being corresponding secretary at the time of her death. It is said that she was the best informed woman in the local church, always keeping in touch with the work. Sweet of disposition, cheerful and happy, but humble and quiet, never seeking a conspicuous place, she was ready to do the bidding of her church or to serve wherever she could. To-day, as we meet together, realizing that there is a vacant chair in our midst, do we not feel that she is near? "When Christ draws near our spirits, may it not be possible that loving souls whom we loved and knew in the flesh bear up his train and hover near our hearts and join their whispers to the voice of him who loves us?"—Bolivar Commercial.

MRS. MARY ELIZABETH HARVEY CONERLY was born Dec. 7, 1840, and passed to her reward June 2, 1927. She was married to James Raiford Conerly Jan. 16, 1861, and nine children came into the home to bless this union, six of whom are living to-day. She was gloriously converted and joined the Methodist church about the time of her marriage, at old Pine Grove church. When the Pine Grove church was disbanded she moved her membership to China Grove. When she and her husband moved to Tylertown in 1869 she placed her membership in the Tylertown Methodist church, where it remained until she was translated to heaven. She was a true, devoted wife to her husband as long as he lived, looking after the affairs of the home, taking care of the children, as all true mothers should do; and when she was left a widow she kept her children together, reared and educated them and sent them out into the world prepared to take care of themselves. She was faithful to her church vows—she regarded her church the greatest institution on earth, and as long as she was able she came to Sunday school and church. Although she was the oldest member of the church, yet she was the most faithful attendant at Sunday school, prayer meeting, and preaching service of any of the members of the church, as long as she was able to come. Hers was a genuine Christian experience; she died as she lived—peacefully, quietly, calmly, like a little babe falling asleep in its mother's arms. No struggle; it was the sweetest death I ever witnessed. May the mantle of her sweet life fall on all her loved ones is the prayer of her pastor,

JAMES M. LEWIS.

RESOLUTIONS.

(Adopted by the third quarterly conference, held at Lawrence, Miss., Lake charge, Sunday, July 17, 1927.)

Whereas, Brother E. W. Tatum was called to his reward July 2, 1927, after a lingering and suffering illness, and was a lifelong member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and had filled the various offices known to the quarterly conference of the Methodist church; and,

Whereas, he was one of best citizens, loved by all who knew him; his word was his bond and was dependable in all things, possessing the blood of three fine families, Tatum, Abney and Risher; and,

Whereas, he was our neighbor and friend for more than twenty years, and will be missed by this conference, this church and this town; be it resolved:

1. That we cherish his memory here, and shall always hold his name in high regard.

2. That we tender his wife and three sweet children our sympathy, prayers, love, respect and affection, and assure them that we will always give our support in times of need.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be furnished the family, that a copy be spread upon the minutes of this conference, that a copy be given his mother, that a copy be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate and a copy to the Newton Record, Newton, Miss.

Signed: O. L. Strickland, C. S. Sanders, R. D. Whatley, Committee.

When the gentle spirit of MRS. LINNIE P. WILBURN went out from its earthly tabernacle and passed into the home eternal to be forever with her Lord, the Woman's Missionary Society of the Pickens Methodist church not only lost one of its charter members, but one of its most loyal, efficient and faithful workers. Her life was one of loving service, lived "in such a self-forgetful way" that her constant thought was for others. She was a faithful wife, a devoted mother, a Christian of the purest type, withal, a perfect gentlewoman of the class so distinctive of the old South. The quiet and simple dignity of her personality was an all-pervading charm in the home where she was wont to extend such gracious hospitality. She rests by the side of her devoted companion 'neath the green of beautiful Quiet Ridge cemetery, and insight of the church she loved so well. While her going has left such a sad vacancy in our lives we know that she has "entered into the joys of her Lord."

"Go wing thy flight from star to star,
From earth to luminous world as far
As the universe spreads its flaming wall,
Take all the pleasures of all the spheres,
And multiply each through endless years,
One minute of heaven is worth them all."

MRS. CLYDE V. MAXWELL.

ZONE MEETING AT KILMICHAEL.

On July 15 the second zone meeting of the year of the Woman's Missionary Society was held in Kilmichael, with Winona and Vaiden well represented.

Mrs. F. W. Norwood, the zone chairman, presided, with Mrs. Vince Gee acting as secretary. Rev. Mr. McKibben, Kilmichael, pastor, conducted the devotional, after which he extended a hearty welcome to the visiting societies.

Minutes of the last meeting were read and approved. One new society was reported. The following program was rendered:

Song, by Kilmichael Young People; song, "Heralds of the King," by Vaiden Young Peoople; songs and reading, by Vaiden Juniors; "Standard of Excellence for Young People," Mrs. T. C. Vaiden, of Vaiden; "How Can We Help the Juniors Reach This Standard of Excellence?" Mrs. S. K. Hoge, of Vaiden; "Have You a Recreational Committee?" Mrs. L. N. Townsend, of Winona; "How Can We Meet the Needs of Young People?" Mrs. McKibben, of Kilmichael.

Mmes. Stuckey and Johnson gave social service reports.

Benediction said by Rev. Mr. McKibben.

MRS. F. W. NORWOOD,
Chairman.
MRS. VINCE GEE,
Secretary Pro Tem.

FOR FORTY-FIVE YEARS A MEMBER OF THE WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

Dear Advocate: Pickens Auxiliary, always a live, active society, has been blessed for forty-five years with five charter members, but is now greatly bereaved in the loss of one of these, Mrs. Linnie Parker Wilburn. Truly she was one of whom the Scripture speaks when it says (slightly changed) "Thine own friend and thy father's friend forget not!" Dependable and helpful along all lines, her special delight was in preparing boxes for the orphans and such like philanthropies. Her business promptness is observable in the fact that her obligations to the society are all paid up for the year. Also, after her husbands death, she continued to pay his assessment to the church. Many ministers will learn with pain of her passing. She was an early graduate of Whitworth College, was devoted to the church, active in establishing this one, and an important woman in the town. Our only comfort is in the Christian hope that our loss is her eternal gain.

Yours faithfully,
MOLLIE A. CLARK,
Corresponding Secretary.
Pickens, Miss.

ZONE MEETING AT BLAINE, MISS.

The third district Missionary zone meeting was held in Sunflower, July 6. The following societies were represented: Drew, Wade, Ruleville, Doddsville and Blaine.

Mrs. E. C. Stancill, our new zone chairman, presided over the meeting. Mrs. J. H. Barksdale was elected secretary for the year. Many young people were present, and a very interesting program given.

Next meeting will be held at Doddsville; date will be set later.

ADVANTAGES OF A MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

By Mrs. Wils P. Johns.

We can say without fear of successful contradiction that a church without a woman's auxiliary is at least in that respect incomplete, and that the advantages of a missionary society are numerous and beyond computation. Aside from the close relations of its members, which is not to be ignored, and the benefit resulting from being brought, through the organization, closer to the pastor, there is the inspiration which comes with the knowledge that we belong to the vast army of Christian women of all lands, banded together with the one purpose of making earth more like heaven, a living link in the chain which binds us to those who in other churches have caught the vision of Jesus and realize the obligation of the Christian woman for the womanhood of the world.

It is with pride we realize that our local auxiliary is a part of the material out of which the Council is built, and has a definite, if a bit obsecure, part in the operation of our Southern Methodism, and that we are working along the same lines as hosts of women in other Protestant denominations.

Then there is a distinct advantage which comes through the literature of the missionary society. Our eyes are opened to the work being done, thus giving us a more intelligent comprehension of the various calls to which we contribute, and more information as to the expenditure of funds collected. Our interest is increased as we get deeper knowledge of the crying needs of earth's dark places. In addition, real culture is afforded by the Missionary Society. No line of the world's best literature furnishes such a rich and varied field of knowledge. There is no more interesting biography, no more momentous history, nor travels so full of adventure, as that to which one has access in the programs of the study courses and thrilling stories from Japan, Korea, China, Manchuria, Liberia, Brazil, Cuba, Mexico, and Africa. Through leaflets and the Missionary Voice we have been put in touch with writers of greatest talent who bring to us messages stimulating us to higher purposes and greater endeavor. Who can read that in China alone the outlay for Christian activities is about $80,000,000, that American missionaries number about 5,000, and that there are more than 800,000 native Christians, without ardently desiring to have a hand in the work? Does not joy come with the thought that the kingdom is a little bit nearer by your having joined the Missionary Society?

If there is an adult Missionary Society there is more likelihood that the local church will have Young People, Juniors, and Baby Divisions all organized. Having a woman's auxiliary gives an advantage over the young life of the community. It is possible through the different departments to touch and bring young folk into the church, as perhaps could not be done in any other way, while their vigor and enthusiasm and intelligent endowments can be dedicated to some holy cause, rather than have their God-given powers wasted on selfish occupations and enjoyment.

Perhaps by organizing a Missionary Society some hitherto undiscovered leader might be brought to the front and developed whose capabilities simply need directing to make a most efficient worker. Where else could she better get her outlook on life enlarged or where else could she better acquire information of the fields most needing her or hear so clearly the call for her service; as through this avenue of approach to the Lord's vineyard? Once having belonged to the Missionary Society, even the busiest woman feels that nothing else she undertakes is so worth while, and counts it such an advantage that she cannot allow home or community interest to cut her out of her rightful share in this, the world's greatest work—including as it does all classes of the needy, extending to all lands and making use of all lines of activities, and she remembers the Master Workman and this enterprise. Most glorious thought! Co-workers with Christ! Each one in our individual way of doing her part in spreading the gospel; surely this has its appeal to the earnest soul.

The greatest advantage which comes through a Missionary Society is the aid it is to personal holiness as we are concerned for others, our own lives are enriched. The more we do the greater becomes our capacity for loving, which is the fulfilling of the law, and the easier it will be to live that life in

By Rev. C. D. Atkinson, Conference Superintendent.

Samples have been received of the "Enlarged Children's Week" program which includes a splendid pageant, "The Holy Alliance." The programs can be obtained from Miss Mary Skinner, Elementary Superintendent, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn., but the program takes in most excellently the work among young people as well as children. We trust that our schools will all observe Children's Week this fall, fulfilling the slogan: "Give More Thought to Childhood and Youth."

Mrs. L. D. Chaffee, District Missionary Superintendent of the New Orleans District, in sending out her monthly letter to workers, tells of the critical condition of Mrs. A. K. McLellan at the Baptist Hospital in New Orleans. Brother McLellan is in the city with his wife, and they have the prayers of Louisiana Methodism, and the best of good wishes for her speedy recovery.

Interested as we are in the child life of our church, it is with a great deal of pleasure we acknowledge receipt in the office of a lovely little card announcing the arrival of little H. B. Hatcher, Jr., of Alexandria, La., who put in an appearance on the 8th instant. We are confident of the marked interest in all religious affairs that will be a part of the training this baby will receive in the Christian home to which he has come. We congratulate the proud mother and father.

We have a letter from Mrs. H. A. McDonald, of Rayne, La., telling us that they believe they have reached the "C" Standard, and expect to continue advancing. A request for materials and information, and an invitation to visit the school, gives us the assurance that they will continue to press forward, and that before long will be a leading school in every phase of the work.

We submit herewith a report by districts of the Sunday School Day offerings for the year, as further reports have brought this up to date:

1, Alexandria, $76.59; 2, Baton Rouge, $73.85; 3, Lake Charles, $91.85; 4, Minden, $47.12; 5, Monroe, $20; 6, Ruston, $119.50; 7, New Orleans, $169.74; 8, Shreveport, $59.68. Total, $481.41.

The training work among the leaders is progressing satisfactorily, and with many schools planned for the fall months we hope to increase our average in units to an even greater extent than last year. The report for June, recently issued, shows Louisiana with 849 Standard Training units. These were received in our colleges, Standard Training Schools and local training classes. We note that the greatest number from training classes were received at Natchitoches in classes taught by Prof. A. C. Maddox and Mrs. Zack Gallion.

At Lake Charles Dr. R. H. Wynn is teaching a class on "The Pupil" that is proving quite a success, and gives promise of raising the number of units from Lake Charles for 1927 by a goodly number. This class is in addition to the Standard Training School Lake Charles expects to hold in the fall.

On Tuesday, July 12, we opened a splendid Cokesbury School at Clay, La. We had with us at the opening Dr. W. W. Drake, pastor at Ruston, and Rev. W. D. Kleinschmidt, presiding elder of the Ruston District, both of whom rendered valuable service. Brother Claude H. Mayo is pastor at Clay, and due to his splendid efforts we had a fine number present for the opening of the school. This school was held on the circuit where the writer was licensed to preach, and it was indeed a pleasure to be with the people for the duration of the school.

Mrs. R. E. Smith taught one of the two courses while the writer taught the other. Brother Mayo has this to say in regard to the school: "I am delighted with this school and its results. It has increased my knowledge of Sunday school work and plans. By more thorough advertising, more personal appeal, by planning further ahead and keeping the matter before the people, I believe we can have a much larger school with greater benefits next year."

* * *

A splendid district-wide conference was recently held at Simsboro, in the Ruston District, which proved a success in every way. The inspirational messages were delivered by Dr. Drake and Dr. Lutz, Prof. Rawlins, and the Conference Superintendent. Mrs. Ada Thompson, District Superintendent of Elementary Work, substituted for Mrs. W. W. Holmes, Conference Superintendent of Elementary Work. District officers were elected, with few changes, and the Board of Managers of the Standard Training School met on the same day to perfect plans. The date was set for September 25-30, and Dr. Drake was elected Educational Director. A most excellent dinner was served by the good ladies of the circuit, and Brother J. T. McVey, pastor, was on hand, proving himself a fine host.

Rev. C. C. Wier, of the Alexandria District, is giving special attention in his group conferences to the Sunday Course in his district. At Robeline, Rev. H. L. Johns put over some promotion work in interest of the Training School at Natchitoches and at the group meeting at Pineville definite plans were approved for the Training School for Alexandria, Sept. 4-9 with Dr. Cleanth Brooks, Director.

Sunday morning of the 17th instant was spent at Bunkie. The pastor there is Rev. L. N. Hoffpauir. We reached there in time for the Sunday school hour and taught the Bible class for the pastor. The Bible class is one of the largest and best in the Alexandria District. This pastor gives special attention to his prayer meetings and the Men's Bible Class wherever he is sent. We enjoyed the day, including the gracious hospitality at the parsonage.

During our recent visit at Clay, La., we called to see an interesting old Cumberland Presbyterian minister in the person of Rev. John C. Lampelt, who is eighty-one years old. He has just returned from a visit to Arkansas, where he has given part of his long ministry of forty-six years.

On July 16 we baptized James William Kavanaugh, of Clay, La. The parents of this child were former pupils of mine in public schools, Mike Kavanaugh of Jackson parish, and Ruth Kendal of Lincoln parish.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCES NOTES

The Mount Olive Standard Training School was held July 17-22 and the school was a success in every way. Miss Maggie May Jones taught the unit on Pupil Study. Rev. O. S. Lewis taught "The Program of the Christian Religion." Dr. C. W. Crisler taught the unit on New Testament and Rev. J. C. Chambers taught the unit on the school. There were forty-two units of Credit issued in this school. Collins had the largest number of credits in the school followed by Mount Olive then Magee and Bethel. There were those who attended from Santee and Sharon but because of rain and other matters, many felt compelled to drop out. For the first effort, we feel greatly encouraged and feel the work was well worth while.

The Sunday School Day offering is coming in slowly. The Sunday School Board stands in great need of help at this time and I trust that the brethren who can will have the day observed on their various charges and send the money in immediately.

Pray for the work and the workers.

JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

A survey preceding the revival meeting will discover people and their affiliations that would otherwise be unknown. It will give publicity to the meeting that will be more effective than posters or printer's ink in any quantity. Incidentally you will have material to begin increasing the enrollment of your Sunday school in the fall.

Will it not be possible to have at least seven charges in each district observe Children's Week early in October—making this project more effective than Rally Day? Articles on the observance of this occasion can be found in the Magazine, in the Workers' Council, and leaflets will be furnished free upon request. Write me for any help needed.

At your next meeting of the Workers' Council, check up on your Program of Work and see what points you will be able to cover during the next three months. We will begin checking up the schools in September. See how you stand now.

The past week I have been helping Rev. J. R. Murff at McAdams. He has completed a good church building at this place, roomy, comfortable, and good-looking. Provision has been made for the Sunday school. The Methodist people have about forty members, and the Baptist church more than 200. We are overshadowed, but the Baptists are very kind and are willing to help their little sister. Brother Murff has made a foundation upon which we can build the kingdom. He is bringing Methodism up with the other advancing columns and taking a worthy part in ministering to the people. We must be prepared to welcome the people who are to come from other sections into this part of the State to engage in the dairy business. We must be equipped not only with respectable buildings but we must have a trained, local leadership to guide our own people and all newcomers. We must be united as a Conference, or else we shall soon occupy third place, and finally no place. While we are scrapping each other, the Baptist church is teaching the young people and the children according to their way of thinking, and leaving us behind gazing at the one moving procession. A divided army is not in the habit of winning victories.

FROM MELVILLE, LA.

By Rev. James A. Knight.

For the sake of making known the condition of the flood at Melville to my friends and others who are interested, I feel that I ought to have an article published in the Advocate about it. The disaster is so great in the town that I cannot describe it adequately through this medium, but it will give some idea of how terrible it is.

The levee broke just a few hundred feet below the town, releasing some 12 to 15 feet of water south of the railroad track, sweeping away and smashing to pieces practically every building on that side of town, leaving the Victor Hotel, the Standard Oil plant and a few houses standing. The water then forced its way through the road openings under the railroad track leading into the main part of town, tearing away like a mad and roaring monster at small buildings, fences, window-panes, screens, and rising from 10 to 18 feet high. Some of the low bungalows in the lower sections of town were entirely covered, with but the tip of the roof out of the water. All the household goods on scaffolds in such houses were all soaked, and most of it ruined. The loss of household goods is almost complete, with the exception of those stored up in the two-story buildings.

In the parsonage I had my books scaffolded some 6 feet from the floor, and they were all ruined in the water and mud. A bed, davenport and some bed clothing were the only other losses in the parsonage. We didn't have much to begin with, and so we couldn't lose much. Fortunately we had two beds, all the good chairs and other best pieces upstairs, and we have enough to keep house. The church pews are the only loss in the church, and some of them are not too badly damaged for temporary use. Of all the tremendous loss in all the town, the parsonage and the church have suffered the least, not even a window-pane broken by the swift current and debris. Most of what was lost could have been saved had we known beforehand how bad it would be. We all had the warnings, that is true, but the old residents there were confident that everything was safe, and, therefore, we were all caught by surprise. Experience is a costly teacher, but it is the kind of teaching that makes a lasting impression. From now on we'll know better. But Secretary Hoover says that it will not happen again. I hope he is right. If that is the case, I believe that those in authority ought to get real busy before the next rise comes in the spring.

Those who need sand to fill in low places, I invite you to come to Melville. I believe we can afford to let you have some. Somebody remarked that real estate has gone higher since the flood. In that case, "seeing is believing."

THOMPSON FAMILY REUNION.

On Tuesday, July 12, the third annual reunion of the Thompson family was held at Bethel church, near New Hebron, Miss., with a large attendance of relatives, descendants of the three brothers, Messrs. Robert, Toliver and Dudley Thompson, who once lived in Lawrence County. There were also a number of friends present. All of the living sons and daughters of Messrs. Robert and Toliver Thompson were present, except Dr. R. W. Thompson (son of Robert), who lives in Texas. They were also represented by great-great-grandchildren.

The well-kept church, which was built in 1881, and grounds were decorated and beautified for the occasion by those living near by. Rev. Mr. King, the pastor, preached a very interesting and appropriate sermon at 11 o'clock. A bountiful spread of good things to eat was served at the noon hour and a very pleasant time spent socially until 2:30 o'clock, when all reassembled in the church for a business meeting, Rev. G. H. Thompson presiding.

The following officers were elected: General chairman, Rev. G. H. Thompson; vice chairman, E. M. Thompson; general secrtary, Mrs. W. P. Howell; treasurer, Miss Christine Thompson; historian, Miss Anna Marie Thompson; secretary to Mr. Toliver Thompson's family, Jim Buckley; secretary to Mr. Dudley Thompson's family, Albert Thompson; secretary to Mr. Robert Thompson's family, Clyde Thompson; program committee, Mrs. J. F. Gibson, Miss Winnie Thompson and Clyde Thompson.

Five marriages, three births and no deaths since last meeting were reported. After singing, "Blest Be the Tie," a dismissal prayer was made by Brother King.

Good-byes were said, and all left for their homes feeling grateful to a heavenly Father for the many blessings all enjoy and looking forward to the next meet, which will be held July 4, 1928.

MRS. W. P. HOWELL,
General Secretary.

ATTRACTIVE WOMEN

If You Would Be Attractive You Must Be Healthy

A beautiful woman is always admired. There are many types of beauty. But no woman can be truly beautiful unless she is healthy. Radiant vitality is always attractive however plain a woman's features may be.

Many a woman has found her health improved thru the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Weakness, loss of weight, and a pale complexion were a few of the things of which Mrs. J. C. Taylor of Box 211, Tallahassee, Florida, complained before she started taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. "I could not even sit down and talk to a friend for any length of time," she states, "I would forget what I was talking about and felt so blue." Mrs. Taylor is so pleased with the work of the Vegetable Compound that she keeps a bottle of it in the house at all times—and when it is empty, her husband makes sure that she has a new bottle. "I have regained my strength," Mrs. Taylor writes. "I can do all my housework now and I feel just fine."

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is made from roots and herbs and has been growing in popularity among women for over fifty years.

THE OLD FLUTTER MILL.

By Rev. W. W. Hartsfield.

The great moving force of life, that carries us along without choice of alternative, brings us, now and then, to a state of musing. The fire of memory burns. We see the long line of boys, gathered at "the old swimming hole." The flutter mill is among the outstanding memories; a bark trough conveyed the waters of a streamlet to the wings of its wheel, a cord served as a belt to convey motion to other things.

Spring passed, the streamlet dried, this miniature plant was still. A thunderstorm came, the rushing water demolished the flutter mill; it was rebuilt, but the water had passed and the streamlet was dry again. A September gale came, for hours and hours the rain soaked the earth, the streamlet began to flow continuously.

The line of boys is broken; some have slept for more than three decades, the others have learned in the school of life that real power acts through silent, unobtrusive forces.

"The gospel is the power of God unto salvation." The Rev. J. M. Bradley gracefully preached it with great force. The revival came, not as the thunderstorm, but in the silent, unobtrusive way; Senatobia station responded to its great moving force; nine were added to the church, five on profession of faith.

In the spirit of service and worship we move towards the kingdom of God.

Senatobia, Miss.

REVIVAL AT MIZE.

The revival at Mize, where Rev. B. H. Williams is pastor, closed Sunday night, July 10, with the house full and over a hundred on the outside.

Evangelist Claude P. Jones with his party, Mr. H. M. Scott, musical director and young people's worker, and Mrs. Jones, pianist and children's worker, have a warm place in the hearts of the community.

The services from the beginning have attracted crowds from the county at large, and much was accomplished by the evangelist in bringing our town to a man to Christian unity than ever before.

Dr. Jones is one of the strongest preachers ever heard in this county, and has a fine team of workers with him.

Hundreds came forward and pledged anew their hearts and lives to Christ, and the church. Many were received on last service for life service and church membership. Five young ladies came in answer to the call for life service, and gave their lives for missionary work.

On Sunday afternoon at the men's meeting there was a committee that issued an invitation to Dr. Jones and his party to return for a county-wide revival next July, and pledged to build a tabernacle for him if he would return. Over fifty men signed a contract to guarantee the expense of a county-wide revival. The people are hoping that Dr. Jones will accept the invitation, and they pledge him their prayers and support for next year.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

Christ, which we wish to present to those who do not know, self-sacrifice for those incident to service for our Lord through the channel of our Missionary Society will be a large factor in developing our lives to the largest possibility.

Then it is our plain duty as well as privilege to help carry out the command of our Lord, "Go and preach the gospel," if we cannot go, we can help send, and there is no other organization in the church that has for its sole purpose this last command of his. Summed up, it is proven that a Womans Missionary Society is an indispensable part of the activities of any church.

It is to be regretted that there is less popular enthusiasm in subscribing to the campaigning for Christ than there is to the campaigning of a would-be United States Senator.

YOUR GREATEST PROBLEM—THAT BOY OF YOURS.

What kind of a man will he be ten, twenty, thirty years from now. Every parent knows it depends entirely upon the training he is getting now, his associations, ideals and aspirations.

Mr. Robert K. Morgan, Principal of Morgan School, Petersburg, Tenn., has been training boys thirty years. He know boys. He wants your boy. He recognizes in every boy possibilities which if developed will make him a leader. He wants to develop that trait in boys. Robt. K. Morgan is a Christian gentleman of strong, wholesome inspiring personality and his school is a material projection of that character.

Write Mr. L. I. Mills, Secretary Morgan School, Petersburg, Tenn., to-day. He will send you a catalog and tell you about what this school can do for your boy.

Constipation! How to Keep Bowels Regular

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated men, women, children, and particularly old folks, had to be kept constantly "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all headaches, biliousness, indigestion and stomach misery, he did not believe that a sickening "purge" or "physic" was necessary.

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he discovered a laxative which helps to establish natural bowel "regularity" even for those chronically constipated. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes a gentle, easy bowel movement but, best of all, it never gripes, sickens, or upsets the system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless, and so pleasant that even a cross, feverish, bilious, sick child gladly takes it.

Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine or write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, for a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE and just see for yourself.

Dr. Caldwell's SYRUP PEPSIN

ANSWER TO BROTHER RAMSEY'S CHALLENGE.

The Rev. John W. Ramsey has challenged me, through the columns of this paper, to meet him in public debate on the following questions:

1. Resolved, That the six days of creation were periods of time involving more than six days of twent-four hours each.

2. Resolved, That a man can accept the theory of evolution and remain an orthodox Christian.

3. Resolved, That evolution is the true theory of creation rather than the Genesis history.

Permit me to reply to this challenge under each question seriatim.

1. "The six days of creation were periods of time involving more than six days of twenty-four hours each." I believe this to be true, and I think most Bible scholars will so agree; furthermore, I am confident that it can be proven to the satisfaction of any unbiased jury of intelligent men. But why should two Methodist preachers leave their work of preaching Jesus Christ to lost men and women and meet to "cross words" in an old-fashioned joint debate on a question of such relative unimportance, when such debate would most probably engender strife and stir up un-Christian feelings in the church which we both love so well?

True, this question may seem quite important to Brother Ramsey. Possibly he believes that the whole plan of salvation must stand or fall with his six-day theory. But I believe a man may be a useful, worthy and happy Christian regardless of his views of the exact duration of each of the six days mention; so I feel no special call to disturb him in his belief, nor to denounce him to all the world as a heretic. Even if he be wrong in that one particular, it does not render him unworthy of confidence and fellowship in the church and in the ministry. If a man had to be exactly correct in all his opinions in order to be a Christian, who then could be saved?

We could get some publicity out of a joint debate. "The pastor of the Methodist church in the small inland village of Marietta," and the pastor of the Methodist church at Chunky, Miss., might get themselves into the limelight; but such publicity at the expense of peace and harmony in my church would be too costly for me.

2. "A man can accept the theory of evolution and remain an orthodox Christian." I have never made this assertion. I did not use the word "orthodox," because said word might be construed by some one to mean more than I wish to affirm. To be "orthodox" would mean one thing to a Jew and something entirely different to a Christian; it would mean one thing to a Roman Catholic and something else to a Baptist. Strike out the word "orthodox" and the question will state my views.

3. "Evolution is the true theory of Creation rather than the Genesis history." I have never made an assertion which even remotely resembles this question. On the contrary I have stated repeatedly that I am not an evolutionist, for I do not believe that the evolution hypothesis can adequately account for man's origin. Furthermore, I accept the Bible as a book of divine origin, containing God's message to man. But I cannot be sure that I understand it all, therefore I do not set up my interpretation thereof as being the final ultimatum of all truth. I simply reserve the right to interpret and understand certain controverted passages according to the light which God has given me, instead of binding myself under a no less penalty than that of having my Christian character destroyed, to govern myself according to the opinions and interpretations of monkey-mad Modernists, or frenzied Fundamentalists, or anybody else!

Now, I am willing to discuss the various matters wherein Brother Ramsey and I differ, either by correspondence or through the columns of any reputable journal whose editor would be willing to clutter up his columns with our stuff—provided there be a space limit for each article, just as there must be a time limit for each speech in joint debate. Of course, a discussion by correspondence would require no limit except the endurance of the correspondents.

W. T. BAZZEL.

Hot Weather Dries Out Your Kidneys, Liver and Bowels

Perspiration carries off body moisture and the liver and bowels become dry and constipated. Then—biliousness, headaches, sour stomach; the heat makes you drowsy and lazy, and your skin breaks out with pimples and boils.

Don't take calomel. That's wrong—calomel is mercury—a dangerous drug. It jars the liver and cleans the bowels, that's true. But the damage it does to them, ugh! It crashes into your system like a charge of dynamite and makes it numb. It stifles the muscles of the stomach and bowels, takes YOU a day to recuperate and no telling how long for your bowels.

All you need is Dodson's Liver Tone. Take a spoonful at night and you wake up feeling great. It doesn't upset you, but cleans you out good. You don't lose a day from your work and you can eat anything you want.

Get the big bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone from your nearest store. They all have it. Keep it in the house so you will have it handy to take nights before going to bed.

FROM THE "FRENCH FIELD."

Dear Christian Friends: According to what the people have said and what I have seen, we closed last night at Bayou Cane, a new place where the gospel hasn't been preached for years, one of the most successful revivals Houma and its surrounding communities have witnessed for years. Bayou Cane is about three or four miles from Houma, with a population of three or four hundred, and never have I seen a place where the gospel was more needed. The day I moved the tent there, you should have been there to see and hear the men and even boys and girls blaspheming the name of God, having no respect for any one. I said, "Lord, here is the place where thy gospel is needed, for we believe and know that thy gospel is still the power of God unto salvation." I assure you after the second preaching night, you wouldn't have believed that we were in the same place any more. We, with the gospel of our Lord, chased Satan from his throne and placed in his place the humble Jesus of Nazareth.

The Rev. A. D. Martin, pastor of Terrebonne Mission, did the preaching. Brother Martin is one of the best French preachers we have in the French Field, and I assure you that he preached effective gospel sermons.

Coming back to Bayou Cane, I want to tell you that we were surprised with the meeting from beginning to end. We had made just a few seats for the first night, and, to our surprise, the people flocked in like bees to their hives. Then from night to night the crowd increased, and last night, which was the closing night, it was estimated that we had over four hundred people, and I also haven't any doubt about it. In closing Brother Martin opened the doors of the church to give a chance to those who wanted to unite with our church. Two came forward and gave their hearts to Christ. You might be tempted to say that that is not much from a big crowd of people, but in spite of our endeavors to explain them how to do to join our church, being all Romans, you know, they were afraid to come, not knowing what we would ask them. I am glad to tell you, however, that after those two had joined a father of a large family told Brother Martin after the service that he and all his family wanted to join. After which a mother of a large family of young boys and girls told me that she, too, wanted all her children to join; and many more are in the same condition—in fact, they told me that about fifty spoke of joining our church.

Christian friends, I think we have a golden opportunity to open some French work among those people, but we must act at once.

If a little French chapel could be erected among them, I believe we would get the most of them. If any of you have some of the Lord's money to spare, send it to Dr. R. H. Harper, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, to help to erect a small chapel which would mean a great deal to the Lord's work among the French, for they are all French. Pray for that place, brethren, and let us act altogether, and we shall hear the Lord say, "Well done, good and faithful servants."

PREACHERS' MEETING, NORTHERN END GRENADA DISTRICT.

At the call of the presiding elder, Rev. E. S. Lewis, the preachers of the northern end of the Grenada District met in Water Valley, Miss., July 12, and discussed methods of solving the problems that are confronting us today.

The first topic for discussion was how to prepare for the eleven o'clock service. Rev. Carroll Varner led in this discussion and gave some very helpful suggestions about how to prepare for this very important service. We closed this discussion realizing more fully than ever, possibly, the greatness of the task that is ours in preaching the Word.

In the afternoon we discussed the high points in a successful pastorate. Most of the ministers who were present took part in this discussion and all of us got some very helpful suggestions. We discussed some topics that are of vital importance to us as pastors.

Another topic for discussion was the preachers' reading. Rev. Shed Hill Caffey led in this discussion and gave us the method that he uses in his reading. Rev. W. W. Woollard, who was the St. Paul among us, gave us some very timely suggestions in regard to our reading. We all agreed that in order to be a useful preacher a man must do a great deal of reading.

We spent the day together very pleasantly and profitably. The ladies of First Church, Water Valley, served a very delicious lunch at the noon hour. Their hospitality added a great deal to the pleasure of the day. We will meet again in September. Our next meeting will be at Oxford, Miss.

NEW ORLEANS

CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

Vol. 73—No. 31. Official Organ of the Louisiana, Mississippi, and North Mississippi Conferences, Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Whole No. 3660.

HENRY T. CARLEY, D.D., Editor. NEW ORLEANS, LA., THURSDAY, AUGUST 4, 1927. CHAS. O. CHALMERS, Manager.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

"Self is the only prison that can ever bind the soul,
And love the only angel that can bid the gates unroll."

"ORTHODOXY."

We are both surprised and grieved by the construction placed by some of the brethren upon the brief editorial, "Orthodoxy," which appeared on the first page of the June 23 issue of the Advocate. What we intended to be—and what we believe was—a timely comment upon what appears to us as an unfortunate tendency on the part of some good people to measure the doctrinal soundness of some other good people by the standard only of their own opinions, seems to have been interpreted as an "attack" upon all those who humbly hold the essentials of the Christian faith. Such interpretation is as far from the correct understanding of the editorial in question as it is from what was in the mind of the writer.

The point of the editorial as we had it in mind and as we thought we expressed it was simply this—that it is practically a psychological impossibility for any two men to think exactly alike about anything, but this difference of opinion is not to be taken by the one as invalidating the moral character or religious experience of the other. To take such position under the guise of "orthodoxy" seems to us to imply, if not assert, the "closed mind and crystallized intellect."

To the "rigidly orthodox" Baptist, the Methodist is certainly "unorthodox" as regards some passages of Scripture; and the same is true when the comparison is turned the other way. The same differences of opinion may bring about the charge of "unorthodoxy" within the group of those who in general hold the same view—as, for example, the "open communion" and "close communion" Baptists, or the "second blessing" and "gradual growth" Methodists. And the individual may become so "rigidly orthodox" as to classify as "unorthodox" all those who do not accept his own opinions.

Perhaps we should have been better understood—certainly we should not have been so misunderstood—if we had simply quoted the words of Mr. Wesley as expressing the thought we had in mind. We quote them here, not as an "authoritative settling" of the question that seems to have been raised in the minds of some, but as the sober expression of the mind of the great and good founder of Methodism. These words are found in Wesley's Sermon LX, "On the Trinity:"

"Whatsoever the generality of people may think, it is certain that opinion is not religion: No, not right opinion; assent to one, or to ten thousand truths. There is a wide difference between them: even right opinion is as distant from religion as the east is from the west. Persons may be quite right in their opinions, and yet have no religion at all; and on the other hand, persons may be truly religious, who hold many wrong opinions. Can any one possibly doubt this, while there are Romanists in the world? For who can deny, not only that many of them formerly have been truly religious (as Thomas a Kempis, Gregory Lopez, and the Marquis de Renty), but that many of them, even at this day, are real inward Christians? And yet what a heap of erroneous opinions do they hold, delivered by tradition from their fathers! Nay, who can doubt of it while there are Calvinists in the world, assertors of absolute predestination? For who will dare to affirm that none of these are truly religious men? Not only many of them in the last century were burning and shining lights, but many of them are now real Christians, loving God and all mankind. And yet what are all the absurd opinions of all the Romanists in the world, compared to that one, that the God of love, the wise, just, merciful Father of the spirits of all flesh, has, from all eternity, fixed an absolute, unchangeable, irresistible decree, that part of mankind shall be saved, do what they will, and the rest damned, do what they can!

"Hence, we cannot but infer, that there are ten thousand mistakes, which may consist with real religion; with regard to which every candid, considerate man will think and let think. But there are some truths more important than others. It seems there are some which are of deep importance. I do not term them fundamental truths; because that is an ambiguous word: and hence there have been so many warm disputes about the number of fundamentals. But surely there are some, which it nearly concerns us to know, as having a close connection with vital religion. And doubtless we may rank among these, that contained in the words above cited, 'There are Three that bear record in Heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these Three are One.'"

If it be not allowed the editor to claim that he is "orthodox" as was Mr. Wesley, perhaps it may be allowed to him to plead that he is at least not any more "unorthodox."

WHO GETS IT?

Doubtless many of our readers "noted with interest" a recent statement to the effect that the rise in the price of cotton has added half a billion dollars to the wealth of the South. We wonder how much truth there is in the statement. We recall very well that the compresses and warehouses of the South were filled last fall to overflowing with cotton that had been sold by the growers at the prevailing low prices. We recall the fact that business in the South was hurt very seriously by the glutted market, and a vigorous campaign was carried on to bring about a voluntary reduction of the cotton acreage in order that the surplus might be consumed and a new crop raised at a profitable price. Nature took care of the reduction program to some extent at last by the disastrous overflow. Now that the surplus is out of the hands of the growers, the price has gone to unexpected heights, and we are being told that the South is half a billion dollars richer. Maybe somebody in the South shared in the benefits of the higher price—but we venture the assertion that the cotton raiser is not one of them. There is a lot of economic fallacy in the assumption that the producer always gets his share of the price of the raw product. The cotton was grown in the South, to be sure; but the profits have gone somewhere else. We wonder where.

LEARNING FROM A PRIZE FIGHT.

Approximately 80,000 people paid approximately $1,000,000 recently to see two men fight approximately ten minutes. Practically all the daily newspapers gave column after column of publicity to the fight, and probably millions of people listened to the account of the affair as it was broadcast from the ringside. The fighters themselves received approximately a quarter of a million dollars apiece for their part in the affray, the National and State Governments received an appreciable sum in the way of taxes, and the promoter is reputed to have cleared a comfortable fortune for staging the encounter. And now reports indicate that a greater fight is to be staged within the next few months, with more money involved, more newspaper publicity provided, more people in attendance, and possibly more radio fans listening in when the fight takes place. Why?

Doubtless many of those who are interested in such things are still savages enough to get a thrill from the brutal physical contest; but there are probably many who manifest interest because an exhibition is being given by those who are generally recognized as the best in the world in their field. People are always interested in the best.

There is a suggestion here that is at least worth thinking about. Mediocre attainments and commonplace achievements do not attract the attention of the world. The extraordinary man cannot avoid extraordinary attention. Prizefighting is a mighty poor business—but the best prizefighter in the world can be sure of plenty of notice. The best in anything is worth striving for.

ECHOES.

By Anna Hamilton Wood.

Lord, save me from the echoes of my sins,
From memory of all that hinders me;
And every day, as my new life begins,
May it dawn shadowless, unfearing, free.
Save me from echoes of a love whose cry
Once tore and tortured; from the unkind word,
The sneer, the cruelty; the curt reply,
The little memories of times I erred.
Save me from the echoes of sad things I saw
In faces of my fellowmen; from greed,
Hypocrisy which hides within the law;
From superstitions of a worn out creed.
But let one echo beat through all my fears,
Lest I forget—Thy footstep down the years!
—In Baltimore Southern Methodist.

SOLVING THE PROBLEM.

As a member of the Board of Christian Literature of the Louisiana Conference I feel it my duty and responsibility to the New Orleans Christian Advocate to appeal to you in a most special manner to help right now in every way you can to carry on the Advocate, not only till Conference time, but for all time. We cannot do without our Conference paper, and no preacher can afford to see it go down. We are face to face with the great and serious fact that the paper which forms the basis of information and connection in our Conference is in danger of cessation from operation. We must meet and solve the problem of the continuance of the Advocate.

The first suggestion I wish to give is—Pray. Yes, pray for the Advocate, pray for its faithful editor, pray for the business manager, pray for the printer and the helper about the shop. Back them up with your prayers, and the paper will have twice the power, influence and usefulness for God than it has now. Let us pray, pray, pray.

The second suggestion I wish to make is—Give. Yes, give the Advocate to your people. Give sample copies in lots of twenty-five and fifty. If your people do not voluntarily subscribe then subscribe for them. Spend some of the Lord's tithe money in subscriptions, and it will pay you back in greater devidends of intensified interest, work and paid-up church finances. It will put a zeal into your people to really accomplish these things worth while. I speak from experience. I have already given six yearly subscriptions and I expect to give ten more before Aug. 1. It has already helped, and I expect to see more accomplished than ever before.

The third and last suggestion is—Boost. The preacher who has knocked on the Advocate heretofore has hurt himself irreparably. And not only hurt himself but the preacher who followed him and the charge. Then ultimately by the same process year by year he has hurt the whole Conference and the paper that helps to make us a great connectional church. Unless we stand together, brethren, we shall soon fall apart. If things are not what they should be, help to make them better. A carpenter doesn't use dynamite to repair a leaking roof.

If the Advocate is worth while, boost for it. If it serves a purpose, boost for it. If it is a needed medium Conference-wide, then, my dear brother—Boost for it.

This I humbly submit to your prayerful thought and consideration.

Your brother in Christ Jesus,

CLAUDE H. MAYO.

"FUNDAMENTALISM."

By Hon. T. M. Evans.

I have been requested by a number of persons to write on the question of Fundamentalism. I find no such word in Webster's New International Dictionary. However, a fundamentalist is one who believes in fundamentalism, and fundamental comes from the word "fund," which is defined in Webster's New International Dictionary as, 1, bottom foundation; groundwork; basis; 2, an accumulation or deposit, or resources from which supplies are or may be drawn; a store; a more or less permanent stock or supply; as, a fund of wisdom or good sense; formerly used also of material things; 3, Fundamental—of or pertaining to the foundation or basis; serving for the foundation, hence, essential, as an element, principle, or law, important; original; elementary; primary; basal; as, a fundamental truth; a fundamental axiom; 4, situated at the bottom; being or constituting the lowest formation basal; as, the fundamental rock; 5, Fundamental, a principle, rule; law, or article, which serves as the groundwork or a system; essential part; as, the fundamentals of the Christian faith."

It will be observed that every institution must have a fundamental basis. If we take mathematics we find that the fundamental basis of mathematics is contained in the four tables and rules, addition, subtraction, multiplication and division. If you destroy either of these basal truths then you would destroy the usefulness and truthfulness of mathematics, as these four tables and rules constitute the foundation of the whole mathematical system from the primary to the last analysis of all mathematical problems, and to say that every man has a right to his own opinion about the truth or accuracy of these fundamental principles of mathematics, and that he might substitute any mathematical delusions for these mathematical principles and claim to be a mathematician is only to expose our ignorance, and to presume on the want of intelligence of those to whom we speak.

So in law, every State has a constitutional system that forms the fundamental principles of the Government. The Constitiution of the State of Mississippi contains the fundamental principles upon which the State must stand or fall. And the courts in construing the law follow those fundamental principles which have been announced and handed down during the past ages, only as they are changed by the statute of the State, or action of the legislature, within its constitutional limitations.

But there are those among us now who seem to have failed to comprehend that the Christian religion is a principal rule of law or article which serves as a groundwork for a system, essential part, while, as a matter of fact, the Christian religion is founded on a foundation as true and steadfast and as necessary as the four tables and rules in mathematics. You might as well undertake to maintain a system of mathematics without four tables and rules as to maintain the Christian religion without the foundation upon which it is founded, which is contained in the Holy Bible, the inspired Word of God. If we disregard the plain statement of fact contained in the Holy Bible given to us by inspiration, we have nothing but a fable.

The Christian religion is not a myth or folklore, neither is it a matter of sentiment; neither has the Christian religion changed since the foundation of the world to the present day, nor can it be changed by the church or any human agency. It is the gift of God, and we must accept it as he gave it to us or reject it.

It is based on a foundation both sure and steadfast. First, there must be a God, and if there be no God the Christian religion then is a fake. Second, that God which is essential to the Christian religion must be the God which he represented himself to man to be in the beginning and through the ages previous to the coming of Christ, and as described by Christ, or he is a fake and unworthy of the respect of men. Therefore, we must resort to the Holy Bible as the Book containing the truths in regard to the person and power of God. And from this we find that God is the Sovereign Power of all the universe who is composed of three persons, God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost. That this Sovereign Power created the heavens and all that in them is, and that this Sovereign Power is the life and the light and the truth. And he created the angels in heaven with the power of volition like unto himself, who could choose between right and wrong, and that the devil and a host of angels raised war in heaven and were cast out.

Then when God the Sovereign Power created man he breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and man became a living soul. If this is not true the whole Christian teaching is a fabrication. The scientist has been able to analyze the body and the blood of man, but has never been able to analyze the life of man, yet life is a fact that cannot be denied, but like the wind, "whence it cometh or whither it goeth" cannot be accounted for except by the statement of fact contained in the Holy Bible, spoken by inspiration; therefore, he who declines to accept these statements of fact contained in the Holy Bible has no right to pose as a Christian. So, first, we cannot account for God except in the Holy Bible; second, we cannot account for life except by the statement of fact contained in the Holy Bible that God created man and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and he became a living soul.

But then we are confronted with another fact; if we should destroy the Holy Bible and everything that has been said by Christ or written by Christian disciples, we would still be confronted with death, which is evidenced by profane history from the creation of the world, and this fact of death must be accounted for and there must be a reason for it.

We are further confronted with the fact through profane history and by reason of our own observation, that the human family, except so far as it has been civilized by the teaching of the Christian religon as contained in the Holy Bible, is criminal in all his nature. The daily papers bear testimony to the criminal disposition of the un-Christianized man which must also be accounted for.

There are those, who even profess to be Christians, who claim that the God that they worship is a loving God, and that he is too good to punish either a human being or an animal, that it would be contrary to his nature to create a human being and then punish him. Now these good people must admit one of three things: first, that God did not make man or have anything to do with his creation; or, second, that God created him to suffer and intended from the beginning that he should suffer all kinds of pain that the human family is subject to, and to possess the criminal nature which has been and is yet exhibited in man; or, third, that God created him a holy and righteous being free from all afflictions and sorrow, and that the man created by God, under some influences contrary to the will of this righteousness and loving Father, by his own voluntary act, brought upon himself and his posterity all of the afflictions that man is subjected to, which ends in death. Fourth, we must charge the God of the universe as being a devil himself, filled with all kinds of envy and malice and every evil inclination of the human family, or that the human family, after the creation, imbibed this evil spirit from some other being or source contrary to and in opposition to the God of love and the God of mercy.

Now the fundamental basis of the Christian religion is that God is a Sovereign Power composed of three persons, God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost, who exists from everlasting to everlasting.

And that this God created the heavens and all that in them is, and created the earth and all that in it is, and created man out of the dust of the earth and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and he became a living soul, in the image of the triune God, pure and holy without sin, and then he created him to be the sovereign power of this world or the planet on which we live and gave him dominion over all things except the Tree of Knowledge; endowed him with the power of volition to choose between right and wrong and pointed out to him the tree of life of which he might eat and live forever, and pointed out to him the tree of knowledge and warned him: "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die."

That there is a devil, who had been cast out of heaven with all the angels who followed him, and that this devil appeared to Adam in the Garden of Eden, and that Adam in the exercise of the volition which God had given him chose to follow the suggestions of Satan and allied himself with the enemy of God and therefore brought upon himself the penalty of death. And that by this act man partook of the nature of the devil and became a criminal by nature and became subject to every affliction to which the human family has been subjected since the creation of the world.

That after Adam's transgression Adam, then being the sovereign power of the earth, God the Sovereign Power of heaven, entered into a covenant with Adam as the sovereign power of the earth—this covenant among the nations of this day would be called a treaty, by which it was provided that God the Sovereign Power of heaven would send his Son, one of the Three Powers, and who was with the Father from the beginning and without whom nothing was created that was created, to take upon himself the flesh and blood of men and to shed his blood as an atonement for the transgressions of men, and to redeem a lost world, and that by reason of such redemption men after death might live again, and that all men who believe on him might in this life have a new heart created within them, and a right spirit renewed within them. And from the earliest history that we have of the human family, even profane history, bears evidence of the fact that those who accept the doctrine of the Atonement and believe in the Christ have demonstrated in their lives a different heart and a different spirit to those who have rejected him. Therefore, in order to be a Christian, it is necessary to accept Christ as the Son of God, who was with him from the beginning, and by whom all things were made, as the Redeemer of the world, by the shedding of his blood and his bodily resurrection from the grave and ascension to heaven.

But there are those who say that they will accept him not as the Son of God, begotten by the Holy Ghost, but as the Son of Joseph, who became the Son of God by way of a new birth, and that he came as the Son of God to teach us how to live, both by precept and by example, but they cannot believe that he was begotten by the Holy Ghost or that he was raised bodily from the dead; that it is not necessary to believe either. If such be true then Christ was only an adventurer or an imposter. He was an adventurer in that he brought upon himself persecution even to the crucifixion by holding himself out to the world as the Messiah. He was an imposter in that he held himself out to the world as the Son of God, and as having been given all power on earth by the Father, in that he is able to raise the dead, to heal the sick, and to open the eyes of the blind and in that he himself declared: "I am the way, the truth and the life," also that whomsoever believeth on him should be saved and those who believed not were already condemned. Therefore the Christian believes that Christ was raised from the dead and that we, like him, shall also be raised from the dead, and that he was crucified as the fulfillment of the covenant between God the Sovereign Power of heaven, and Adam the sovereign power of this world. Therefore, the Christian religion is based on a treaty between God the Sovereign Power of heaven and Adam the sovereign power of the earth, and has been fulfilled by Christ when he announced upon the cross: "It is finished." A statute or principal rule of law or article can only be altered or changed by the same power that created it. A treaty or covenant between nations can only be altered or changed by the consent of both parties to the treaty or covenant. And since in the case of the Christian religion a covenant or treaty between the kingdom of heaven and the kingdom of this world by which man was to be redeemed and upon which the Christian church is founded, cannot be changed by any man or organization of men, but can only be changed by the two powers who created it. And this treaty having been made for all ages and all men and having been entirely fulfilled by the kingdom of heaven, cannot now be revoked or altered. No change of the fundamental principle was made by Jesus Christ; he only substituted baptism and the Lord's Supper, in memory of the fulfillment of the covenant by his life, death and resurrection from the grave and ascension to heaven, instead of circumcision and burnt offerings which were instituted as an evidence of our faith in the fulfillment of the covenant by the kingdom of heaven.

Therefore the Christian religion accepts and teaches that all men have been redeemed without regard to race or color by the atonement made by Jesus Christ, and that it only awaits our acceptance of that atonement for our transgressions, that we may have a new heart created within us and the right spirit renewed within us and become the sons of God, and these constitute the orthodox doctrines of Christianity.

The trouble with the modern Christians is that they reject Jesus Christ as the atonement for sin and propose to reform the world with a "cat o' nine tails," by making their neighbors live as they say they ought to live, and meddling with all other social, political and domestic affairs of the community and the country.

We are more anxious to send to the heathen nations of the world our mode of dressing and social life than we are the doctrines of the Atonement and the Redemption of the world.

It may be that many of our most devout Christians live and die without any definite knowledge of the fundamental principles of Christianity.

Many men have followed their nation's flag on the battlefield to death, who had never read the Constitution of their country or had any definite knowledge of what the Constitution comprehended, but were as loyal to their country and their Constitution as if they had been fully advised. And the same is true as to the membership of the Christian church.

However, the fundamental principles of the Constitution remained the same and were not impaired by the uninformed mind of its loyal soldiers and citizens.

THE SCULPTURE OF GOD.

By Rev. James W. Sells.

Edwin Markham is quoted as saying that the most beautiful line of English poetry is found in the book of Job—"Thou changest his countenance and sendest him away."

The face of man is plastic, and is moulded by the experiences of life. Times of sorrow, anger, disappointment, joy, happiness, and satisfaction all leave their imprint on the face of man. Life may batter him, he may be almost conquered, he may even give up, or he may win. But whatever happens, the result will be written on his face.

God does carve on the face of man the history of his life. But "thou changest his countenance." When a man comes out of his sin to God and really finds God, his friends soon realize that the fingers of God have furrowed out the signs of sin. The wrinkles of sorrow have become beautiful. The marks of defeat have been carved into lines of determination, and man is sent away a new creature. One's countenance reveals the sculpture of God.

A CHALLENGE TO FAIRNESS.

By Rev. Arthur M. Shaw.

A considerable amount of ill-considered railing has been indulged against our educational commission for having passed a resolution deprecating the tendency of a popular wave of hysteria to force anti-evolution legislation through the various State assemblies. It is assumed that the commission presumed to speak for the Southern Methodist Church. I do not so understand their action; although our church has never gone on record as favoring such legislation, and it is hardly thinkable that it ever will. The commission spoke as a body having considerable interest and responsibility in connection with the cause of Christian Education; and it is pretty safe to say that they voiced the sentiment of a majority of educators, connected not only with our schools, but with Christian schools generally.

Evolution is not extensively or intensively taught in our high schools. I talk with hundreds of high school students, and find that most of them have heard of it mainly through the pulpit. Comparatively few of them study biology; still fewer, geology; and those who study either, rarely think of it as having any considerable religious bearing until told by some zealous churchman.

I do not know how much of the theory of evolution is true. After rather extensive and painstaking study, I am convinced that some of it is true; and I should not be shocked, nor have my Christian faith impaired, to learn that it operated as the cosmic process by which the "one increasing purpose" of our Heavenly Father is being progressively fulfilled. But I feel quite certain that whatever is false about it will be found out by scientific men. It can be discovered by no other. And, having had considerable contact with high school faculties, I believe that most of these splendid men and women are Christians, and that practically all of those who are not, are too conscientious, and have the moral welfare of youth too much at heart, to teach the doctrine in such a way as to undermine faith or morals. And, since the rank and file of us are not scientists, and, technically speaking, are neither educators nor educated, would it not be wisest for us to choose our educators with utmost care, and leave the teaching to them? Would it not be prudent for us to elect to our legislatures men of wisdom and character, and leave the legislation to them?

I have heard hundreds of men and women clamoring for legislation to prohibit vaccination against smallpox. Had such clamor become general, legislatures could have been coerced into such action—with dire consequences to the health of our country!

However, if a majority of conscientious citizens feel that the welfare of our youth depends on an evolution law, by all means let us have such legislation. But let it not be shaped by sectarian bias, or religious prejudice. Let it be fair! Religon can gain nothing from unfair and one-sided action in such a matter. Even if the objective is altogether praiseworthy, one-sided legislation will certainly do more harm than good.

Let us, then, have laws prohibiting any employee in any of our tax-supported schools from teaching the theory of evolution—particularly, the evolution of man from a lower order of life—as an established fact of science. But, let the same law provide that, in the science departments, wherever the subject of evolution is involved in the subject-matter taught, it shall be presented fairly, as a theory, together with the history of its rise and development, its present status in the scientific thought of the world, and the various forms of evidence adduced by scientists in its support; so far as these matters can be compassed within the curriculum of the school.

The reasonableness and fairness of this will readily appear. For, it is certain that the theory has not been proved as a whole. And it is equally certain that, as an hypothesis, its profound effect upon modern scientific thinking is a historic fact; that it is now the dominant theory in the scientific world; and that an impressive array of evidence supports it as a key that fits many of the facts of life. All this the student has a right to know. And if his education goes very far, he will know it some day. When he comes to face the full force of the doctrine, it will mean much to him if his instructors, both in religion and in general education, have prepared his mind to discern and deal with its implications.

WILLIAM BEADLE.

A Tribute from Rev. C. C. Wier, a Former Pastor.

On May 20, 1927, occurred the death of William Beadle at his home in Lafayette, La., where he had resided for nearly fifty years. Brother Beadle was born in St. Mary Parish Aug. 2, 1849. He was married to Miss Mary Aucoin, April 28, 1873. To this union was given ten children, three sons and seven daughters. Those left to mourn their loss are his dear widow and the following children: Misses Adeline and Onecia, who still reside in Lafayette; Mrs. A. E. Butt, Houston, Tex.; Mrs. J. W. Faulk, wife of Rev. John W. Faulk, of the Louisiana Conference; Wesley E. Beadle, Beaumont, Tex.; Mrs. Enos Stutes, Baton Rouge, La.; four grandsons, four granddaughters, and one great-granddaughter.

His survivors are all active Christian people, and appreciate the beautiful life lived by their departed one.

Soon after Brother Beadle moved to Lafayette he was converted under the ministry of the pastor, Brother Jackson. He lived a faithful, consecrated life, professing and living the life of entire sanctification.

Brother Beadle was an industrious, frugal man, and the Lord honored his labors, and he paid tithes of all he possessed unto the Lord. He was one of the few men I have ever known whom I had to remind that I thought he was paying too much into the funds of the church. I did this with all good heart, and he answered and told me that he still had "$26 in the Lord's sack," for he was a conscientious tither.

I have never known a more devoted, earnest Christian, nor one who worked more diligently and with a greater passion for his Lord than did our brother. When I entered the church I nearly always knew that he was somewhere about the building praying God to bless his pastor. He lived to a ripe age and served well while he lived. He loved his pastor and his pastor loved him. My life was enriched and blessed because I knew and associated with William Beadle. Truly he has left a name unsullied and honored, to be treasured and appreciated by his loved ones.

HAVE FAITH IN CHINA.

"I have faith in China to-day—her peoples, her leaders, and her civilization," writes Prof. W. L. Nash, of Soochow University, on the steamboat President McKinley, en route to the United States. "I am not discouraged even with her students. I have faith to believe that the large majority of them are doing what in their distracted and frantic way they think is for the best interest of their country.

"When in China I am a very severe critic of the Chinese. I think many of them lack in moral courage and that their revolution is not going to be successful until more of them show signs of character that will make them willing to suffer with the minority for truth, or sacrifice with the inactive majority for the right.

"But I am convinced that the most of the news that is sent from China is highly critical of the worst in China. I believe that the West has too long been fed on such ideas as 'What's Wrong with China.' Unforunately I fear some missionaries are inclined to the same type of criticism. I wish it were possible for America to be presented more with ideas about 'What's Right with China.'

"If most of us would sit down and think humbly of our Herrins and Chicagos, where more Americans were killed during one month than lost their lives in China during several years, would think of our Ku Klux Klans, our lynchings, our prohibition enforcements, our oil scandals, our Senate election scandals, etc., I believe we would be more generous toward the faults of China, and be willing to allow them to make mistakes and learn, and give them more time to bring 400,000,000 people into a true government.

"I hope to return to China. If nothing further happens to unsettle conditions, I plan to be teaching in Soochow University when school opens next September. The Chinese staff are carrying on nobly at the present time, and they have cordially invited the foreign members of the staff to continue with them as soon as it is possible for them to return.

"I realize that I shall not be able openly and actively to propagate my Christian convictions, but I have faith to believe that by doing my daily work and sincerely striving to live a Christian life, I shall in some small way influence those about me to lead a better life and possibly some day a Christian life.

"If I am never able to speak the name of Christ in public I shall be satisfied with the opportunity of living my life among the Chinese students, taking advantage of personal interviews with students and friends, and I am persuaded that God will use me for the advancement of his kingdom in China."

STATEMENT CONCERNING THE ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE.

In view of publications which have appeared in the press during the past twelve months, and especially within the past few days, purporting to "expose" the methods and activities of the Anti-Saloon League of America, the national officers of the League in conference in Detroit, Mich., authorized this statement. The officers present in this conference authorizing and signing the statement were: Bishop Thomas Nicholson, President; Arthur J. Barton, chairman of the Executive Committe; Bishop James Cannon, Jr., chairman of the Legislative Committee; Francis Scott McBride, General Superintendent; Howard Hyde Russell, Associate General Superintendent; Wayne B. Wheeler, General Counsel and Legislative Superintendent; Ernest H. Cherrington, General Manager of Publishing Interests.

The Statement.

The object of the Anti-Saloon League is the extermination of the beverage liquor traffic. The methods used by the League in its efforts to accomplish that objective include: 1. To give to its constituency and to the general public accurate information concerning the nature and effect of beverage alcohol, the character and activities of the liquor interests, the operation and benefits of the prohibition laws, and the various methods of dealing with the whole problem. 2. To help, through proper channels and methods, to secure legislation that will accomplish the speediest possible elimination of the traffic in beverage alcohol. 3. To inform the public as to the record and attitude on the liquor question of public officials and of candidates for elective public office who have to do with the enactment of anti-liquor legislation and with the enforcement of the law, and to work for the election of satisfactory candidates. 4. To endeavor in every proper way to secure the selection of appointive officers charged with the enforecement of the prohibition law, who will execute that law, and to oppose the appointment of any other class. This has been the openly declared policy of the League for the thirty-five years of its existence. There is nothing secret or hidden regarding its object or its methods. It is in no sense and never has been a secret society. The minutes of the Executive Committee of the League, which for more than a year have been in the hands of Senator James Reed, of Missouri, the chairman of the Senate committee appointed to investigate primary elections, are very full and complete. They are regularly reported to and approved by the Board of Directors of 150 members from the forty-eight States. Organizations that are attempting to carry on unlawful, or irregular, or improper, or questionable activities do not make such detailed minutes of their proceedings. There has always been the utmost freedom of expression in reports and discussions in the meetings of the governing bodies of the League which, as in the case of all such bodies, have been considered private but not secret.

As in the case of most organized movements, the League has had its own inside family problems with which to deal. If any official or employee of the League at any time has used any improper method, it has been done without the authority or consent of the League, and in direct disobedience and disloyalty of the League's strict rules of conduct and its definite and well-known policy. The records of the League show that the executive body has not failed to deal in the proper way with any such acts of any of its officials or employees after full consideration of the facts involved in the case. Moreover, in the number of such derelict officials or employees, the League's record will stand comparison with those of other welfare movements, and even of church bodies. The significant fact is that the few League men that have gone wrong have not disturbed the opponents of the League and of prohibition. What has really disturbed and continues to disturb them is the multitude of such officials and employees that have gone right. It is not the fancied unlawful or so-called improper methods of the League which have aroused the ire of the League's enemies. It is the proper and lawful and effective methods which the League has used. The League not only does not object to any truthful statement that can be made regarding its operations, but on the contrary it desires the public to know how it operates. In fact for thirty-five years its agents, its periodicals and its literature have been broadcasting its plans and methods, and it is glad to have those who may not have read its literature or heard the messages of its representatives during those years to know what it has been doing and how it has been doing it. "Exposing" the League's methods has been the favorite pastime of its enemies. Every conceivable scheme has been employed to shake the confidence of the public. Even the use of private detectives has been resorted to by the opposition to trail League officials, and League offices have been broken into and their files pillaged. False and malicious declarations and innuendoes have been used to the limit to undermine its influence and to create prejudice against it. But the League has successfully withstood these constant attacks, and to-day stands on its record, its program, its methods, and its achievements. It has no fear of "pitiless publicity" as to facts. The repeated resolutions of confidence and co-operation of the great church bodies of the United States and their generous and continued financial support are ample testimony as to the regard in which the League and its representatives are held by those who know them best.

The statement frequently made that the League furnishes data through its Bureau of Information which is put out in the press as statements, articles, or documents signed by well-known persons simply mean that such data has been so carefully prepared and the reliability of League officials has been so well established that such persons are glad to use such data in accordance with well-known public usage. It is neither contrary to sound public policy nor alien to public good for Congressmen to place in the Congressional Record facts furnished by the League or other reliable organizations and to have those statements franked to the public. No facts or statements furnished by the Anti-Saloon League or presented by any congressman have ever been distributed under the franking privilege except by authorization of Congress.

Newspaper headline statements indicating that the League ever had in mind or attempted to start any movement toward inmpeachment of the President of the United States is as ridiculous as it is false. The League properly recognizes that the President of the United States is the chief law enforcement official of the government under the specific provision of the Constitution, and that he is the official to whom appeals for adequate enforcement of any Federal law should be made. The record of the League in this matter speaks for itself. The Anti-Saloon League has never attempted in any secret way or in any other way to "dominate constitutional government" in Washington or elsewhere. The League operates under and in conformity with constitutional government, while the organized liquor opposition seeks to nullify and desroy constitutional government. When did it become a crime for any individual citizen or any group of citizens to give correct information to legislators, prosecutors, judges, congressional committees, or other public officials? When did the procedure of attempting to secure the election and appointment of officials who would obey and enforce the Constitution and the law become a menace to good government? When was the right of petition repealed? What did the United States Supreme Court mean when it said that it is the duty of citizens to aid officers in the enforcement of law?

The suggestion that the Anti-Saloon League or an official or employee of the League improperly used government funds and that he or the League reimbursed the government to the extent of $10,000, is not only false but is an illustration of the lengths to which the enemies of prohibition will go to discredit the League. The minutes of the Executive Committee show that when it was alleged to the committee that such funds had been spent unnecessarily and that the League might possibly have benefited by the services of those paid by the government for other work, the Executive Committee took prompt action condemning any such procedure and directing that any expenditures shown to be improper should be made good. The records of the State and Treasury Departments at Washington will show that all the expenditures from these funds were approved by the proper government officials, and that neither Dr. Dinwiddie nor the League, either directly or indirectly, ever paid over to the government, or was asked to pay a single dollar for any such purpose; and, furthermore, Dr. Dinwiddie was one of three chosen by the Department of State to act for it in the entertainment of the International Congress Against Alcoholism later when that Congress was held, and that he and the other two chosen had full charge of the expenditure of funds appropriated by the government for the entertainment of that Congress, and all the expenditures were fully approved by the government. The records of the League also will show that Dr. Dinwiddie was under no cloud of misconduct when he resigned from the League.

The enemies of the League, in newspaper headlines and in other ways, have made many sensational statements about the aggregate collections and expenditures of the State and National Leagues during the past 35 years. The largest sum set up by their estimates would mean on the average an expenditure of about two cents a year for every man, woman and child in the nation. Two cents a year per individual to get to the American public the truth about the whole problem of alcoholism; to organize and conduct tens of thousands of local option and State-wide prohibition campaigns, and other campaigns resulting in the defeat of wet candidates and the election of dry candidates for public office; to conduct a nation-wide crusade over a long period of years for the Eighteenth Amendment and the National Prohibition Law; to continue activities at Washington and in every State to hold the ground already gained against insidious efforts at modification, nullification, and repeal; and finally to promote the League's major program of education and enlightenment to combat and overcome the campaigns carried on by the liquor interests—Small cost for securing national prohibition which saves to the people over six billion dollars a year!

Speaking of efforts to "set up a super-government" with which the League has been ridiculously charged, brings to mind the "good old days" of the super-government of the saloon-made political boss. The political machines of Tweed, Quay, Croker, Cox, Penrose, Murphy, Vare, Brennan, Sullivan, and others stand out in bold relief. If the remnant of those machines and the outlawed liquor interests could get the public to believe that a thousand Anti-Saloon workers, 151 national board members, or the twenty members of the Executive Committee are usurping the functions of government, and if the attention of the public could be diverted from the merits of the prohibition situation and directed toward the idea that some individual or prohibition organization has too much power, there would be a chance for them to come back. The scheme might work better if it had not been used so often by the saloon-made political boss with his throne in the back room of a bar, dictating the candidates and appointees for city, State and national offices and laying down the political program and policy for the people meekly to follow. It might work better if these loud speakers for the "right of the people" who in reality are the champions of the brewers, distillers, saloon-keepers and brothel proprietors had to their credit something in the way of achievement or even effort for the public good in the old days before the people woke up and cast off their yoke. The voice may sound like the voice of Jacob, but the hands are the hands of Esau!

If it be a crime to protest against the appointment of law violators and derelicts to public office; if it be wrong to fight against the control of our national political life by those elements which debauch humanity; if it be improper to urge that none but honorable, law-abiding officials be entrusted with the enactment, interpretation or enforcement of the law; if it is wrong to give the people the facts about beverage alcohol—then the Anti-Saloon League pleads guilty.

The rage of the liquor group is not against the methods of the League, for they are proper and ethical, nor against the aims of the League, for they are the expression of pure ideals, but against the success of this mass movement of the Christian forces of the nation against the most iniquitous traffic that ever distinguished itself under the form of a legalized and licensed business. In the eyes of the wets the unpardonable offense of the League is its continuous defeat of the apologist of the brewer and the old-time saloon.

THE CRITIC AND THE CYNIC.

By Rev. Melville Johnson.

The Critic questions. The Cynic scoffs. The world has profited by intelligent and sincere criticism. It has suffered immeasurably at the hands of the Cynic. The Cynic, not the Critic, is the arch enemy of all human good.

The Critic uses as his tools the delicate instruments of observation, analysis, and classification. He tries to see things as they actually are. He is against sham and untruth. He has no prejudices. He wants to know truth. He is compensated when he has made sure that what we think, what we do, and what we are, have been established upon the firm foundation of practical reason and revealed truth.

The Critic becomes the scientist and inventor when he gives us steam power in place of hand power electric lights for the tallow candle; X-rays in place of the guesses of diagnosis; rapid transit for the slow-moving vehicles. The Critic becomes the philosopher and theologian when he gives us a rational basis for our faith in the supernatural in place of the vagaries of ignorance and superstition.

The Critic has never destroyed anything except for the purpose of replacing it with something better. The Critic is ever constructive. If he questions religion, he does so to test its reality. If he questions philosophy, he does so to make it re-examine itself, and correct its errors. If he questions morals, it is to make human conduct better and human society happier.

But the Cynic has no other motive than to despise, disturb, and destroy. Nothing suits the taste of the Cynic. Nothing is too holy or sacred to be profaned by his beastly sneers. He worships neither at the shrine of intelligence nor of emotion. He does not worship, unless his unholy revels at the foot of the image of his own mental vacuity could be called worship!

When the Cynic speaks, he withers everything in the sound of his voice. Human hopes, joys, aspirations, ambitions, industry, yea, everything worthy takes flight from minds and hearts that come under his power. When he writes he subtly pretends to be the benefactor of mankind, while he portrays every worthy achievement, every sincere motive, every holy aspiration, as simply an hallucination. The Cynic paints man as a skillful self-deceiver, who never is, and who never does, but only imagines! The Cynic is well named. He is a dog (Greek, kunos). He is a devourer. He is bloodthirsty.

There are all sorts of Cynics. They are male and female; individual and corporate; literary and vocal. There are philosophical Cynics, and are Cynics that are creators of fiction. The most dangerous are the corporate and literary Cynics, like that enigmatical organization called the Society for the Propagation of Atheism chartered by one of the States of our Union, and the author of that unspeakable cynical fiction called Elmer Gantry.

The Cynics are far more dangerous to human good than Reds or Roman Catholics. The latter at least are trying to establish something, but the Cynics are self-confessed destroyers of everything. Free speech is a policy that must be preserved in a democratic country. But there is a vast difference between saying what one thinks, and saying that one thinks and believes nothing! Do we not need a law which provides that every mouth be stopped that has nothing to say? Exit the Cynic.

The sincere, truth-loving Critic will get us along to a better day; but the path of the Cynic is a path of tears, and blood, of rape and lawlessness, and grows more dismal as he pursues his relentless way.

WE ARE NOT SO FAR APART, AFTER ALL!

By Rev. W. T. Bazzel.

I read the article by Hon. T. M. Evans in the Advocate with considerable pleasure; for it proves just what I have suspected all along, namely, that he and I are not so far apart, after all, notwithstanding the fact that we have had quite a controversy in these columns. Of course we differ regarding a few minor details; but I am sure we would agree concerning essential truths.

He started our discussion by giving me a general "overhauling" for using the expression, "our pet theory," in reference to that particular interpretation of Genesis which teaches that the six days of creation were six days of twenty-four hours each. He intimated that I had referred to the testimony of God as a "theory;" he intimated that I had questioned the accuracy of the Holy Scriptures, and therefore broken my ordination vows by using the word "theory;" and now—

He says: "I would suggest to Brother Bazzel that he confine himself to the exact statement made in Genesis as to the creation, and if he can find any statement in the first chapter of Genesis to the effect that God created all things, including man, within six days of twenty-four hours he will find something that I have never read. The brother read this in the expert testimony of some witness construing the Bible, and not in the Book itself." Amen! And so the six-day doctrine is merely the opinion of some "expert," and not the testimony of God, is it? Or, in other words, just the "pet theory" of certain parties who undertake to construe the Bible!

Since he agrees with me that the opinion in question is in fact only a theory, I am somewhat at a loss to understand why he tried to give me such a sound spanking for calling it a "theory;" but I actually enjoyed said spanking, and have the very kindest of feeling toward Brother Evans. I feel sure that he is a worthy brother, and that we would love each other more if we understood each other better.

It seems that we do not agree concerning Moses; but that seems to me to be because Brother Evans misconstrues my words. He takes issue with me when I use the following language:

"Brother Evans seeks to justify an appeal to civil law to protect religious opinion by referring to Aaron, the priest, who made the golden calf, and Moses, the civil ruler, who intervened. But the case referred to is not at all parallel with that of the modern legislature that would intervene to prevent erroneous teaching in our schools.

"In the first place, Moses was not a secular lawmaker, but a law-giver, who handed down God-made laws. No legislature performs a like function now. If the Mississippi Legislature speaks invariably as a mere mouthpiece of God, then I am willing for it to dictate my opinions.

"Second, the Israelites had no separate secular government at that time, but church and State were one. Moses was the supreme human authority in the church as well as the State. So it was not a secular ruler that saved Israel from the idolatry instigated by the ordained priest."

After quoting the foregoing language of mine, he proceeds to make a half-column argument to prove that "Man's official act is God's official act, and if man acting in his sovereign power enacts a law, then the law is God's law as to that State or sovereign power."

If his conclusion be correct, then I am compelled to say that a lot of God's laws officially enacted by modern legislatures are mighty silly laws.

Then Brother Evans says: "But Brother Bazzel is off again; he says that Moses was not acting as the civil governor, but as the head of the church. I suggest to the brother that he read the old Bible again."

And now I suggest that Brother Evans read my statements again—the statements which he quoted. I did not say that Moses was not acting as the civil governor; I said, "Moses was the supreme human authority in the church as well as State." I said also that he was not a secular ruler. Secular, not "civil," was the word I used. A secular ruler is one whose functions are entirely separate from all matters of religion. The form of government under Moses was a theocracy. Church and State were combined. Our form of government in Mississippi is a democracy, where church and State are constitutionally separated.

In conclusion, permit me to state that I have never claimed that the anti-evolution law is unconstitutional. I have never questioned the legal right of our legislature to dictate the course of study that shall be taught in our tax-supported schools; but I have questioned the expediency and wisdom of the anti-evolution law. This law, in effect, forbids all further research and investigation in a certain scientific field; it makes it a crime for teachers to attempt to learn any new facts concerning the origin of life on this earth!

I may be wrong, but it seems to me that the proponents of said law take an attitude that may be expressed as follows: "We know all about the origin of life. We know the full details of the process of creation. We have reached the utter limit of human knowledge on this subject, and we forbid poor benighted scientists to teach, or even investigate, any theory of man's origin which is contrary to our own opinion. We must forbid future generations the right to learn any more about this matter than we know."

A SAMPLE OF THE TOLERANCE AND BROTHERLY SPIRIT OF A WOULD-BE MODERNIST.

By Rev. H. M. Ellis.

Rev. W. T. Bazzel had an article in the Advocate of July 14 on "Modernism," in the last paragraph of which he declares: "In all that I have written on this subject I have tried earnestly to be tolerant and to manifest a brotherly spirit." In the second paragraph above we find a sample of his "tolerant" and "brotherly spirit." Here it is verbatim: "The controversy between Fundamentalists and Modernists is injuring the church, * * * not because controversies concerning differences of opinion are necessarily harmful, but because the ultra Fundamentalists are manifesting a spirit of intolerance toward all who disagree with them. They would denounce as heretics a great many devout and loyal men simply because said men do not accept their own special interpretation of Genesis; they would even go further and class all men as atheists who have not closed their minds against all additional light, but are willing to investigate and learn. They would have State laws enacted compelling the schools to accept their views, and forbidding, under severe penalties, any one to investigate the origin of man. They tell the world just what the first chapters of Genesis mean, and then denounce as traitors to the church all who fail to agree with them as to just what said chapters really do mean."

Now, if that is "tolerance," what, pray, is intolerance? If that "manifests a brotherly spirit," surely great "additional light"—or darkness, which the world will do well to avoid, has befallen the brother. If everybody showed the same "tolerant" and "brotherly spirit," how long would the millennium be in arriving? And, if the brother succeeds no better in being "tolerant" and "manifesting brotherliness" after "earnestly trying," what might he not have written had he not made such strenuous effort at self-control?

If Brother Bazzel regards truth and wishes to be fair he cannot disregard the following demands, which his vicious public charges make necessary, namely:

1. Let him prove wherein Fundamentalists, as he prefers to denominate orthodox believers, have shown any more "spirit of intolerance" than his Modernist allies. And, since he has shown such recklessness in making assertions, he will have to be specific.

2. Let him cite the cases wherein any orthodox believers have promulgated any "special interpretation of Genesis" in lieu of that traditionally accepted by the church. Then let him name the persons and identify the occasions when such "special" interpreters have "denounced as heretics a great many devout and loyal men simply because said men did not accept their own special interpretation of Genesis." Let him name those "great many devout and loyal men" so denounced.

3. Let him cite instances, naming authors and specifying occasions, wherein "all men have been classed as atheists who have not closed their minds against all additional light, but are willing to investigate and learn." Is he not perfectly aware that this charge is totally untrue and slanderous?

4. Let him name one single instance when orthodox believers have asked for the enactment of "State laws compelling the schools to accept their views." I have heard and read of good people desiring State laws forbidding the teaching in public schools as established fact what is but unprovable speculation.

5. Let him specify those places and occasions when Christian people demanded State laws forbidding, "under severe penalties, any one to investigate the origin of man." Even one instance will do. I have never heard of one who would even forbid the investigation of Brother Bazzel's origin.

6. Let him be specific in giving names and occasions when any orthodox believers have made their individual, or group explanations of Genesis—instead of the well-established interpretations of the church general, or of their own denomination—the test of loyalty, "and then denounced as traitors to the church all who fail to agree with them as to just what said chapters really do mean."

Is Brother Bazzel so uninformed as to believe that only the "first chapters of Genesis are involved in the Modernists' attack on the Christian faith?" Does he not know that orthodox Christians did not start this discussion; that they are but "contending earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints," and that the Modernists are the innovators and the assaulting party? Would he have a strong man sit quietly and read his paper while his house was being spoiled and robbed and his daughters were being brutally outraged within his sight?

Brother Bazzel closes his little piece with the appeal to be allowed the "right" to his own "views," "without being denounced as a heretic." The brother fails to realize that this "right" to peculiar individual religious "views" goes exclusively to those who absolutely refuse any relation with, or membership in any religious society or organization which requires as a condition of membership express public agreement with its system of faith and doctrine. When one enters the covenant of church membership he publicly avows his agreement with its statement of faith and doctrine. The conscientious man will make sure that no claims by him to the "right" to unique and up-to-date religious (?) "views" discount and void his church vows. He will be concerned, not as to whether or not he is "denounced as a heretic," but as to whether or not he is a heretic.

Fighting in the German army against America did not make any one a "traitor" to America. But for an enlisted officer or soldier in the American army to fight with the Germans against the Americans or their allies rendered him actually a "traitor" to America, whether he was captured and "denounced" or not. But Brother Bazzel and those he would follow do not make such nice discriminations. There are no organized congregations and church organs of publication as forums for self-exploitation, and there are no fat salaries on the outside of the church where thinking is free as air, and the "right" to indulge unique and fantastic religious (?) "views" is unquestioned.

If Brother Bazzel is a good and fair man, as I believe he is, he will substantiate with definite and convincing proofs his widely-published, intolerant and unbrotherly charges, or will make prompt, adequate and public confession and apology. He will not attempt to excuse himself or to dodge the issue. Kindly, but firmly, I now put it up to him to "Put up, or shut up," as my college baseball team mates used to say.

The Home Circle

THE GRIEVANCE.

By Catherine E. Powers.

Elizabeth Murray's goin' to have her tonsilitus out,
An' stay right in the hospital, with nurses all about,
An' have her mother come to see her every single day,
An' get ice cream to eat, an' stay at home from school an' play,
An' have her father give her fifty cents for being good
An' actin' like a brave girl always really ought to should.
An' she is goin' to stay at home from school a long, long while,
An' have new dresses made for her just by the pile an' pile.
I asked my daddy could I have my tonsilitus out,
An' he just looked at me, an' then you ought to heard him shout!
An' I said every single girl that goes to school with me
Has got their tonsilitus out, an' so I couldn't see
Why I should have to keep 'em in an' never have no fun
Or do one single thing the way the other girls has done.
My mother and my daddy make me mad enough to cry.
I hope my tonsilitus makes me sick so I can die!
But no, I'll keep on bein' well an' never gettin' thin,
An' just grow up, an' always keep my tonsilitus in!

ROADSIDE REPORTS ON THE AMERICAN SUNDAY.

By J. Clyde Keegan.

Sunday is the day of rest, meditation, and worship. Mr. Average Man is an honest soul, and so he endeavors to worship to the best of his ability. He works six days a week, and when Sunday comes he wants to get away from the maddening throng for rest, meditation, and the worship of God. Every one knows that a man can worship better in God's great out-of-doors than in church.

Firm in his resolve to worship God through nature, he gets the old bus out, tinkers with it awhile, tanks it up with gas, oil, and water, and, lastly, gives a shower bath. With one more fond "once over" glance he shouts toward the house, "O ma, are you ready?" Mother comes out with a lunch she has tried desperately to have ready in time to start. Mother has hurried so fast to get the work done that she is cross and the children are about to cry. But this is the day of rest, and the most must be made of it.

The members of the family get into the car and take the other fellow's dust and exhaust at forty miles per hour for the privilege of being in the open and getting the fresh air. At a little past noon they arrive at a muddy hole where all disembark for lunch. The flies are bad and the mosquitoes are worse, but that doesn't matter, as this is father's day of rest and it's God's great out-of-doors. Just before lunch is over a rainstorm sends them scurrying to the car. The flies go, too, in splendid formation.

The storm over, father orders them all out, as he has to give the car the "once over" before going back. The clutch isn't working just right, and after an hour and a half of toil he decides he'll have to have a garage man look at it. In the meantime the baby has fallen into the mud and runied his last pair of good stockings. Tired but greasy father consults his watch and discovers that it is past 4 o'clock and time to start the return trip. But Willie is missing. A search is instigated, and after much hollering and tramping father discovers him up the creek trying to catch minnows with his new hat. With the proper amount of; "Didn't I tell you not to leave the car?" "Now look at your nice, new hat!" "Your mother has been worried to death," "Why don't you ever mind?" "Next time we will leave you home," they reach the car. Willie seems thoroughly repentant and promises never to run away again.

As they settle in the car a report is heard and the car settles down. Father looks around and says rather cheery like, "Ah, ha, I guess it's that bad tire." Mother does not seem to have much sense of humor, but the children do. A look from father seems to warn them that this is the day of worship and the outburt is stopped. The tire is adjusted. Father doesn't say much, but the reflection of nature is in his face as he climbs into the car once more.

By this time it is growing late, so father has to again drive fast in order to save time. This makes mother nervous, but this is unnecessary, for are they not having a day of rest in God's out-of-doors? Mother remarks about the beauty of the scenery. Father declares he's coming back some day to see it when there are not so many cars on the road. Traffic thickens. A great cloud of dust hangs over the road as they appraoch town. The children who are awake are crying for a drink. The youngest has gone to sleep in his mother's arms. Both of mother's arms have gone to sleep, and she can't move her feet on account of the luggage. But all hands are happy, as this is father's day of rest, and he does so enjoy getting out in the open. They have all had such a good time and "everything."

Traffic has become worse. Speed is cut to twelve miles per hour. The children want to know when they will get home. The lights blind and hurt father's eyes. Mother is past feeling anything. She can only think—of the pleasant day they have had. It seems that the whole county is out driving. Some fellow from behind dashes around father's car and scrapes the fender. Father, rather jovial like, shouts to the fleeing car something about being more careful in his driving just as he bumps the car ahead and locks fenders. The procession stops. Father asks the owner of the bumped car where he can go to get the fender straightened. Twenty men of the rear procession explode violently.

Again at the wheel father presses on. The lights flash by in dazzling array. A quietness settles down on the little group, for is it not the close of the day of worship and of rest? True, every one is exhausted but unspeakably happy.

Home is reached at last. Father isn't sure that he can move. He wonders why mother doesn't stir. With a supreme effort he gets out and helps mother, baby, and the children into the house. The car put away, father staggers in more dead than alive. He tells mother that being in the open makes one so sleepy that he thinks he will go right to bed.

Mother puts the children to bed, washes the camp dishes, and fixes Willie's hat. Somehow she feels more tired than usual, but it is so refreshing to get away on Sunday. However, she is glad that to-morrow is wash day so she can rest up a bit.

On Monday morning father doesn't know why he should feel so tired, because they had such a wonderful day out in the open the day before. In fact, he feels more exhausted this morning than when he finished work Saturday night. But it does one good to have a day of rest once a week to recuperate from the toil of the six days by the right kind of rest—something different. "One gets so much more out of worship in the open than in church!"—New York Christian Advocate.

A LITTLE BLACK LAD.

In East Africa there was a boy named Kdonda, who desired to became a Christian. The boy, who was living with a chief, was allowed to attend the mission school which opened three times a week, and there he learned to read the New Testament. One Sunday morning, when a missionary was preaching, he got up and called out, "I want to believe, I want to believe." After the service the missionary had a talk with the boy, and he joined a special class for instruction. The chief seems not to have liked the step the boy had taken—at any rate he was sent back to his parents, who lived in a village at some distance. For a time, therefore, he was out of reach of the Christian instruction. At last the missionary talked to the lad's father, who replied, "If he wants to come back he can do so."

The missionary writes: "You will praise God with us that the little lad is back again, and gives us much joy by his bright and intelligent answers in the school and class."—The Round World.

THE PIG CAME BACK.

Florence Boyce Davis.

The strange way by which dogs, cats and other domestic animals often find their way back to their former homes has always puzzled the human mind. Men call it instinct, and the dictionary explains it as the natural, unreasoning impulse by which an animal is guided to the performance of any action, but that doesn't seem to solve the mystery very satisfactorily. We have in mind the case of a little four-weeks'-old pig which one of our neighbors bought. The pig was put into a sack, and the owner drove home, a distance of about two miles, the road winding first north, then west, then south. Upon reaching home the pig was installed in its new pen, and our neighbor proceeded to unharness his horse. Before he reached the house his wife called to him that the pig was out. He went to look for it and was surprised to see it making a bee line across the field in the direction of its former home. It was only about a half mile across lots "as the crow flies," but a piece of timbered land lay between with no road or track running through it. Our neighbor watched the pig until it disappeared in the woods, and then, being curious to see what it would do, he harnessed his horse and started around the road again to the home of the man who had sold him the pig. As he drove into the yard he saw his little pig trotting leisurely toward the barn, somewhat out of breath, but grunting happily. It had made the trip home across the fields and through the woods without chart or compass. Who of us is wise enough to say how he did it?

ANCIENT SKELETONS FOUND ON THE OHIO.

Dilles Bottom, Ohio.—Remains of five bodies, believed to be those of victims of an Indian massacre, unearthed here when excavation was being made on the shore of the Ohio River for towers to carry high tension wires from the Beech Bottom, W. Va., brought the statement that early settlers of the region south of Bellaire had a fort at that point. T. C. Gallaher, seventy-two, said he recalled hearing from his grandparents that a number of settlers lost their lives while seeking shelter in the fort and says that in his youth the ruins of the foundations were visible. Most of the bones crumbled on being exposed to the air.

Mussel shells found about three feet above the bones gave rise to the theory that the graves had been decorated with shells.

Another theory is that the mussel shells may have marked the edge of the Ohio River. This would mean the bones date from the days of the mound builders who erected the mound from which the city of Moundsville, W. Va., situated within sight of the ancient burial ground, received its name.

There is no record of the river having flowed in the immediate vicinity of the spot during the last century. An Indian burial ground was unearthed years ago on a near-by hill-top. Quarrymen, years ago, found skulls and skeletons of seven persons, presumably Indians, on a hillside a quarter of a mile away. It was believed they had been entombed while seeking shelter beneath the ledge. Both adults and infants were in the group.—Exchange.

DIRECTIONS.

All checks and money orders should be made payable to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Communications pertaining to subscriptions and other business matters should be addressed to the Manager, or to the New Orleans Christian Advocate. The Printed Label on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after four weeks, notify us, and we will make it right.

Communications intended for the Editor should be directed to him at 512 Camp Street. Correspondents will observe the following rules: 1. Write on only one side of the paper. 2. If you have a typewriter, by all means use it; otherwise use a good quality of black ink. 3. Leave a space of at least two inches at the top of the first page; leave a margin of at least one inch on the left-hand side of the page; do not crowd the words and the lines together. 4. Take special pains to write proper names correctly and legibly. 5. Use letter paper if you can get it—not note paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

MORE RESULTS.

A Methodist lady, recently a visitor to our city, called at the Advocate office. She showed the assistant a copy of a Catholic paper which she had secured from the Jesuits' Church on Baronne Street, where these papers are displayed and may be had for the taking. She asked why the Methodist Church does not follow a similar plan and make free distribution of our literature, and the assistant replied that he had never known but one Methodist church to follow such a plan, though of course there might be others. First Church, Shreveport, used to keep a number of copies of the Advocate at a convenient place at the entrance and anyone was invited to take a copy.

In a recent Quarterly Conference which the assistant, in his regular work as elder, was holding, he stressed the matter of the Advocate as has been his custom in all the Quarterly Conferences, especially the third. One steward said: "Two dollars a year is too much for the Advocate." Another steward replied: "The Morning Star (a Catholic paper published in New Orealns) is $2.50 a year." We condemn the Catholics in many things but we 198,000 Methodists in Louisiana and Mississippi, with less than 8,000 subscribers to our Conference paper, are hardly in a position to condemn the Catholics for the way in which they keep their people informed.

However, we are glad to report more results from our campaign appeal for 1200, the major portion coming from Louisiana. Rev. M. S. Monk, of Monroe, La., makes good his promise and sends in 25 subscriptions. Fine! Rev. Leon I. McCain, of Minden, La., who sent in 107 subscriptions in April, now sends in 10 more subscriptions. Rev. J. T. Dring, Athens, La., sends in 12 subscriptions for eight months, and in addition to the above, we have received the following: Rev. A. M. Serex, Second Church of New Orleans, 1; Rev. C. B. White, Marksville, La., 2; Rev. E. C. Gunn, Carrollton Avenue, New Orleans, 2; Rev. L. J. Snellgrove, Monticello, Miss., 1, and Rev. J. H. Jolly, Meridian, Miss., 1. There is no question that subscriptions can be secured when only a little effort is given to the matter by the pastor and others.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. W. F. Baggett, of Saucier, La., conducted the service at the Seashore Camp Grounds on last Sunday morning.

Rev. C. A. Schultz, pastor at Lumberton, Miss., is assisting in a meeting at Auburn, Miss. Much interest is being manifsted.

Rev. R. H. Harper preached on last Sunday morning at the Carrollton Presbyterian Church, New Orleans, in the absence of the pastor.

Brother W. D. Bass, of Corinth, Miss., has recently assisted in what proved to be a real old-time revival at New Hope, Ala.

Rev. P. D. Hardin, pastor at Brookhaven, Miss., has been enjoying a vacation of three weeks. A part of the time he was at Conehatta, one of his first appointments.

Rev. J. G. Snelling, Louisiana Conference Missionary Secretary, preached on last Sunday morning at Houma, La., in the absence of Rev. F. J. McCoy, who is taking a brief vacation.

The Southern Reporter, of Sardis, Miss., for July 29, states that Rev. and Mrs. T. M. Bradley and children were to leave this week for a trip to Biloxi, Gulfport and other points.

Dr. H. G. Hawkins spent Sunday, July 24, in Richton, Miss., preaching for Rev. M. M. Black, who was spending a few days at Lake Junaluska, we learn from the Lincoln County Times.

Mrs. George S. Sexton, Jr., daughter-in-law of Dr. Sexton, the president of Centenary College, Shreveport, has been visiting her mother in Farmersville, Va.

Rev. D. E. Vickers, of Ocean Springs, Miss., called recently at our office. He had accompanied to the city Mrs. Vickers, who is undergoing treatment at the Touro Infirmary. We trust she will soon be well.

Dr. and Mrs. H. G. Hawkins and the faculty of the Whitworth summer school recently entertained at a delightful dinner at the Inez, Brookhaven, complimentary to Superintendent and Mrs. Edgar S. Bowlus.

The preaching at the annual revival meeting for the Oakland Tabernacle was done this year by Rev. T. G. Stamps, of St. Francisville, La., we learn from the St. Helena Echo. This meeting was held during the latter part of July.

Rev. H. N. Brown, the presiding elder of the Baton Rouge District, Louisiana Conference, will spend some time during the first half of August at Lake Junaluska. Persons corresponding with him before Aug. 20 should address him at Lake Junaluska, N. C., care A. L. Dietrich.

Rev. A. J. Henry, Lexington, Miss., wants a singer and choir leader to assist him in an eight-day meeting at Acona church, on the Acona charge, beginning on the fourth Sunday in August. Let any one interested communicate with Brother Henry.

Rev. E. C. Gunn, pastor of Carrollton Avenue Church, New Orleans, preached at Reserve, La., on last Sunday morning at 7:30. It is expected that the Methodist chapel at that point will soon be under construction.

Rev. J. W. Sells, pastor at Pascagoula, Miss., has issued figures for his charge, showing the amounts of all assessments and all financial obligations of the church. Giving the people information ought to enlist their interest and bring good results.

Rev. R. L. Armstrong, pastor of Felicity Church, New Orleans, will look after St. Rose as a Sunday afternoon appointment, and he expects to conduct a revival meeting there in the near future. St. Rose is an industrial center on the Mississippi, about twenty miles above New Orleans.

In writing to renew his subscription, Brother W. J. Garland, of Haynesville, La., says: "I have been a subscriber to the Advocate since 1886, with the exception of a few months. I get a great deal of comfort from reading it. It seems it gets better all the time. Many good wishes for it in the future."

Brother George L. Carley, of Gulfport, Miss., writes us that Dr. Brownlee, of Capitol Street Church, Jackson, Miss., preached in Gulfport on July 24, in the absence of Rev. W. J. Ferguson, who was assisting Rev. C. C. Miller in a meeting at Franklinton, La. The report is that the meeting at Franklinton was a successful one.

The Methodist Messenger, of First Church, Shreveport, says that Dr. Robert E. Goodrich and family are planning to spend their vacation at Lake Junaluska. They will go by automobile, leaving Aug. 15, and reaching Lake Junaluska by Aug. 22, at which time Dr. Goodrich has an engagement to speak.

Rev. Jasper Smith assisted recently in a meeting at Smithdale; Rev. H. L. Norton, at McCall, and Rev. W. T. Griffin, at Ebenezer, all three points belonging to the Adams circuit. The congregations were large in these meetings and much interest was manifested. Eight persons united with the church at Ebenezer.

Rev. J. A. McCormack, our pastor at Franklin, La., passed through New Orleans on Monday, en route to assist one of his brethren in the Baton Rouge District. We shall look for a report of this meeting. Brother McCormack was accompanied to the city by his daughter, Miss Nellie May, who returned to Franklin on Monday afternoon.

Dr. S. H. Werlein, presiding elder of the San Francisco District, was appointed a delegate to the annual meeting of the California State Church Federation recently held. Dr. Werlein is a native of New Orleans and has served several pastorates in this city—the last being his second term at First Methodist Church.

About seventy were present at the prayer meeting on Wednesday of last week at Second Church, New Orleans, where Rev. A. M. Serex is pastor. Rev. R. H. Harper made the talk at this service, and afterward held the third quarterly conference of the church. It is reported that the attendance at the prayer meeting of Second Church is always large.

The Southern Reporter, of Sardis, Miss., in its issue of July 22, reported that extensive preparations were being made for the Howard Williams evangelistic campaign in Sardis. The several pastors of the different Protestant churches of the town are co-operating in this meeting, including Rev. J. T. McCafferty, pastor of our church at that point.

Rev. Leon Picone, missionary evangelist, Louisiana Conference, is "flying high" these days. On a visit to Port Eads and Pilot Town, near the mouth of the Mississippi, where preaching services have been initiated, Brother Picone was offered passage with the pilot of the airplane which bears the mail, and so made the return trip to New Orleans through the air. In one hour he was safe at home in the city.

Rev. L. P. Wasson, presiding elder of the Aberdeen District, North Mississippi Conference, in sending in his fourth round, writes as follows of his work: "We are beginning the final round with a good outlook for good reports. The men of the district are all hard at work and in fine spirits. The Lord has been good to us and real progress has been made in the work of the kingdom.

Rev. W. W. Murray, of the Coalville charge, and Rev. W. F. Baggett, of the Saucier charge, Mississippi Conference, are pastors jointly interested in the Palmer Creek camp meeting, and they are announcing that the meeting will begin on Aug. 21 and close on Aug. 28. Rev. J. L. Decell, the presiding elder of the Jackson District, will do the preaching. Services will be held at 11 in the morning and at night. Pastors in reach are urged to attend and to give their assistance in this meeting.

The renovation and improvement of the parsonage at Merryville, La., are now complete, so we learn from Rev. F. B. Hill, the delighted pastor. The front gallery, the length of the house, has been screened, also the back gallery, and new screens have been placed in the windows. Two new rooms and a sun parlor have been added to the house, and the whole has been painted on the outside, and the rooms papered. The Woman's Missionary Society did this fine work.

The church in Robinsonville, Miss., recently enjoyed the unusual privilege of having two fine missionary workers stop by on their way to their field in the distant Belgian Congo. These two, Dr. and Mrs. Lewis, so we learn from Mrs. W. E. Cox, of Robinsonville, gave inspiring and interesting talks of their past experiences and their future plans. The little church at Robinsonville was crowded to overflowing, and all listened with great interest.

Rev. Claude P. Jones has recently assisted Rev. J. E. J. Ferguson, of the Gallman charge, in two fine meetings. After these meetings he was scheduled to assist Rev. E. A. King, at New Hebron, and Rev. R. A. Allen at Pachuta. Brother Jones considers the singer associated with him in these meetings, Mr. H. M. Scott, is a very fine musical director and worker among the young people and children. Brother Jones has some time open in September and October. Any of the brethren who desire his services should address him at 103 Fourth Avenue, Hattiesburg, Miss.

A pipe organ, costing $5,000, has arrived at the railway station at Franklin, La., and will be installed in the Methodist church as soon as possible. In addition to this, the church building has been thoroughly repaired, painted outside and decorated inside. These improvements have been possible by the generosity of Captain Barber, owner of Oak Lawn, the famous mansion on the Teche, where Henry Clay was once entertained, and the generous contribution of the members of the church. Rev. J. A. McCormack is the pastor.

Rev. T. D. Lipscomb, Rev. Martin Hebert and Rev. T. F. King have been recent visitors to Franklin, La.

Bishop James Cannon, Jr., who has been under medical treatment in Richmond since his return from the Congo, has been given positive instructions by his physicians to rest for several weeks. Since it has become known that Bishop Cannon had returned home, his correspondence has been so heavy, and the calls to attend meetings of committees and boards of various kinds have been so numerous that he has not been able to get much real rest. Finally, some friends sent him a check for $500, and requested him to go to Switzerland, where he could have mountain air, free from heat and malaria, and where he could be an onlooker at the Conference on Faith and Order at Lausanne, of which Conference he has been a member of the Business Committe from its inception seven years ago. At the close of that Conference, Bishop Cannon has been invited by Sir Henry Lunn to be his guest in the beautiful Engadine section of Switzerland. Bishop Cannon now expects to return home about the middle of September, and sail almost immediately for Brazil, where he will hold the Annual Conferences during October and November, returning home before the heat of the Brazilian summer.

The Seashore Camp Grounds are filled with summer visitors; the grass has been cut and the general appearance of the grounds has been improved. Mrs. George Brown, of New Orleans; Rev. J. L. Sells, presiding elder of the Seashore District, and Rev. W. M. Sullivan, pastor of Main Street Church, Biloxi, have been instrumental in raising the money to make needed repairs to the tabernacle and to beautify the grounds. Mr. Crow Girard, of Lafayette, La., chairman of the Board of Trustees, is spending the summer on the grounds, and is taking a great interest in the upkeep of the grounds; likewise Rev. Randolph Saucier, pastor of Mississippi City, who lives on the grounds. Among the visitors recently were Rev. Thomas Lipscomb and family, of Louisville, Miss., who occupied a cottage for several weeks, and Rev. Louis Wicht, local preacher of Hattiesburg, Miss.

ANNUITY BONDS

SAFETY is the first requisite of an investment with a view to regular income.

ANNUITY BONDS have advantage over other investments in that they provide an income that cannot shrink.

YOU may in your lifetime without loss of income or any risk pay over to the Board of Missions, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the amount that you had intended leaving in your will to be used in sending the Gospel "to every creature."

YOU may avoid taxes, various fees or any litigation in connection with your benevolent gifts which sometimes greatly reduce one's bequest. Annuity Bonds enable one to be the executor of his own will.

ALL THIS—and at the same time you enjoy during your lifetime an income that cannot shrink—an income that stands between you and want.

Protection Against Old Age

The contagion seems to be going through the whole Advocate office. The editor fell to dreaming in Emory and wrote an editorial on "Fishing with Worms;" the assistant spurned the worms and lured the bass with a Shannon twin spinner; now comes the publisher, and says that he and others on the Camp Grounds are fishing with any kind of bait or lure they can get, and they have been successful. Recently he and friends were caught on the sound in a severe squall, but they finally made it safe into port.

DEATH OF MRS. RAYNOR.

Mrs. S. A. Raynor, widow of the late Rev. B. S. Raynor, of the Mississippi Conference, recently and was buried at her childhood home, Hickory, died at her daughter's home in Columbia, S. C., Miss. Rev. H. E. Carter, of Mt. Olive, and Brother Straight, of Decatur and Hickory, held the funeral service. May the Lord's presence sustain the bereaved ones.

BROTHER C. M. MARTIN DEAD.

Rev. A. M. Broadfoot, pastor of East End, Meridian, sends us the sad news of Rev. C. M. Martin. A good man has gone home. Brother Broadfoot writes as follows:

"Hastening to say this word to the brethren through the Advocate. Brother C. M. Martin, one of our dear superannuate preachers, went home to enjoy his eternal reward at 10 o'clock last night, July 31. He was not sick when he retired for the night, having attended church in the morning, as was his custom on the Lord's day—no one expected that he was so near his eternal home. He only struggled for a moment and went home to peaceful rest, 10 p.m. He will be buried from East End, Meridian, at 9 a.m., August 2."

NOTICE.

Rev. Fred Sartin, by authority of Bishop W. A. Candler, has been released from his pastorate on the Daleville charge, Meridian District, and Rev. B. W. Ware, formerly of the Kentucky Conference, has been appointed to the charge for the remainder of the Conference year.

It became necessary, on account of Brother Sartin's wife being in ill health, for him to take her to a higher altitude. He is now waiting for the meeting of the Kentucky Conference to receive an appointment there. It is to be hoped, by this move, that his wife will be restored to her health. Brother Sartin's address for the present is Newton, Ohio, not very far from the Kentucky Conference line.

TO THE FRIENDS OF THE ORPHANS, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

You have no doubt seen the appeal sent out by the board of directors of the Orphans' Home setting forth the financial situation. This has been a year of many calls upon the generosity of our people. The flood situation call necessarily had to be heeded; and how generously did our people respond. Coming as it has soon after the building of a new home—which was a necessity—it has crippled our income needed to meet the building program; and to care for the children. Of course money had to be borrowed to do the building as nearly all worthy and worth while progress is made these days. Part of the loan to put up the new building is in bonds, payable semi-annually, the balance the banks loaned as short loans. This later loan is the one facing us just now. It and the running expenses must be met monthly. For the past three years the income for both accounts has been gratifying. But recently both have felt a serious falling off. Our Work Day offering was not over half that of the previous year.

There is no more needed work in the church, nor is there a more popular appeal, and we feel sure our people only need to know the situation. This important work is dependent entirely on free-will offerings for its maintenance. Are we asking too much of you to send a check, the best you can; to help in a needy situation? Can we not ask that you stir up your church and Sunday school to come to our help. There is but one fund now. Let me hear from you.

W. T. GRIFFIN, Commissioner.

SAMUEL T. BRYANT, son of Cooper and Mrs. Annie Bryant, was born in Smith County, Miss., near Raleigh, Dec. 25, 1870. He departed this life June 7, 1927, aged about 57 years. Brother Bryant united with the Methodist church in early childhood, and lived a consistent Christian life since. Indeed, he was a man in whom there was no guile. His life was a living testimony for Christ. He leaves a noble wife, two girls, five boys, a mother, one sister, six brothers, a number of friends and other relatives to mourn his departure. The good Lord honored Brother Bryant and his good wife as he honors very few parents by calling into his special service one of their children, Miss Myrtie, who is now a missionary laboring in the Belgian Congo, Africa. I know of no greater legacy a father can leave his family than the memory of a noble life, such as Brother Bryant lived. Though you grieve, grieve not as those who have no hope.

MRS. MATTIE B. FULLER, NEE STEPHENS.

As all must hearken to the bidding of God so did our beloved friend and co-worker, Mrs. Mattie B. Fuller, on June 21, in her home near Downsville, La., after several months of illness. Yea, "God giveth, and he taketh away." Mrs. Fuller was born in Randolph County, Ala., Dec. 18, 1873, being the eldest of a family of twelve children—ten boys and two girls. In 1891 she was married to L. G. Fuller, and in 1892 the happy couple moved to our sunny Louisiana. Six boys and three girls, all of which are living except one infant girl, were born to this union. A truer mother and sweeter Christian was not to be found. Her influence is lasting because her purity of character was never blotted .Her life was filled with unselfish thoughts and deeds, and the memory of her remains as a benediction to all who knew her. The writer has always felt that there was something in this dear woman's life that would inspire him in his work. That unspeakable tie that brings God and his people together surely unites the souls of his humble servants—a faithful worker, she was. No loud profession but a quiet, unassuming possession of the sweet spirit of the Master was hers, manifested in the home and abroad.

Her pastor,

F. P. MOSS.

A PROGRESSIVE YEAR ON THE CLAY CHARGE.

The Clay charge has made a remarkable step forward in many ways. Over and above an increase along general lines the charge has taken on certain features that show a decided progressiveness and larger growth. It has taken advantage of some fine opportunities and has demonstrated a spirit to do greater things.

On May 13 the Clay Missionary Society was organized with thirteen charter members by the help of Mrs. J. C. Baker and several of the Jonesboro Missionary Society members. On June 26 the Vienna Sunday school was organized with twenty members and a good corps of superintendent and teachers. From July 12 to 15 the Cokesbury School was in session at Clay, which proved to be the best two-teacher school so far in the Conference. Fourteen pupils received certificates, eight others did not finish their course, and over forty persons attended during the entire time. Then Sunday, July 17, the Clay church was organized with 41 charter members, and good interest and enthusiasm prevailed among the people. They are now looking forward to the building of a church with Sunday school accommodations. This has certainly been a happy eight months, and everything points to this being the best year of Clay charge in all of its history.

CLAUDE H. MAYO, Pastor.

REVIVAL AT SHUBUTA.

Our revival meeting at Shubuta, which closed on Sunday, July 17, and began on the previous Sunday, July 10, was as good if not better than any meeting that we have had here for years. Our pastor, Brother J. W. Dawson, did all the preaching. The morning services were especially sweet, as the messages were applicable to the Christian people of the town. The morning services were unusually well attended by all; the men closed up their stores and came in an unusually encouraging way to the pastor. The pastor of the Baptist church here, Brother H. D. Wilson, and his good people stood by us in a very lovely way. The evening services were very interesting, as they were evangelistic, and the appeals were powerful. One very attractive feature of the meeting was the song service, led by young Brother Harman L. Smith, of Ellisville, Miss., who organized the children and young people in what he called "The Booster Band," which functioned well in the meeting. Brother Smith's special songs, which were rendered under difficult circumstances on account of the effects of cold on his throat, were uplifting and inspiring. We can heartily recommend him to any pastor who might need a song leader to help in his meetings, as his work both in song and exhortations are very helpful among the young people as well as all.

One feature of the meeting we were about to fail to mention was that we had three different prayer circles, one downtown in Mr. D. W. Heidelbergh's office for the men at 6:15 evenings; one at the church fifteen minutes before the morning service by the women, and the Boosters at church at 7 o'clock each evening. All these prayer circles were a great help to all who attended them, as well as to the pastor and singer. J. H. MAULDIN.

ZONE MEETING AT COVINGTON.

The Missionary ladies of Covington and Slidell held a zone meeting July 19, at 2:30 p. m., in the Methodist church, Covington, La., attended by thirty people, Mrs. J. A. Bousqet presiding, and Mrs. O. G. Price, secretary. Meeting was opened by singing hymn 10, "Thy Kingdom Come;" prayer was led by Mrs. H. W. Jordan; address of welcome, by Mrs. H. W. Jordan; response, by Mrs. James Robert; talk on "What the Jubilee Year Means," by Mrs. J. R. Westerfield; interesting talk on "Mission Work," by Rev. S. A. Seegers; reading, by Mrs. Brown; solo, by Mrs. H. W. Jordan, "The End of the Road;" in her usual pleasant manner. The secretary read an article on "Zone Organization;" talk on "Social Service Work" and report on sick members, by Mrs. W. P. Davis; hymn 22 was sung; closing prayer by Rev. S. A. Seegers.

This concluded the afternoon meeting. Refreshments were served by the Covington ladies, consisting of punch, delicious sandwiches and iced tea.

Zone meetings were voted a success and greatly enjoyed by all. Slidell was chosen as the place for the next zone meeting.

The ladies did not organize, as it was intended to do, for the reason that the District Secretary, Mrs. Anne L. Swan, or Mrs. K. Rust, could not be in Covington for the meeting.

MRS. W. P. DAVIS,
Corresponding Secretary.

ZONE MEETING AT MER ROUGE.

The second zone meeting of the year 1927 was held in Mer Rouge on June 29, 1927. This was the first meeting under the leadership of our new zone leader, Mrs. Sisson, of Mer Rouge. Mrs. Sisson, after introducing herself and the new secretary, Mrs. Carroll, of Oak Ridge, then gave a splendid talk on the aim of zone meetings, emphasizing the use of the Missionary Voice as a means of inspiration and information, with the goal as "a Voice in every home." A second aim was the general observance of a day of special prayer for our missionaries on March 4; a third aim, to have a live missionary society in every church in our zone.

Mrs. Banta, of West Monroe, had charge of the devotional, reading selections from the Bible showing what Christ teaches of prayer. Mrs. Hunt led in prayer. Roll call showed seventy-seven members present.

There were no members present from Monroe, so several numbers on the program were omitted. Mrs. Perrott, of Oak Ridge, most ably presented a "Plea from Cotton Mill Workers." The next number was, "Mobilizing Girlhood Forces in the State Schools," by Mrs. McBride, of Bastrop. She gave several convincing reasons why this was necessary, and told us some things of the work already done.

A musical quartet, by the Oak Ridge girls, "Do Your Best for Jesus," added much to the program. A round table discussion on "What the Zone Meetings Should Mean to Us" was led by Mrs. Cummins, of West Monroe; Mrs. Norris, of Oak Ridge; Mrs. Rodgers, of Bastrop, and Mrs. Higgenbotham, of Mer Rouge.

Mrs. Gallager, president of the Mer Rouge Auxiliary, welcomed the zone meeting in her gracious manner, and Mrs. Early, president of the Bastrop Auxiliary, extended an invitation for the next meeting, to be held in Bastrop, Sept. 29.

Then a pleasant social hour followed, during which refreshments were served.

MRS. W. D. CARROLL,
Secretary.

ZONE MEETING AT McCOMB.

On Monday, May 30, 1927, the various churches of south central zone met in regular session, with the Pearl River Avenue Church, of McComb, Miss., as hostess.

Owing to the fact that our president, Mrs. Abney, was kept away by illness in the family, Mrs. W. T. Denman presided over the meeting.

The devotional was conducted by Brother Campbell, of Pearl River Avenue Church, with Scripture reading from the twelfth chapter of Romans.

The following program was most ably rendered:

Address of welcome, Mrs. W. W. Felder, of Pearl River Avenue Auxiliary; response, Mrs. A. N. Maroun, of LaBranch Street Auxiliary; "How Shall We Get Our Women Who Are Already Members of the Woman's Missionary Society to Feel a Keener Sense of Their Responsibility, to Have a Broader Spiritual Vision, and Become More Interested in Missionary Activities?" Mrs. H. L. Norton, of the Summit Auxiliary. This subject was brilliantly handled by Mrs. Notorn. To quote her in part: "From my viewpoint, to help create a keener sense of responsibility an efficient leadership is the first prerequisite. Let our ladies be deeply pious and thoroughly consecrated. To get a larger spiritual vision we need the constant leadership of the Holy Spirit. This necessitates prayer and meditation.

"How Shall We Reach the Women of Our Church at Large?" Mrs. Bennie D. Flowers, of Adams. This was a splendid paper, beautifully rendered, and full of valuable thought for Christian workers. "The Increase in the Pledge," Mrs. G. J. Jones, substituting for Mrs. Jas. Fly. Mrs. Jones' message dealing with this very vital question of finances was very instructive. At this time Mrs. Denman asked that we work together to get our auxiliary pledge up 15 per cent, stating that the easiest way would be for each member to increase her individual pledge 15 per cent. Vocal solo, "He Took My Place," Mrs. S. L. Bulkin, of Adams. A season of prayer was then opened, consisting of sentence prayers offered by the presidents of the auxiliaries. A paper on "The Moore Community Center," was presented by Mrs. A. H. Jones, of Centenary, McComb. Mrs. Jones drew a vivid picture of this center of our work in Biloxi, presenting to the audience the practical and spiritual life of the workers, as well as the people among whom they work. "Gleanings from the Council," was the subject of the message from our Con-

WHAT OF YOUR BOY?

His education and training and the development of his mind, body and character depends on you, his parents. It is a grave responsibility and you should meet the issue squarely.

As every boy looks back over his past training he can point to some one man who largely dominated his formative period and impressed his personality for good upon him.

To thousands of boys Robt. K. Morgan is this dominating personality. He has been training boys for thirty years. He knows boys and loves them. He knows their problems and can guide them aright.

He has a strong faculty composed of high-class Christian teachers. A postal card to Mr. L. I. Mills, Secretary, Morgan School, Petersburg, Tenn., will bring you a catalog and full information about the school.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

By Rev. C. D. Atkinson, Conference Superintendent.

Rev. H. L. Johns, of Natchitoches, writes that plans are under way for a fine celebration of Sunday School Day in his church, which will take place during the summer and will probably include a pageant by the young people.

We are pleased to hear that many schools are being represented in the leadership training schools at Lake Junaluska and Mount Sequoyah. Mrs. R. E. Smith, of Shreveport, is at Mount Sequoyah preparing for work in the Parent-Teacher and Home department, and we expect to reap the benefit of Mrs. Smith's pursuits in our training schools in the fall.

A number of Alexandria folk have motored up to Mount Sequoyah and will participate in the schools there; at Junaluska Mrs. T. W. Holloman hopes to complete work on her Gold Seal diploma, and Miss Emma Hickman, secretary at First Church, is also taking a course there. Your Conference Superintendent left this week for Junaluska, accompanied as far as Atlanta by his wife and daughter, who will visit Georgia relatives while he is in school. Mr. T. W. Holloman, superintendent at First Church, is likewise traveling toward this beautiful lake resort for further work.

We are grateful for all who are taking their vacations with a definite purpose in view, and we trust that many Louisiana Sunday school friends will be reunited at these two religious resorts.

Minden District is planning another fine rally, which will be the second one this summer. In August, about the 23rd, workers from all over the district will gather at Pine Grove, about eight miles north of Minden, for an all-day rally with old-fashioned dinner on the ground, and a fine, well balanced program has been worked out. Dr. F. C. Wren, district secretary; Rev. K. W. Dodson, presiding elder, and Miss Ava Wren, superintendent of the Pine Grove school, are working hard to make this a success, and have the hearty co-operation of the whole district.

The writer was in Monroe last week in the interest of Standard Training School there, which is planned for early fall. Louisiana Methodism, remembering the wonderful success of the State-wide conference in the spring, predicts success for whatever Monroe undertakes.

The date of the Alexandria District Standard Training School has been set, and will be held in September. Committees are at work now on the plans, and it is expected that the school will be one of the largest of the year.

We have a helpful letter from our friend, Brother A. M. Mayo, superintendent of the Sunday school at Lake Charles, in which he speaks of the helpfulness of the leaflets on Sunday school work, and asks for quite a supply of them. We are always glad to be of service, and we are always glad to know when the leaflets are of benefit.

* * *

The latest word from Mrs. A. K. McLellan, who is ill at the Baptist Hospital in New Orlans, is that she is little improved. Both Brother McLellan and his wife have our deep sympathy, and daily our prayers ask for her speedy recovery.

NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

The Treasurer of the Sunday School Board, Rev. H. P. Lewis, Ruleville, Miss. has heard from the districts as follows, Sunday School Day offering: Aberdeen District, 23 schools, $168.27; Columbus District, 10 schools, $148.64; Corinth District, 7 schools, $67.63; Greenville District, 11 schools, $87.64; Greenwood District, 8 schools, $69.82; Grenada District, 8 schools, $105.61; Sardis District, 17 schools, $104.33.

Every dollar of this money is used in our training of officers and teachers in Standard and Cokesbury schools. We have projected forty or more Cokesbury schools, a large number of them have been held with marked success. We have helped people that appreciate the training given them and there is every reason to believe the church will feel the influence of what has been done for these most excellent people. If the day has not been observed and you need help to have it done, call upon me and I shall do my best to render any assistance possible. If the day has been observed be good enough to send the money to the treasurer. One trouble with this notice is it will not be read by the one who is delinquent. Judgment Day is coming. "Inasmuch as ye did it not."

We hope to check up every school that is being guided by the Program of Work. The C type school covers point IX when it observes Sunday School Day, using the program and sending the offering to the treasurer. The B type school is expected to observe Sunday School Day and Children's Week. The standing of every school will be published. Every item in the Program of Work has something to do with the kingdom of God more fully. Before conversion souls must be nurtured; after conversion souls must be nurtured and trained in the work of building the kingdom. Everybody knows this, but every leader does not put it into practice.

What can a church do without a trained, consecrated leadership? How are we ever to bring in a better day if we do not train men and women so they can lead the multitudes to Christ? North Mississippi Conference has only one school that is devoted to the task of training young women so they may be great mothers and successful teachers. The young women who have gone out into the world to take their places as mothers and teachers are a credit to Grenada College or any other college for that matter. No State college can do for our young women what Grenada College is doing and will continue to do. Our young women need Grenada College and the college cannot continue without a number of them. If every praying Methodist in the Conference could be persuaded to pray earnestly for a time, each day, for ten days light would break in upon the heart of the man at the head of this school, and a new day would dawn in our Conference. Fight the college if you can serve your day and generation in this way, starve it to death by withholding your support if you think you can thus glorify God by so doing. May the Lord strengthen and give courage to those who are maintaining this institution of our church.

FRECKLES

Tells How to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots and Have a Beautiful Complexion

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as Othine—double strength—is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of Othine from any drug or department store and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is, seldom that more than an ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful complexion.

Be sure to ask for double strength Othine as this is sold under guarantee of money-back if it fails to remove your freckles.

COLUMBIA LEAGUE ACTIVE.

It is with pleasure that we write about the splendid League at Columbia. Our Conference president writes that he attended a very splendid meeting of this League on Sunday, July 17. Mr. S. A. (Ted) Summers is president of this chapter. This League has elected for themselves a lady whom they call their sponsor. A lady old enough to be a real sponsor for them, yet not too old to be in sympathy with them and be a real help and guide for them, a fine Christian character whom they will delight to honor.

We know that this splendid League is going to move forward during this year, and hope it will be our privilege to hear from them.

EPWORTH HI LEAGUE CAMP, CAMP DANTZLER, NEAR HATTIESBURG, AUG. 29-SEPT. 3.

Epworth Hi Leaguers! Don't forget the wonderful opportunity that will be yours to be at Camp Dantzler with the best of Hi League leaders, B. Frank Pim. Those of you who have had the privilege of association with this outstanding leader will surely want to go again. Those who have not been can't afford to miss this glorious privilege. Below we are printing some suggestions sent us by Miss Nall:

Suggestions for Hi League Camp, Camp Dantzler, Hattiesburg, Aug. 29-Sept. 3, 1927.

1. One delegate allowed for each ten members of Hi League. Other names may be sent for waiting list. The name of the delegate and $1 for registration fee, which will apply on board, must reach the Conference Hi League Superintendent, Miss Berta Nall, Petal, Miss., on or before Aug. 10.

2. One dollar registration fee plus $4 will be charged for board.

3. Specify how coming and when you will arrive.

4. If coming in cars, come to Main Street Methodist Church, Hattiesburg, Miss. There will be some one there to show you the way to the camp at 9 and 12 o'clock a. m., also 3 p. m. People coming on the train will be met at stations.

5. Things to bring: Double deck wire cots will be used—bring cover and linens, towels, tin plate, cup, fork and knife (have these marked so you will know them); bring camp clothes, bathing suits, etc.

6. If possible bring something for an exhibit—booklets, posters, etc.

SERVICE OF SONG AND STORY.

The leader for the afternoon was Mr. Lloyd Brannon, president of the League. The service opened with two beautiful hymns chosen by the choir. The Scripture for the afternoon was the twenty-third Psalm, read by Miss Naoma Everett. The songs following the Scripture were chosen that they all had bearing on the twenty-third Psalm. Several beautiful hymns followed the Scripture, in which both the choir and congregation joined in heartily. The special feature of the afternoon was a beautiful duet, rendered by Miss Elizabeth Patrick and Miss Doris Holt, "Look for the Beautiful." In closing Mrs. J. L. Greenway gave a very inspirational talk, and much good seemed to come from the evening service.

RECEPTION AT BOGALUSA.

Dear Mr. Editor: Just a little note about a very interesting reception held at the Bogalusa church, Friday night, July 22.

The ladies of the church having overheard Rev. R. W. Tucker make the statement that his fortieth anniversary as a minister of the gospel would be on the 22d of July, they prepared for him a delightful surprise after an interesting program of songs, recitations and speeches held in the Sunday school annex. The good ladies of the church had fostered a movement to present Brother Tucker with a present, and this was done on this occasion. The present was wrapped up in a very large box, and Brother Tucker had to unwrap for a long time before he could get to it, and when he did he could only find the end of a one-dollar bill sticking out of a little crack. His first impulse was to pull it, which he did, and to the surprise of most of the others present who were not on to the trick, he pulled for about twenty-five feet before the money gave out. One of the laymen present is said to have offered a silent prayer that it would never give out. When it was examined it was found to be forty new, crisp one-dollar bills. Of course, Brother Tucker knows what to do with this kind of a present.

Yours very truly,

B. D. TALLEY.

SHERARD DAILY VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL.

The Daily Vacation Bible School held at Sherard (North Mississippi Conference), July 22, closed last Friday, after a very happy and successful two weeks of activity. The school was conducted by Miss Martha Stewart, from Scarritt, Nashville. Miss Stewart is a splendid leader, and the school spirit was good.

Our school was small in number, only thirty-four children, but some drove ten miles daily to attend. Every child in our section was enrolled.

Mrs. Ratliff had the devotional period, Mrs. Parker, the Bible period of both groups (we had no boys from 10 to 14). Miss Gotcher was at the piano. Miss McKeown and Miss Lockhart had the hand-work of the younger froup. Mrs. Majure had the hand-work of the older girls. Miss Stewart led the music and the games.

Our hand-work was packed and sent to the Cumberland Mountain school, Crossville, Tenn.

The school on the last night gave a demonstration — songs were sung, stunts given, hand-work exhibited, and a pageant, "Into All the World," presented.

Ice cream cones were served the children on Friday morning by the local Woma's Missionary Society.

MRS. W. H. RATLIFF.

Sherard, Miss.

DAILY VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL.

The Daily Vacation Bible School, under the auspices of the Naborton Missionary Society, closed Friday, July 15, after two weeks of interesting study.

During the first week each child made a scrapbook, and twenty-four of these books were completed and handed in. The scrapbooks are to be sent to children's wards in nearby hospitals.

Every day Mrs. Denham, who was in charge of this school, told a Bible story which the children dramatized. Each day's program included a missionary story also, and many of these were dramatized. The missionary stories included a study of "Two Young Arabs," by Zwemer, and "Tales of Moslem Lands," by Reid.

The second week the children constructed a miniature Moslem village, and colored pictures of various Moslem types which they pasted on a large map of the moslem world to illustrate the dress and habits of the inhabitants of each Moslem country.

Besides Mrs. Annie B. Denham, who directed the school, and Mrs. B. A. Hebert, who played the piano, Mrs. F. W. Denham, Mrs. R. A. Bevill, Mrs. T. O. Weed, and Misses Gladys and Myrtle Porter assisted at various times.—Mansfield (La.) Enterprise.

ference Secretary, Mrs. T. B. Cottrell, of Magnolia, who substituted for Mrs. L. M. Alford. Mrs. Cottrell's messages always contain much of informative and spiritual value to her hearers.

A letter to Mrs. Abney was read by the secretary from Mrs. J. Frank Decell, District Secretary, of Glance, Miss., asking that the zone leaders cooperate with her in every way.

The roll call was answered by six from Adams, twenty-one from Centenary, one from Fernwood, fourteen from Pearl River Avenue, five from Summit, and fifteen from LaBranch Street.

We were glad to welcome four visitors from Magnolia and one from the Central Baptist church.

An invitation from Summit was gladly accepted for the next meeting, Aug. 29, with the LaBranch Street Auxiliary in charge of the program.

Mrs. G. I. Jones mentioned the fact that she hoped every Christian present was thinking of prohibition and the coming elections, and to prove that we are "thinking" Christians, her remarks started a round table discussion on prohibition, and the W. C. T. U. and its work. During the discussion some one asked that we each secure a W. C. T. U. pledge card, sign it, pray over it, then vote the way we pray.

NEW ORGANIZATION AT GREENDALE.

A Woman's Missionary Society was organized at Greendale church, where Rev. J. H. Morrow is pastor, on the evening of July 8, with eleven members. Mrs. Emma Ennis was chosen president; Mrs. Carl Lehmann, vice president; Mrs. Sallie Case, secretary-treasurer, and Miss Leota Lehmann, corresponding secretary of the Society.

MISS LEOTA LEHMANN.

ZONE MEETING AT CRANDALL.

Zone 2 met at Crandall, Miss., June 23, at noon. A delicious plate lunch was served by Crandall Auxiliary. The meeting opened at 1 o'clock by singing song 238. Mrs. Mason, zone leader, conducted the devotional, reading verses 1-15 of the second chapter of Philippians. Prayer was led by Rev. W. J. Dawson. A most cordial welcome was given by the president of Crandall Auxiliary. The response was made by Mrs. Mason. Minutes of last zone meeting were read and adopted.

"Facing a New Task," was discussed by Mrs. Risher, Pachuta Auxiliary, and "Purpose of Zone Meeting," by Mrs. Williams, Quitman Auxiliary. Mrs. Hand, Sr., in her usual gracious manner, told of the importance of the organization, bringing out the old way of conducting a Missionary Society and the new way. To make this more impressive a pageant to demonstrate the old way and the new way was given by ladies from Shubuta Auxiliary. Question box was then opened, and several questions of weakness in our auxiliaries were discussed.

Pachuta Auxiliary invited the zone for next meeting, which will be some time in September. Mrs. Mason read a letter from Mrs. Huggins, District Secretary, urging each auxiliary to send delegates to the district meeting July 7, at Waynesboro, Miss.

The following number from each auxiliary were present: Crandall, 13; Pachuta, 3; Shubuta, 9; Quitman, 8; visitors, 6. The meeting closed with prayer by Mrs. Hand, Sr., from Shubuta Auxiliary.

MRS. T. B. WILKINS.
Pachuta, Miss.

HATTIESBURG DISTRICT MEETING.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Hattiesburg District, met at Leakesville, June 9, with a good number of delegates and visitors present. The meeting was called to order by the District President, Mrs. Walters, and Brother Grice led the devotional. The address of welcome, in a most cordial manner, was extended the delegates by Mrs. Jenkins; and the response was made by Mrs. Crump, of Collins.

The president's message to the meeting was very impressive. A most interesting talk of the Jubilee year was made by Mrs. Cottrell, corresponding secretary, she, in her splendid way, giving us a new vision of the work, all of the future work being Jubilee work, in which all of our leaders should be women of great spirituality. Mrs. Saunders, Superintendent of Young People, made a splendid talk on her work, making a strong appeal for the Young People, helping and teaching them in church work, for the children of to-day are our leaders of to-morrow.

The president introduced Miss Boykin, field secretary of Whitworth College, and in her splendid manner made a talk on her work, in which she is most interested. Her talk was very inspirational and informing concerning the religious training of the girls of Whitworth College. Miss Boykin made a plea that each auxiliary give a little more time in one or more meetings, in a helping way, to Whitworth College, and it is hoped her talk will help to get more in training in that school.

The song, "Where He Leads I Will Follow," was sung, then the children gave a playlet, "A Garden of Children," each child representing some foreign country. It was well given and very much enjoyed.

Mrs. Cottrell explained "Why a 15 per cent of the pledge" was made. The enlargement of our work and of course a need of more funds to carry on our work, has caused the need of the increase. Miss Bryant, our missionary, has gone to Africa in our stead, and we are to help her carry the message of Jesus and his love to the natives of the Dark Continent.

Mrs. Cottrell then made a talk on the two Wesley Houses, one at Biloxi and the other at Meridian; then she told of the new center of work, the Moore Community House at Back Bay, which is principally to help the young people of that community. The noon hour arriving, the delegates and visitors were invited to a most delightful dinner, which was spread under the trees.

The afternoon session began about 1 o'clock, and the devotional was led by Brother Carter, and then the song, "The Everlasting Portion," was sung, and Brother Carter made an inspirational talk on "Let This Mind Be in You Which Was Also in Christ." Two zone leaders were present, and made reports on their zone meetings, Mrs. Black of Richton zone, and Mrs. Edwards of Hattiesburg zone. Mrs. Jones, wife of our presiding elder, was introduced to the conference.

Mrs. Cottrell asked questions of the different zone members, in regard to their work; these questions giving the members helpful suggestions.

Mrs. Carter made a talk on the increase of the circulation of the Missionary Voice. The Junior work was presented by Mrs. Allsup, of Broad Street, Hattiesburg.

Mrs. Edwards gave a good talk on "Every Woman a Member of the Missionary Society." The discussion period was begun by Mrs. Jones telling of the work of the different Circles in her society, their principal work being service to others. Then Mrs. Cottrell followed by a talk on the instructions of the Council meeting, urging that the auxiliaries study the books outlined for the Missionary Societies. She then asked the questions and instructed us on auxiliary reports, urging that all make their reports and on time.

Mrs. Saunders also urged that the Young People's reports be sent to her promptly. The Junior work was correlated with the Epworth League, and was presented by Mrs. Cottrell. The round table discussion on how the auxiliaries conducted their meetings was very helpful. No invitation being extended for next year, that was left for a later date, when an invitation may be given. "Do Something for Jesus To-Day," was sung and the meeting adjourned with many thanks to the good people of Leakesville for their kind hospitality.

SPRINGHILL DAILY VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL.

The Methodist church of Springhill, La., of which Rev. Howard E. Pfost is pastor, held its first Daily Vacation Bible School from June 13 to June 26. According to Dr. W. K. Dodson, presiding elder of Minden District, this was also the first of such schools to be held in the Minden District. The school was directed by Miss Dorothy Hillard, of Scarritt College for Christian Workers, where she has had special training since she received her A.B. degree from Galloway College, Searcy, Ark., in June, 1926. She is a competent and consecrated girl.

Mrs. J. F. Giles became interested in this work on hearing it presented at the Woman's Missionary Council at Shreveport, and, after conferring with her pastor in regard to the possibilities of such a school at Springhill, asked for one of the thirty young women who were to be sent out from Scarritt College.

The school proved to be a happy experiment. The public school building was used. The women and older girls of the community responded to the call for volunteer workers in a fine way. The Baptist people co-operated well, about one-half of the enrollment being from the Baptist churches. Three hours of the morning were given to this work. Each day, as a part of the worship program, an offering was made by the children, which offering was supplemented by all present at the graduation program, Sunday evening, June 26. This program was beautifully rendered and deeply appreciated by the large congregation that was present. The total offering was divided equally between the Methodist orphanage at Ruston and the Baptist orphanage at Monroe.

The enrollment for the school was sixty-two, not including the pupils who entered after the enrollment was closed, besides twelve volunteer workers. The average attendance per enrollment was about ninety per cent, this being evidence that there was a high tide of interest throughout.

The program of work included worship, story telling, music, games, memory work, and craft work. At the close of the school the craft work was put on display in one of the large show windows of the largest department store in Webster Parish, the commissary of the Pine Woods Lumber Company. A number of the things made by the boys were given to the public buildings of the town. Some things were given to the volunteer workers.

On the last Friday afternoon of the school the children were given a picnic several miles out of town.

Miss Hillard was entertained at the parsonage and at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Giles.

Interesting features of the graduation program were as follows:

"The Beatitudes," by Horace Obier; a reading. "Count Your Blessings," by Maurice Payne; a reading, "Look Pleasant," by Christel Kilpatrick, Fred Obier, Carol Fomby and Mertis Bonner; a duet, "Father, We Thank Thee," by Evelyn Reynolds and Maurice Payne; Psalm 23, by Jack Collins; paraphrase of "O Master, Let Me Walk With Thee," by Annie Pear Holloman; story, "Not What We Give, but What We Share," by Elizabeth Russell, and a Bible chart drill, by Doris Britt, Freda and Fern Carroll, Howard Reeves, Sybil Jernagin, Bill Talley, Louise Dean, Elizabeth Russell, May Williams, and Evelyn Reynolds.

Keep Away from Calomel!!
It is Quicksilver—Mercury

Never take calomel. It is mercury—a dangerous drug. If you are constipated, bilious, sick, headachy, stomach sour, meals don't taste right, hot days make you drowsy and lazy, take Dodson's Liver Tone. That's all you need.

Calomel salivates. That's why you have to take salts the next day to get it out of your system so it will not eat your bones. You have to stay at home a day to recuperate from the shock it gives you. No wonder Dodson's Liver Tone is so popular. All you do is take a spoonful at night. By morning you are cleaned out good, head is clear, you feel as light as a feather; you are not sick, no danger of salivation, and you can eat anything you want. Think of that.

Get the big bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone from your nearest store. They all have it. Keep it in the house so you will have it handy to take nights before going to bed.

GOOD NEWS FROM BOSSIER CITY.

The two weeks revival services of the Bossier City Methodist church closed Sunday night with an overflow congregation. This revival service, the most successful ever held in the church, was under the leadership of the pastor, Rev. Don E. Dulaney, who on his return from the Seashore Divinity School, held in Biloxi, Miss., where he completed his four years' study course in the ministry, felt deeply impressed that the opportune time had arrived for a great revival of religion in the Bossier City Methodist church.

Rallying together all the organized forces of his church, plans were completed within a short time for a two weeks' revival service. A complete religious survey of the city was made, prayer services were held by the different organizations of the church each day, and the tabernacle arranged to accommodate the crowd, with fans for every one furnished by the Carter-Pulley folks.

Brother Dulaney had the hearty co-operation of the pastors of the Baptist and Presbyterian churches, as well as the members of these churches, and as he brought truly revival messages full of zeal and enthusiasm there was a great response on the part of his listeners. Twenty accessions were made to the church, and the spirit of true religion greatly revived within the ranks of the churches. Mr. Pat Neal, of Shreveport ably conducted the musical program of the services, assisted by Misses Jessie Hickman, on the saxophone, Daisy Caves and Rev. Don E. Dulaney on the violin, and Prof. Wilcox, of Shreveport, on the cornet; Mmes. Hal Alston, Tom Hickman and C. E. Friend as pianists.

Rev. Don E. Dulaney is much loved by his people, and is considered as a fine asset to his community.

LETTER FROM AFRICA.

Dear Editor: As is often the case in this land of uncertain connections, Bishop Cannon out-traveled his message announcing his coming, consequently, instead of a caravan only a messenger sent from Tunda station met him at the railroad station. But being a bishop, and especially the one he is, a mere lack of connection does not delay him. He impressed the importance of his mission on a company man sufficiently for him to gather eighteen of his workmen and send him on to Tunda without delay. He spent only a short time at Tunda, but as is characteristic of him few things escaped his notice.

His arrival at Wembo Nyama was such as is accorded only a big chief indeed. The whole village turned out to meet him. The caravan came trotting in, loudly chanting their best hammock songs, while every villager was eagerly trying to get near enough to give Uwandji (chief) Ongenogeno (gladness) moyo (greetings). All the village drummers were beating a glad welcome as they trotted with the throng; all banners obtainable were blowing; several hundred people were waving palm branches. Such demonstrations touch one in a peculiar way. It is child-like, but the genuineness of their expression of welcome gets hold of one's heart, and often it is difficult to keep the tears back.

Bishop Cannon opened the Conference on the morning of May 6, with all workers present except Mr. and Mrs. Davis and Mr. De Ruiter, the latter was gone down the river with the steamship Texas to Kinshasa. Mr. Davis arrived the following day, while Mrs. Davis remained at Lusambo to take care of the work there.

One of the first subjects discussed was the extent of the tribe and number of stations we should have to cover the field. It was decided that we should have two main stations, Wembo Nyama and Tunda, and keep Minga open, reopen Kabengele as a transport station, moving from the old site to another place near by, and keep a missionary family at Lusambo until released by the Presbyterian Mission. With the few workers which we now have, it is going ot keep us very busy to do it. How we do need more workers! Pray with us that they may be called and that the means may be provided for sending them out.

Many other subjects in regard to the work were discussed. The reports of all the departments of the work from the different stations were given. There were some very discouraging features, but enough encouraging to make us want to redouble our efforts and continue the battle. Civilization is coming very fast to these people, too fast really for their good. It makes readjustments difficult. Think of aeroplanes flying over areas of this country where a few years ago a bicycle or a motor car would have made the people take to the bush. One can easily see how many new things are absorbing the interest of the people and how hard it is for them to take time to think much on spiritual subjects. There are many hindrances which could be mentioned.

Our hope lies in the children of this land. At Wembo Nyama Miss Armstrong is doing a splendid work with a Boy Scout organization. The Epworth League organized by Miss Miller is doing good work. The school work, with Mr. Barden in charge, is taking on new life. The home for little girls, under Mrs. Anker, has about as many girls as ever at one time.

The work on other stations is being as well taken care of as is possible with the few workers. Mr. Ayres, Miss Foreman and the Lynn family have been at Tunda. When Miss Bryant arrives she is to go to Tunda, and Miss Foreman to Minga. Dr. and Mrs. Lewis are to return to Tunda, their former place. Bishop Cannon was well plased with the work he saw there.

Mr. Kinman and the Reeve family have been at Minga. Dr. Miller is to go thence to help them when she arrives.

Mrs. Cannon was far from well when Bishop Cannon left home to come out here. We wish to thank her for this great sacrifice in lending him to us for this Conference. The Bishop's attitude toward the missionaries was like a wise father to his children, gentle, kind, yet showing the spirit of a great leader, which he truly is. He loves the work, it is on his heart.

The devotional exercises were inspiring and greatly enjoyed by every one. There was a beautiful harmonious spirit prevalent throughout the entire Conference.

Vol. 73—No. 32. Official Organ of the Louisiana, Mis issippi, and North Mississippi Conferences, Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Whole No. 3661.

HENRY T. CARLEY, D.D., Editor. NEW ORLEANS, LA., THURSDAY, AUGUST 11, 1927. CHAS. O. CHALMERS, Manager.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

We doubt if a "running commentary" on some chapter will run a prayer meeting very successfully or reflect a very complimentary commentary upon the pastor who waits until the last moment to prepare for his mid-week service.

* * *

Some essayist has said that "the devil is an ass." Such is indeed true, and he ought to be pictured with long ears instead of horns. Sin is utter foolishness—tragic folly.

By a strange misuse of language we call a man who believes little or nothing at all of the eternal verities of God a freethinker. In reality such a man is a cramped thinker, a bound thinker. His thought and his life are like the hopeless flutterings of some wild bird against the wires of his cage. That man is in reality the free thinker whose thought and imagination can take wing, who can soar out into the infinity of the Eternal and lay firm hold upon the throne of God. Similarly it is not an accurate thing to call a man who discards the old things and breakes with the fixed beliefs of his people a Modernist. Few seem to be quite willing to admit being what the word has come in a vague way to mean, but doubtless some are secretly pleased at the suggestion of up-to-dateness and progressiveness and advancement in the term. But not so fast. Antiquityist would be just as good a word whether it could be found in the dictionary or not. There was a sect of great power in the Master's time who exercised great influence in the Sanhedrin and usually named the high priest. They held that there is no resurrection of the dead and other views that were quite opposed to the traditional beliefs of the thousands of Israel in that day. So why call a man who parts company with what has been commonly believed among his people a Modernist. Such a procedure is as old as the hills. It has the cobwebs of the ages on it. Why not call such a man Sadducee? And beware of his leaven?

One of our contributors draws a very good distinction between the statement that the "Bible contains the word of God," and the statement that the "Bible is the word of God." Ponder the difference between the two. Is it not bad that those who only believe that the Bible contains the word of God have to follow the golden thread of truth through a maze of error, in their own opinion? Fancy saying, "This book is a book that contains Geometry?" Who would think of saying other than "This book is a Geometry?"

A prominent layman of our church in New Orleans, in commenting upon what the assistant recently had to say concerning the orderly conduct of our public worship, said that he had often observed that "some preachers seem to take a delight in shocking the sensibilities of a congregation" by the crude way in which they conduct a service.

In the rural sections and in many of the towns the present is a period of great activity in the matter of a revival meeting. It cannot be denied that careful preparation should be made for such a meeting and that a capable man should be secured to do the preaching, if the pastor himself is not to do the preaching. But sometimes the intensive prepartion that is made and the big organization that is effected may, without the realization of it, turn the thought from the fact the first need is the presence and the power of the Holy Ghost. Let there be "great searchings of heart," as with one of the tribes of Israel on a notable day in the long ago, and let there be waiting in the upper room.

The assistant was greatly interested recently, in going over some early minutes, to read the following item taken from the Journal of the "fifth session of the Louisiana Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, held in the Elijah Steel Chapel, City of Lafayette, Parish of Jefferson, La., Dec. 25-31, 1850:

"Brothers McTyeire and Randle offered the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the character of no member of this Conference be allowed to pass unless he has taken up the appointed collection in his circuit or station during the year; or can satisfy the Conference for the neglect of this duty of every Methodist traveling preacher.

"And the same was adopted."

Seventy-seven years ago the fathers of Methodism in this section held it the "duty of every Methodist traveling preacher" to raise the Conference collections, budget or any other system, and we doubt if there is any way at the present time for the pastor to get from under this responsibility of seeing that "the appointed collections in his circuit or station are raised." Brethren, the time is growing short—Conference is coming.

"Try this on your piano," has been a great slogan in the advertising of musical pieces. Try this in the third quarterly conference, even after the pastor has answered in the affirmative Question 17—ask the persons present to tell you how many General Rules we have. One presiding elder has tried this in every third quarterly conference he has held and has yet to get a correct answer. Our people ought to be better informed concerning our church.

Some one has strikingly remarked that there are few in the upper room, in this day of great activity in the church, along certain lines, because there are so many in the supper room. It was Napoleon's dictum that an army marches on its stomach, and seemingly some think that the church can only grow through much tarrying in the supper room.

Announcement is made by Dr. Ernest H. Cherrington, General Secretary, that the International Congress of the World League Against Alcoholism will be held at Winona Lake, Indiana, August 17-23. This will be the first meeting of this kind since the convention at Toronto in 1922, at which representatives from sixty-six countries were present.

At the Winona Congress, every aspect of the beverage liquor problem will be discussed. Delegates are expected from practically all the organized temperance forces of the United States and Canada, and from most of the other countries of the world.

We agree with the statement contained in the announcement that "at this particular time, when the prohibition movement in the United States is assailed by the most bitterly hostile alnd determined opposition that has ever been arrayed against any human welfare movement, and when the prohibition forces in the rest of the world are watching eagerly for the success of national prohibition in America, such a gathering as this International Congress is of deep interest." And we trust the congress will be able to make a real contribution toward the solution of a world problem.

A great evangelistic conference under the auspices of the Southern Methodist Assembly and the General Conference Committee on Evangelism will be held at Lake Junaluska August 21-26. This is designed to be a time of mobilizing for a church-wide revival and every phase and problem of evangelistic work will be discussed. Controverted questions, it is said, will be avoided and problems common to the church will be discussed. Leaders who have the matter in hand are looking forward to a great inspirational gathering that will reflect a new spirit of hopefulness and faith.

Bishop U. V. W. Darlington and Dr. J. W. Perry, chairman and secretary respectively of the Committee on Evangelism, and Ralph E. Nollner, General Superintendent of the Southern Assembly, are behind the movement and are sparing no effort to make this meeting effective for the cause of the kingdom.

Dr. Luther Bridgers is chairman of the Program Committee and a program has been outlined that should be of interest and inspiration to those who are privileged to enjoy it. Dr. John A. Hutton, editor of the British Weekly, and Bishop Darlington will be among the speakers. We shall publish the full program of this meeting in our next issue.

GOD OUR FATHER.

Souls of men! why will ye scatter
Like a crowd of frightened sheep?
Foolish hearts! why will ye wander
From a love so true and deep?

It is God. His love looks mighty
But is mightier than it seems;
'Tis our Father; and His fondness
Goes far out beyond our dreams.

There's a wideness in God's mercy
Like the wideness of the sea;
There's a kindness in His justice
That is more than liberty.

But we make his love too narrow
By false limits of our own;
And we magnify his strictness
With a zeal he will not own.

If our love were but more simple,
We should take Him at His word;
And our lives would be all sunshine
In the presence of our Lord.

THE LIFTED CHRIST.

By H. Walter Featherstun, D.D.

Almost under the shadow of his cross Christ daringly declared: "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." John, who wrote the utterance, declared that Christ said this, "signifying what death he should die."

Mrs. Margaret J. Preston has in her volume of poems entitled, "Cartoons," a beautiful story entitled, "Murillo's Trance." Late one evening in an old Moorish chapel in Seville, Spain, the old sexton went in to extinguish the lights.

"So shuffling on, he neared
The altar with its single lamp alight.
Above, touched with its glow, the chapel's pride,
It's one Ribera hung: a fearful sad
Soul-harrowing picture of the stark dead Christ
Stretched on the cross beneath a ghastly glare
Of lurid rift, that made more terrible
The God-forsaken loneliness."

Calling back to his assistant, the old sexton cried:

"Why, Pedro, only see,
The boy kneels still! What ails him, think you? here
He came long hours before the vesper chime;
And all the while * * *
* * * I have not missed him once
From that same spot. What marvel if he were
Some lunatic escaped from Cavidad's?
As moveless as the statues
Niched around, a boy before the picture knelt,
His hands tight clenched and his moist forehead strewn
With tossings of dark hair. Upon his arm
The rude old man sprang such a sudden grasp
As caused a start; while in his ear he cried
Sharply: 'Get hence! What do you here so late?'
Slow on the questioner he turned a face
Strangely pathetic, with wide-gazing eyes
And wistful brows, and lips that faintly made
Essay to speak before the words would come,
And an imploring lifting of the hands
That seemed a prayer:
'I wait, I wait,' he said,
Till Joseph bring the linen pure and white—
Till Mary fetch the spices; till they come,
Peter and John and all the holy women,
And take him down; but oh! they tarry long."

That boy kneeling thus entranced before the painting of Ribera was Estaban Murillo, who became the master artist of Spain. What was it that so entranced him? It was not the skillful coloring, nor the splendid perspective, nor the pose of the perfect human figure. It was the Christ—the lifted Christ of Calvary. This was an individual fulfillment of the prophecy uttered by the Christ nineteen hundred years ago: "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." The artist boy in the old Spanish church three centuries ago is but a type of millions of others in all these nineteen centuries drawn upwards—lifted in love and life and thought by the lifted Christ of Calvary.

The Christ hanging on the cross is the most unique, the most absolutely wonderful character that ever came into the range of human knowledge. He is divine, having all the supreme perfections that belong alone to God; and yet he is a man in the truest sense, the one ideal perfect man earth ever bore on her bosom where millions tread. He, of all beings called men, in all the ages of human time, has met the divine ideal of man. He is also the loveliest of all human characters. No man, no woman, no sweet and beautiful child that ever lived has so touched human hearts, and won human love, and charmed human thought, and lured human lives, and molded human destiny, as has this peerless man of men by his matchless loveliness. In the best men earth has known we find something less than perfect manhood.

"But thee, O man's best Man, O love's best Love,
O perfect life in perfect labor writ,
What if or yet, what mole, what flaw, what lapse,
What least defect or shadow of defect,
What rumor tattled by an enemy,
Of inference loose, what lack of grace
Even in torture's grasp, or sleeps or deaths—
Oh, what amiss may I forgive in thee,
Jesus, good Paragon, thou Crystal Christ?"

With all this, it must yet be said, that it is not the life of the Christ, stainless and heroic and lordly standing out in unparalleled perfection, nor is it his spotless character in all its loveliness so ideal, nor his teaching never matched on earth; but it is the death of Christ, "the only begotten" Son of God, on the cross that draws the world upward. "I, if I be lifted up"—"signifying," says John, "what death he should die"—"I, if I be lifted up from the earth, I will draw all men unto me." A lifted Christ means a lifted world. "God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ." This was Paul's prayer and purpose—and Paul was a philosopher.

"In the cross of Christ I glory,
Towering o'er the wrecks of time;
All the light of sacred story
Gathers round its head sublime."

The crucifixion of Christ attracts men because, taken with all that it means, it marks the grandest deed that all the ages has witnessed. It means that God, Creator of all worlds, King of all realms, the Power behind all powers, was voluntarily a sufferer for the sins of his fallen creatures. There is something about this greater than the building of worlds or the governing of a universe.

"Then is it strange the darkest hour
That ever dawned on sinful earth
Should touch the heart with softer power
For comfort than angel's mirth;
That to the cross the mourner's eye should turn
Sooner than where the stars of Christmas burn?"

The prophecy uttered by the Christ about his death drawing men to him began to find fulfillment on the very day of his crucifixion. Luke, the careful historian, tells us: "There followed him (to Calvary) a great multitude of the people, and of women who bewailed and lamented him."

"They gathered round his cross.
Who gathered round?
The lepers he had cleansed,
The blind restored to sight,
Captives of Satan with
Their chains unbound,
The dead called from the grave,
To life and light,
The poor that heard his word,
The hungry he had fed,
The broken-hearted healed
Of every wound;
They to whose arms he had Restored the dead;
The lost reclaimed,
Sinners once forgiven,
Vile publicans whose eyes
Had sought the ground,
Who dared not raise them
To a darkening heaven;
Women whose joy had been
To soothe his woes,
His mother, her spirit sharing
In each wound,
Her Son, her Savior,
Suffering for his foes."

The other Marys and the Twelve minus one, and Simon of Cyrene, "called the Niger (or Negro)," who helped to bear his cross, and later preached his gospel, and possibly hundreds of others. That throng about his cross was the first fulfillment of his prophecy. Through all the years since then men and women and children, whose lives have been lifted out of sin and sorrow into light and sweetness, have been gathering about that cross until the number has mounted to millions.

The reach of all this mighty impulse of the cross is as wide as the world—all men—not the Jew only, nor the cultured Greek, nor the warlike Roman—but "all men" absolutely unless their free-born wills finally reject him as Savior and Christ.

THE BELGIAN CONGO—FIVE YEARS AFTER.

"Kibombo! Kibombo!" called the conductor, and the sound brought vividly back the hour five years ago, when I had stood on the back platform waving to Brother Davis and my faithful hammock men, who ran down the track after the train shouting their good-byes like our own warm-hearted loyal Negroes. If the train schedule had not been unexpectedly changed, either Brother Lynn or Brother Ayres would have been at the station with their native "boys," but I saw only strange faces when I got off the train.

My French is meager, indeed abominable, and the English of the three or four Belgians present was likewise, but the "sign" language is not to be despised in emergencies, and I soon made plain to these men that I wanted to start for Tunda, our nearest mission station, by 3:30—within four hours, with a hammock and with enough strong, reliable "boys" to carry my bags, food and myself (when necessary). The Belgian gentlemen were exceedingly polite, but said "Impossible! impossible!" with voice and gestures, and counted off three days for courier to go to Tunda, three days for Tunda mission "boys" to come unloaded for me, and four days to take me to Tunda. I used every "iota" of the sign language I could muster—tongue, eyes, chin, head, shoulders, hands and feet—to make it absolutely clear that the sun could not set upon my head in Kibombo, but that in three days I must be at Tunda, and then I walked up to a group of natives, pointed to my bags and put my hands on their heads and said "Tunda! Tunda! Tunda!" The Belgians grinned and the natives laughed and cried 'Tunda Owangi" (chief)! So one of the Belgian gentlemen yielded to my urgency, and by 3:30 started me for Tunda with seventeen capable, reliable "boys," carrying my two bags, portfolio, army roll with raincoat, overcoat, blankets, sheets, pillows, mosquito boots and net, and three copies of the New York Times, which I had brought along that missionaries might see a home paper, a heavy tin trunk with my biscuits (crackers), sugar, canned milk, sardines, ham, jam, candles, matches, quinine, etc., a case of bottled soda water to thin my milk and to insure uncontaminated water, two lanterns (front and rear), a bag of Congo coin money, and the most ramshackled hammock you can imagine, with no back and uneven seat. Three miles out from Kibombo, however, the "boys" stopped at a rather pretentious native hut, and put the hammock with me in it on the ground. In vain I gesticulated and cried "Tunda!" They gave a call, the occupant of the hut answered, and to my amazement they left me, ran behind the hut and brought back the most comfortable hammock I have ever seen, and when I hesitated two of them lifted me bodily into the hammock, four of them grasped the poles and went off at a swinging trot down the path. (I did not know until I reached Tunda that Brother Henry Ayres had made the hammock and sent it to Kibombo to be used by me whenever I might come.)

For three days and nights I was on the path with my seventeen natives with no common language, except the "sign" language, without sight of a white man, with a bag of money, plus my personal effects. I crossed boggy, low grounds, swamps and rivers, carried by the "boys" in the hammock or on their backs, and spent the nights in the rest-houses in native villages, the chiefs and inhabitants of which knew that I was staying there alone. The village chiefs are required by the State to furnish water and firewood for white travelers. My "boys" made up the fire in front of the rest-house, boiled water for our canteens, squatted around to watch me eat my crackers, milk, potted meat and jam, while waiting for the native women of the villages to cook and bring their food, at a cost of from twenty to fifty centimes each, which is paid by the white "Owangi." The food may be boiled rice or millet (where it can be had), but usually it is the root of the cassava, or manico pounded in a mortar and boiled, served plain, but sometimes with olive oil poured over, and sometimes with bits of goat or chicken and gravy, and occasionally as a great delicacy fried caterpillars or fat grub-worms are spread on top like strips of bacon. The men sometimes get for themselves green roasting ears, sweet potatoes, plantains, bananas, pineapples, mangoes, paw-paws, peanuts, eggs, chickens and goat meat. They apparently have no kind of food antipathies, but as they say, "meat is meat," whether it be chicken, goat, crocodile, "hippos," or elephants, and they do not see any reason why human flesh should not be eaten from the mere standpoint of taste and nourishment. (The tsetse fly prevents the raising of cattle and horses). All their animals, plus lions, leopards, etc., are plentiful. Brother Ayres had killed two elephants quite recently, and the roaring of lions and snarling of leopards is a nightly occurence, but they fear the glare of the camp fire.

After supper I usually sat on the porch of the rest-house and sang some hymns and offered prayer. They all gathered around, and after a verse or so some of them would try to hum a little. (They like to sing, but their voices are not as melodious as the voices of our Southern Negroes.) They usually wanted one more song, and at the prayers they were curious, but quiet.

We were right below the equator where night falls between 6 and 7, and usually when not on the path I went to bed about 9:30, to be able to start again at 4:30 or 5 a.m., before the heat of the sun. I spread the New York Times on the ground to protect from dampness, with blankets next, with mosquito net draped above, supported by sticks and nails in side-walls. Crawling under the net with added protection of mosquito boots, long rain-coat and black skull-cap, with a watchman to tend the fire to keep off the wild beasts, especially leopards (which are probably the most destructive of the wild beasts), with my "boys" sleeping in the vestibule, the porches and nearby huts, I slept as well and as safely in the African village as I have in any city of the world, and suffered no discomfort, except a little cold and stiffening of the muscles.

The first evening when I pointed to the sun, counted three on my fingers and said, "Tunda," they shook their heads and counted four. But whenever they slowed down and began to loaf, I got out of the hammock, and with my stick took to the path with a vigorous stride, and after the second morning, I had only to strike the hammock pole with my stick and cry "Tunda," and they would chorus back "Tunda," and quicken the pace. These Ostetala Negroes are more like the best type of our Southern Negroes than any other Negroes I have seen in Africa. They are well built, generally well nourished, with good features and kindly dispositions. They are mentally above the average Negroes, are capable of great affection and loyalty, and are responsive to the teaching and preaching of our Southern missionaries, who well understand the Negro characteristics.

The tribal territory extends from Kibombo on the east to Lusambo on the southwest, about as far as from Richmond to Philadelphia, and about an equal distance north and south. I arrived at our easternmost station, Tunda, about noon on the third day, having made a record trip of less than three days, and with my men all in good shape. Five years ago I spent the night at Chief Tunda's village, and aided in the selection of this site for our mission. Before leaving Kibombo, I had sent a courier ahead to announce our coming, but so rapidly did our caravan move that he was not many hours ahead of us. But the news spread rapidly and Brother Ayres met us an hour out on the path with a group of mission "boys," and at the entrance of Tunda's village. Chief Tunda met us; we saluted each other, and then the hammock men bore me through the village at a swinging trot, with a fancy step now and then, to the accompaniment of their own special hammock song, while hundreds of Negro men and women, boys and girls, and veritable pickaninnies ran ahead, behind, alongside shouting and waving palm branches and joining sometimes in the refrain of the hammock men. As I watched them and noted their genuine enthusiastic interest, I realized that the mission and its work must have become a great factor in their lives, or they would not make all this stir to welcome one whom none of them ever saw but once before, and that five years ago. Chief Tunda having come to welcome me, I later called upon him and inquired concerning the health of his sixty-three wives and their children, many of whom were standing around in various stages of nudity, and gave him a bag of salt and promised to send him a gold ring such as I sent to Wembo-Nyama five years ago as a token of friendship.

I marveled to see what had been done at Tunda in five years in the erection of buildings for missionaries, church shed, hospital and industrial work, in planting good vegetable and fruit gardens, and of special importance in the establishment of a large native village on the mission concession, well laid out, well built and well populated by a group of smiling, intelligent looking, well-behaved natives, with rows of palm, banana and mango trees lining the street.

I called up my Kibombo men, paid them off, giving each of them a "Matabish" (tip) for good service and extra speed, and bade them "Goodbye," knowing without peradventure or question of any kind that these men had intelligence, sensibility and will; that they had appetites and desires, fears and hopes, hates and loves, sorrows and joys, an appreciation of wrong and right, and that they needed and could understand and accept the gospel message that "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him might not perish, but have everlasting life."

This somewhat detailed, but necessarily brief narrative may give a better understanding of native life, and possibly stir more interest in the Congo Negroes, to whom our Southern missionaries are giving their lives for Christ's sake, and for whom our Southern people, with their knowledge of the Negro, have a great responsibility to furnish more money and workers to speedily evangelize the whole tribe. At present we have not one-half enough men and women assigned to Africa to carry on the work as it should be done, and it has been difficult to maintain effective organization at any of the mission stations. Sometimes one man has to carry on educational, evangelistic, medical and industrial work to the detriment of all four. But all the workers on the field are genuine Congo missionaries. They have given themselves unreservedly to the work, they love the Otetala people, and believe fully in the power of the gospel to save them, and numbers of the converts have brought forth those fruits of the spirit which are found among our home Christians. Our workers are distressed that they are not able to enter more fully into the speedy evangelization of the entire tribe, but are trying to develop as rapidly as possible a well-trained, trustworthy band of native preachers and teachers. (I had pictures taken of four native evangelists and their wives, and as soon as I receive them, I want to send to the Voice the story of their conversion, their trials and their work.) The Southern Presbyterians have eighty Congo missionaries—three times as many as we have—and are securing great results. We could do likewise if the home churches would furnish the money. There will be no difficulty in securing workers.

I visited all the stations, Tunda, Minga, Lusambo, Wembo-Nyama (where a very gracious helpful session of the Mission Conference was held), and went on motorcycle with Brothers Anker, Davis and Ayres to Kabengele (Bishop Walter Lambuth's native Otetala name), where after careful inspection it was decided to reopen work, the Belgian Government granting a concession of very desirable land for station buildings and native village and river landing for our remodeled and now comfortable steamer "The Texas." I was impressed that there had been decided improvement in the Belgian colonial administration, and especially in the personnel during the past five years. Among other things, roads with bridges suitable for automobiles and trucks are being opened across the country, and our hauling of supplies from the steamer "Texas" is done now almost entirely by carts with rubber tires pushed by natives, or by the small Ford truck. An appropriation by the woman's department was used just before I left to purchase a Ford car, which enabled me to cover several hundred miles the last three days of my visit. The mission has two motorcyles (should have three more), and several bicycles, which are a great aid in evangelistic trips, greatly multiplying the points of contact for the limited force of workers. But the price of gasoline, nearly $1 per gallon, limits the use of all forms of gasoline motor power, especially with small missionary budget.

It must be recognized that the Congo is not a white man's country. While white leadership in industry, commerce, education and religion may be essential for many years to come, the work in all its forms must be done chiefly by natives. The African people must be evangelized by Africans.

The great work of the missionary is to evangelize and to train a sufficient number of native men and women, who can carry on the necessary work. Native teachers and preachers, native churches supported and governed by native members must be the goal. The responsibility of the church today is to furnish thoroughly equipped and sufficiently numerous men and women to do the training promptly. Mohammedanism has not as yet made much headway in the Congo as in some other parts of Africa, but it is trying to enter, and Christianity should so occupy the field that the natives will reject Mohammedanism when presented. "The King's business demandeth haste."

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

I never knew a real sensible man who did not know he was sensible. Yet I have met a few who were not quiet about it, and were rather inclined, sometimes painfully so, to advertise the fact to the world at large. A ship runs best on a level keel, a man runs best on a level head. Overweaning conceit is a fearful handicap, but overweaning modesty does not get you anywhere. In medias res is a fine recipe for a happy, useful career in this old world of ours, wherein the best of us are more or less under the influence of a lot of inherited standards for judgment concerning the words and deeds of others. Having now delivered these wise or otherwise excerpts from my knoweldge box I proceed to say, we all like to be appreciated, commended and properly rated. Many a useful life has been blighted, thwarted, turned aside from its highest and noblest endeavor by envious, wicked, selfish criticism. A man named Gray wrote an immortal poem, an elegy. In this nocturne of surpassing beauty he noted that perchance among those sleeping in the churchyard was a statesman like Hampden, or a ruler like Cromwell. Discipline is good for the soul, but tyranny blights and curses.

"I never had a chance," sobbed the poor boy haled before the court for his crime. Two of the most mischievous, errant rascals I had to deal with when a quondam schoolmaster have achieved success. One was a captain in the world war, the other is a fine attorney and senator. Yes, appreciate him, place a just value on one, whether boy or girl, man or woman, the glory and value of life lies in its living. It is not static, it is continuous, for as the harvest time marks the period of a closing year, so life's real values can only be measured when we see the mourners go about the streets. Winnowing the grain from the chaff, gives the real worth of the harvest.

What are you doing about it? Our Advocate, I mean, the organ of three Conferences. Have you secured a subscriber recently? Have you stated its need to your people? Do you really know its worth to the church and all its manifold interests and activities? A list was posted last week, of some who had secured subscriptions. Names of men and women whose activities in Sunday school and church work claim no little space, were conspicuously absent from this list. Bishop McMurray stated before the Louisiana Conference that we had one of the best, if not the best, Conference organs, in the Southern church. Get busy. The Sunday schools cannot get along without the Advocate, the Epworth Leagues need all the space they can get, the presiding elders and preachers would not know when and where to hold the quarterly conferences without it. If you have no conscience in this matter, develop one. This paper is intrinsically worth ten times what one pays for it and relatively worth 100 per cent more. Drs. Carley and Harper and our efficient business manager would rejoice to see the names of such men as Atkinson and Chambers, Grambling and other leaders of the young people, listed as leading solicitors and in securing paid-up subscribers. You know what I mean. Get busy and save the day.

REV. W. T. BAZZEL'S EVASION.

By Rev. John W. Ramsey.

Some time ago I challenged Rev. W. T. Bazzel to a public debate before a select jury of intelligent men on the following questions:

1. Resolved, That the six days of creation were periods of time involving more than six days of twenty-four hours each.

2. Resolved, That a man can accept the theory of evolution and remain an orthodox Christian.

3. Resolved, That evolution is the true theory of creation rather than the Genesis history.

Taking advantage of my honest-to-goodness challenge to a public debate, instead of accepting or rejecting the challenge outright, Brother Bazzel uses it as a means for the further dissemination of his erroneous propaganda. Discussing each question seriatim, he proceeds to state, as he has done several times previously, his belief that the six days of creation were periods of time involving more than six days of twenty-four hours each in the following words: "I believe this to be true, and I think most Bible scholars will so agree." Evidently he has a firm faith in the effectiveness of reiterated verbiage as a means of getting his proposition across. I have to say that what he believes to be true, and what he thinks Bible scholars, or any other sort of scholars, say about it is neither here nor there—I demand that he prove it, and would remind him that a profusion of words establishes nothing. He says again: "I am confident that it can be proven to the satisfaction of any unbiased jury of intelligent men." I wonder if he does not undertand that that is precisely what I have challenged him to do, having proposed that a select jury composed of three unbiased, intelligent men, one to be chosen by me, the second to be named by him, and these two to select a third man. I have already named my man, viz., Rev. H. M. Ellis, of Biloxi, whose intelligence no man can question. Now, if he thinks he can prove his "period" theory so easily to the "satisfaction of any unbiased jury of intelligent men," let him name his man, and when all details have been arranged I shall demand that he produce his proof, if he can.

Brother Bazzel asks: "Why should two Methodist preachers leave their work of preaching Jesus Christ to lost men and women and cross swords in a joint debate on a question of relative unimportance?" which leads me to enquire if he has not already left his work of preaching Jesus Christ in his effort to broadcast repeatedly through the columns of our Conference organ his poisonous Modernistic teaching, thereby perhaps wrecking the faith of some and tossing them into the seething mass of the lost men and women, about whom he expresses so much concern? After all the time and energy he has wasted in this manner, he indifferently waves aside the best opportunity he has ever had offered him, without money and without price, to prove his unsubstantiated asseverations. When he refers ironically to what he pleases to call my six-day theory and the importance he thinks I attach to it, he egotistically assumes that a debate between him and me would disturb the peace and harmony of the church. My, what presumption! I fear that a previous compliment which I was kind enough to pronounce upon his ability as a writer has unfortunately superinduced in him that state of mind technically known to psychologists as a "superiority complex," for which I humbly beg the pardon of the reading public.

Discussing the second question whether a man can accept the theory of evolution and remain a Christian, Brother Bazzel objects to the word "orthodox." Since I regard the word "Christian" sufficiently comprehensive in its content, I readily consent to the elimination of the word "orthodox," and express my willingness to meet him upon his own ground. I am always willing to accommodate when such accommodation is not detrimental to principle or truth. So I am ready to maintain the proposition that a man cannot accept the materialistic theory of evolution and remain a Christian, although Brother Bazzel affirms that with the elimination of the word "orthodox" the second question given above is an exact statement of his belief.

Under the third question, Brother Bazzel says: "I accept the Bible as a book of divine origin, containing the message of God." This statement is no doubt acceptable to the oridnary reader who is unfamiliar with the ambiguous terms and phraseology of modern-day liberalists. Presumably youthful in his intellectual peregrinations through the labyrinthine corridors of sophistical liberalism, he has precociously adopted the ambiguous phraseology of veteran modernists. I wonder if he is willing to drop the word "contains" in the affirmation, " I believe the Bible contains the message or word of God," and, without any mental reservation whatsoever, affirm, "I believe the Bible is the word of God?" It should not be forgotten that there is quite a difference between the two affirmations.

After expressing his confidence in his ability to prove the correctness of his position on the questions under discussion before an "unbiased jury of intelligent men," which is the very thing which my challenge afforded him the opportunity of doing, Brother Bazzel offers to substitute my proposal with a newspaper discussion or a controversy by private correspondence. Of course any one knows that a newspaper discussion could not possibly arrive at any definite conclusion, and a private correspondence, as he confesses, could only be limited by the endurance of the correspondents; and in either case, no decision upon the arguments produced by either party could be rendered. Therefore, I shall regard Brother Bazzel's proposed substitution as an expression of his disinclination to accept my challenge, and, so far as I am concerned, the matter is ended, except as I shall not forfeit the right to discuss the questions herein stated when the time is afforded me from my duties as a pastor and the space is allowed me in the Advocate. However, I can but wish that Brother Bazzel would cease his endless asseverations through the columns of the Advocate, and produce the proof—if he can. What I demand of him, as of all Modernists, is not verbosity, but proof. If I could stand upon some mountain top from which my voice could be heard around the world, I would shout into the ears of all Modernists and liberalistic preachers, especially preachers of the Methodist persuasion, the demand: Let us have the proof; or to put it in modern slang, I would say to the whole bunch: "Put up or shut up!"

IN MEMORIAM.

Warren Featherstun Black was born in Camden, Miss., May 27, 1878, and died in Birmingham, Ala., January 30, 1926.

Being a son of Rev. W. C. Black, D.D., a former pastor of mine during early childhood, I wish to write a few lines in his memory. He had many parsonage homes in the State of Mississippi but the place where I first knew him was in Meridian, Miss., when Dr. Black was pastor of Central Church, where he was the life of the parsonage at that time. There was a revival in Meridian during that time, conducted by Brother Pearson, and Warren was converted and joined the church. He was educated in the public schools of Mississippi and also attended Tulane University, in New Orleans, La.

In 1914 he came to Birmingham. Soon after coming here, he heard Dr. George Stewart preach a sermon on "Prayer," and being very much impressed by the sermon, he reconsecrated himself to the church. After that he was very active in all church work at the First Church here, and no task assigned to do for the church was too small to perform.

He was a business man who could always be relied on, and both the business men who worked around him and his friends in other circles said he was always a man of his word.

These sad lines tell that death has shadowed the light in eyes that saw naught but the bright and hopeful side of life; they tell that a voice is hushed that unceasingly gave sound with the hope of bettering the condition of friends and acquaintances; they tell that hands that wreathed with rest the brow of care and scattered lillies of mercy in the pathway of the sorrowing are folded over a heart forever stilled.

PHILIP HENRY ENOCHS.

By Rev. W. H. Saunders.

In a short appreciation, as this must be, it is out of the question to fully express the value and merits of a true friend, and do justice to a great and good man. Our friends and friendships have more to do with what life may mean to us, and the contribution we make to society, than all other influences with which we come in touch. The writer of these words counts it one of the greatest privileges and blessings of his life to be able to say, "He was my friend." It is in the scope, strength and quality of our friendships that we discover the wealth of life and find the greatest inspiration to worthy and noble endeavor. He possessed a great capacity for friendship and gave without stint to those he found worthy. When once he placed confidence in a person, it took absolute facts to cause him to withdraw.

From both parents of the very highest Christian character he inherited a rich nature capable of taking on the cultural influences, precept and example, which flowered out into a Christian manhood with which he so largely blessed humanity which will continue to bless as the days come and go. Fletcher Enochs, of sturdy Welch stock, and Rebecca Jane Black, two of the very best families in Copiah County, Miss., whose home was five miles southeast of Crystal Springs, in the Bethesda community, were his parents.

Here they lived and reared a family of eight sons and one daughter, whose character and accomplishments have added increasing distinction to a great family. The late I. C. Enochs, of Jackson; J. L. Enochs, also of Jackson; F. B. Enochs, of McComb; the late T. E. Enochs, also of McComb; E. A. Enochs, of Natchez; Dr. A. C. Enochs, of Oklahoma City; William Edgar, who died in 1896, and one daughter, Miss Eliza.

His educational advantages were not confined to the common schools of his day, but he attended Agricultural and Mechanical College, Starkville, Miss., and studied at West Point Military Institute, New York.

Associated with his two distinguished brothers, the late I. C. Enochs and J. L. Enochs, of Jackson, they founded the Fernwood Lumber Company, at Fernwood, Miss. Of this institution he was president for many years, and directed the internal affairs of the concern, which soon developed into one of the largest establishments of its kind in the South. The heavy strain required to control this business at last began to tell on his constitution so much that he had to turn over the headship to others.

In early life he united with the Methodist church at Bethesda, and lived for many years a faithful and consistent member. In the midst of his greatest activities and the prosperity of his business he saw a wider vision of life's high calling. To this vision he was not disobedient, and in responding to the call he received an experience that caused him to organize his life anew, his own habits, his home, social and business relationships. The experience deepened, strengthened, and sweetened his whole life, and caused him to set his purpose at a high mark, and to bless humanity. It must be said that the Lord was his Senior Partner in life, and he settled each day's business accordingly. He said to the writer, more than once, that he would rather have nine dollars with the Lord's blessing, than ten without his blessing. Each year he settled his business with the Lord on the basis of the tenth.

His liberality towards his own church was duplicated to the church of his family, the Presbyterian. To name his benevolent contributions would be out of the question. He saw and felt the need of humanity and responded far and near. Nothing gave him more pleasure than to relieve the need of circumstance of some life in need. Suffice it to name a few of the institutions that received substantial contributions. To Whitworth College he was a liberal and constant contributor. One building stands on the campus as his donation to the young womanhood of Mississippi. Many young women entered this institution, received an education, and found a place in the social and industrial circles, to play a prominent part in the life of the State and church. To Millsaps he was a contributor and friend. To make it possible for young men, preparing for the ministry, it was his special pleasure to open the way for an education. Young women who were called to the mission fields had a special friend in this great man, and he made it possible for them to receive the training needed to fill the place. His hand was open to the mission fields, at home and abroad, and at one time he gave $10,000 to one church in China. For several years he contributed a thousand dollars a year to the Superannuate Endowment fund of the Mississippi Conference. It is quite certain that he gave the largest amount to this fund of any individual in the State. The colored people in the employ of the company had ample facilities for church privileges, and their pastors received a living allowance to place them in comfortable circumstances.

He was a member of the board of trustees of the Memphis Hospital for several years, and contributed to that institution at the time the means were being raised to build. He also had a large part in the raising of the funds for the Lamar building at Emory. The Rescue Home in New Orleans, and St. Mark's received liberally at his hands. He was the first one to mention, in a real earnest way, the matter of a Mississippi Methodist Hospital to me, and said, "We must have one, and I am ready to do my part when the time comes."

To be at the head of a great enterprise as he was, he was the most beloved, respected and honored man I have ever known. Regardless of race or circumstances, he was kind, respectful, and helpful to all. All who lived in the town received the same benefits as to health protection, and church and school privileges as his own family. Socially, Fernwood was the cleanest town we have ever lived in, in all the years we have served the church. He was truly the friend of the preacher and his family.

In 1890 he was married to Miss Emma Lieb, of Magnolia, and a most happy union this was. No man ever had a companion more helpful, more suited and sympathetic than he. Her life and character inspired to lofty endeavor, proved a blessing in all the circumstances of his years, and especially at the latter end she was an angel of loving service and blessed his life with devotion.

Into this home came four children, two girls and two boys. The older one of these girls is now Mrs. Lamar Ramsay, and the younger is the wife of Dr. Leggett. Philip, the older boy recently married, and Edgar. All these children live in Fernwood and have come into the management of his great estate.

He saw that his children were amply prepared to fill the high place he was building for them, and it is certain that they will not disappoint his expectations. They stand at the very top, in business and social circles of the State, and fill with great credit the positions they hold. This delightful family is his greatest contribution to humanity, his State and the church. Upon this home circle he bestowed the best of his love, and the mutual affection of each member made it a home of special sweetness.

If a great life is a blessing, and a good life a benediction, his was both. When sixty-five years had come and gone, years that he filled so full of the potentialities of life and service, he was called to render an account of the stewardship of life and stand before the Lord.

At 10 o'clock a. m., July 9, at his home in Fernwood, Miss., the funeral services were held, conducted by Rev. W. H. Saunders, a former pastor, and Rev. J. T. Abney, his present pastor, assisted by Rev. M. M. Black, a kinsman, and Rev. C. W. Crisler, D.D., of Hazlehurst. Rev. C. C. Evans, of McComb, and Rev. T. B. Cottrell, of Magnolia, were present. The spacious home and yard were filled with sorrowing relatives and friends, and the presence of many of the colored people in the employ of the company so long, was a beautiful tribute to his life.

Interment took place at Magnolia. The large number attending this service, the profusion of beautiful floral offerings, and the expression of sorrow and regrets at his going speak in loud terms of his worth. Rev. C. W. Crisler, D.D., read the commital service, and Rev. Mr. Campbell, of the Baptist church, pronounced the benediction.

THE WRONG USE OF PSYCHOLOGY.

By Observer.

Success and even fame may be desired righteously. To this end certain advantages may be attained over men by egotistic presumption. This unrighteous use of psychology becomes known to preachers in early life. Many fall to the temptation. They are ready to use cheap methods for any advantage they may gain in the community. The question comes to them how can I dominate my crowd? One of the near cuts is to call the big men in the community, especially the official board, by their given names. So at his first official meeting he informs his board that he will call them by their given names. Will, James and John. Many of these brethren may be his senior, but that only gives more force to his address. He is sold to the thought! He knows that a certain resentment will be felt at first, but will wear off in time, and O the advantage! Assuming his superiority he comes to feel it! He is well aware that people who hear him address the biggest men in the community by their given names will think he must be some intellectual giant to call all the big men by their given names. The majority of the people have no way of judging greatness, and accept the assumption as fact. His point is carried, but would a big man stoop to that?

Then it becomes disease and takes on other forms. This same man visits a former charge, and how does he speak concerning his successor? He speaks well of him in all minor points, "but"—. There he will wield his sword, not to kill but to maim and cripple. The writer knows a pastor who visited a former charge. The pastor called on him where he was visiting more than once. He never returned the call. He never looked in on the studies of that pastor. Had never been in his library. He had no tab on his mold of mind. That preacher whom he was visiting (in his community) was an up-to-date man. He preached short sermons. He used poetry and apt and classic illustrations. Notwithstanding, that former pastor must get in his stab, so he called him "old timer." He literally misrepresented his attendance upon Divinity Schools; also his ignorance of this preacher was willful, else he would have visited him in his home or office and investigated and have had first-hand information. What causes that? Is it jealousy? It may not be. He has given away to the wrong use of power. He has given over to subtle temptation. It began its inroads in an unconscious manner. He desired success. The temptation to use unjust means grew on him. He has become a dangerous man and does not know it.

A LESSON FROM THE GOLF LINKS.

By Rev. Frank B. Hill.

I do not play golf; I prefer cricket and tennis. I am not sure whether golf is a treatment or a game. I know it is fashionable, the correct thing to do, and am glad so many enjoy playing it.

There is a Methodist minister in England known to me by the nom de plume, "Ezra." He is very fond of golf, and has as his companion a Jewish rabbi. When resting from their play, or at lunch time, their conversation drifts into religious matters. I will give two examples which have been very helpful to me and wish to pass them on.

I am not certain what led Ezra to quote the passage from the Bible about children—"Blessed is the man that hath his quiver full of them" (Ps. 127:5).

The rabbi said, "That text is often misapplied; do you know how many arrows are considered to fill the quiver?" "No," said Ezra. I suppose Mr. Wesley's large family would be a quiver full." The rabbi said five arrows only is the correct number to constitute a quiver full.

Last week the rabbi, who so often tries to persuade Ezra that we Christians do not understand the Bible, even our own New Testament, suggested to him that we ought to have a Jew professor of New Testament Exegesis in all our colleges. "You miss hundreds of points in your New Testament that only a Jew could point out to you," he said. "Take, for instance, the story of the great draught of fishes recorded in your Gospel of St. John. It tells you that when Simon Peter drew the net to land it was found to contain one hundred and fifty-three great fishes; and the net was not even torn, even though there were so many. Not one of you understands why the writer says there were just so many. I don't read your commentaries, but I will buy you a dozen golf balls if you can find in any one of them a correct note on that statement. It means nothing to you beyond a mere count of the catch, but if I were a Christian preacher, I could make a first rate sermon on that text. You don't see a sermon there because you don't know that in the days when that book was written it was the current belief that the Creator had only made one hundred and fifty-three kinds of fish. The suggestion, therefore, is that the fishers caught one of every kind of fish in the sea, and he makes that statement in the hope that his readers will see in it a forecast of the day when the net of the church will include representatives of every race of men. And don't you see he also expresses the conviction that it will be able to hold them all without break. Now, don't you see more in the text after I have explained it to you than you ever saw before? Isn't there a sermon there for you?" Ezra had to confess it was illuminating, and he saw a sermon in it. "Then," said the rabbi, "you will have to pay for my coffee at lunch."

Ezra thought the instruction cheap at the price.

Ezra writes for the Methodist Recorder.

"LEAGUE OF FAITH AND ORDER."

Sometime early in June Rev. V. C. Curtis, our pastor at Starkville, Miss., sent a pamphlet entitled, "League of Faith and Order," which contained Preamble, Creedal Statement, Declaration of Principles, etc., to some of the preachers of the North Mississippi Conference, which pamphlet the preacher was requested to sign as a pledge and return to Rev. V. C. Curtis.

The following is the pledge that the preachers were called upon to sign: "Therefore, I, as a member of this League of Faith and Order, hereby solemnly pledge myself to uphold and defend the standards of our faith, and to endeavor to carry out my solemn obligations and vows to God and His Church; and, further, that I will not vote nor encourage for any office in our church any one who does not stand for and uphold these principles without any reservation or equivocation whatsoever.

"2. I further pledge myself that, in the event my views on these fundamentals are changed, and I find myself out of accord with these principles, I will voluntarily retire from this organization by notifying the president or secretary of my withdrawal."

The Creedal Statement of the pamphlet is a rehash of the solemn ordination vows taken by every Methodist preacher.

In the body of the Notes of the pamphlet is this paragraph: "This is not a secret organization, but we do not care to have any special publicity given to our proceedings. Quick work and little talk about what we are doing is best."

I submit, in the first place, that such a League for the protection of Christian doctrine in the North Mississippi Conference is unnecessary and partakes of the nature of works of supererogation. Who, in the body of the preachers of the North Mississippi Conference, is there who has not already solemnly sworn before God and man to protect and fight for the Christian doctrines of our Church? 2. What preacher in this Conference has evidence with which to convict another preacher of heresy? 3. Is there a preacher in our Conference who needs the backing of a League, such as this one purports to be, to give him courage to stand up like a man and be courageous? My understanding is that men like Paul, Luther and the great Wesley, of whom we are disciples, got their courage from God and not from men. If no man in our Conference can put his hand on evidence that will convict another brother of heresy, then why the League? Who is being organized against? Sensible men never organize against a straw man. If any man in our Conference has evidence (reasonable evidence) by which to convict another brother of heresy I will gladly join said brother in ousting the heretic from our Conference. No enemy is a greater menace to our faith than is the heretic, but I fail to find such a son of Belial in the membership of the North Mississippi Conference, so why the League?

In the light of the fact that we have no heretics in the North Mississippi Conference to be organized against, I am at a loss to know just what is meant by that part of the pledge in which the signer solemnly promises "Not to vote for nor encourage for any office in our church any one who does not stand for and uphold these principles without any reservation or equivocation whatsoever." Is it the purpose of the leaders of this League to pass down to the members of the League the names of the faithful who have signed the pledge and then name those of the faithful who are best fit to represent the League? If the purpose of the League is what it appears to be on its face, why was I left off the mailing list? I understand that some of the preachers of our Conference have received as many as two letters urging them to join the League. For twenty-seven years I have faithfully and earnestly proclaimed the gospel of Jesus Christ to a lost world and have honestly tried in every way possible to ring true to the solemn vows of my ordination, yet I am not even given the opportunity to join the League. I understand that others of my honest and faithful brethren have suffered a like fate at the hands of Brother Curtis. Am I suspected of being a heretic? If so, and Brother Curtis or any other brother can produce evidence for said suspicion, I will immediately step down and out of the Methodist ministry. If I am not adjudged as a heretic, why was I left off the mailing list?

In the light of the fact that we have no heretics in our Conference, if the purpose of the organization of the League be to put down heresy, why the surrepititious method of the organization of the League? I confess that I much dislike to be submarined as the Germans did their enemies and friends during the war. If Brother Curtis is other than my friend, I am sorry; but whether friend or foe I confess that I greatly object to being submarined. Whether or not Brother Curtis is my personal friend, we be brethren in the Conference and should deal the each with the other in the open. If I or he proposes to organize a Conference-wide society, to which all men are eligible, such as is this League in the North Mississippi Conference, each of us should have the opportunity, at the same time that others have the opportunity, to join the society.

If Brother Curtis will openly and above board, as becometh a Christian, show the need for such an organization in the North Mississippi Conference, I will gladly join him and others in the League. But as a humble follower of Jesus Christ I can not join with Brother Curtis in fostering a League upon the basis of questionable methods, especially when that method prejudges a brother to be a heretic without a hearing.

SERVICE GIVEN.

By An Old Subscriber.

In the Advocate of July 21, there appears an article written by Rev. Mr. McCormack, Jr., called forth by the question, "A Crisis Reached," which elicits this communcition.

In a recent district meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society, the question was brought up in the round table discussion, "Why do we not have more members of the church, members of the Missionary Society?" There can be no better answer than those given: Lack of love for Christ, lack of consecration, lack of knowledge, and lack of responsibility felt on the part of the members of the auxiliaries, by changing the last word to preachers in charge. The same answer might be given to the question, "Why do so many church members fail to subscribe to the Advocate?" I will add another reason; so many people don't care to read, and prefer to get their information second hand.

I have found the "Editorial Comments" timely, forceful, and wholly righteous, and the "Selections," while perhaps not "spicy," indicating literary taste. In each of the last two numbers, a quotation relative to Colonel Charles Lindbergh's flight across the Atlantic was the most beautiful I have seen anywhere.

The "Editorial Notes" makes us feel like a big family, and keeps us in touch with the humble as well as the prominent members of our grand community. These two pages, with Bishop Candler's, and Dr. Steel's articles, are well worth the subscription.

There are many other able and interesting contributions. There are two pages each week to the Sunday school, Epworth League, the Missionary Society, and considering the wonderfull literature we have on each of these subjects it would seem a pity to put the "Headlines of the Sunday School Board" on the front page of the church organ.

It is to be deplored that the paper has to do so much "prodding," urging people to meet their pledges, and meet the claims of the church; however, I don't see how else it could be brought before the people, and only hope some time these difficulties may be overcome.

MEETING OF THE APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE OF THE BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

A BOY'S VACATION.

Little Tommy Doodle and his mother spent a week
At Gran'pa Doodle's farm where Tommy tumbled in the creek
And got his lungs so full of wet he couldn't get his breath
Till poor old Gran'ma Doodle had been frightened 'most to death.
He ate some poison berries that he found along the lane;
It took a doctor half the night to soothe away the pain.
He tried to ride a "kicky" colt—a risky thing to do—
'Twas quite a little while before they really brought him to.
He stuck a stick into a hive of bees—oh, sorry day!
He couldn't see a thing until the swelling went away.
He teased the goat to see if it was cross as he had heard;
They had to work with him a while before he spoke a word.
And then he climbed a cherry tree—just like a boy—and fell
And broke his arm, and—sakes alive! you ought 'a heard him yell.
His mother took him back to town to get a little rest,
But Tommy says of all his life that week was far the best. —Selected.

SOME TRUE STORIES ABOUT GEORGE WASHINGTON.

When George Washington was a thirteen-year-old boy in the new country of America he wrote for his own personal guidance the following: "To labor to keep alive in my breast that little spark of celestial fire called conscience." All through his life George Washington kept true to that boyhood guide.

Washington was a great believer in God. During the terrible winter at Valley Forge, a man was one day walking over his estate when, in the woods by the stream, he heard a very solmn voice. He approached the spot, and there discovered Washington's horse tied to a tree. At a little distance in a thicket he saw Washington on his knees in the snow in prayer. Reverently the man turned away, and as he returned to the house he burst into tears, saying to his wife, "If there is any one on this earth that the Lord will listen to, it is George Washington."

This fine faith of Washington's was the direct result of the training which he had received from his mother. And he respected her for the fine things she had taught him.

One day word arrived at Mount Vernon that Washington had been unanimously elected the first President of the United States, and his presence was urgently requested at the seat of government. Hastily Washington put his own affairs in order and then, just at nightfall, mounting his fleetest horse, he set out, not for the seat of government, but to say good-bye to his aged mother. All through the hours of the night he rode and the next morning appeared unannounced at his mother's door. He enjoyed a brief visit with her, said farewell and was on his way back to Mount Vernon. By nightfall he was again at home, having ridden more than eighty miles for the sake of a last farewell with the mother to whom he owed so much. The next morning he was ready to start on his journey of two hundred and fifty miles to New York City.

Not far from New York there lived a little boy who wanted a Bible very much indeed—wanted it more than anything else he could think of; but he was poor and could not afford to buy one, for then Bibles cost more than they do now. One day two strange gentlemen came to his house and asked his mother for something to eat. Although she had only plain food, she gave them a welcome to what she had. As they ate they saw the little boy looking sad. They asked him what he wanted, and he told them a Bible. His mother said, "Never mind; don't fret about that. I'll take you to see General Washington next week."

"But I'd rather have a Bible than to see General Washington," the boy said. One of the gentlemen seemed very much pleased with this, and told him that he hoped he would always be as fond of the Bible as he was then.

The next day the little boy received a beautiful Bible, and on the fly-leaf was written "From George Washington." The little boy did not know it, but he had been talking to General Washington himself the day before—Christian Index.

WILD DEER VISITS IOWA PUBLIC SCHOOL.

By F. L. Clark.

It made the children laugh and play to see a deer at school, in McGregor, Iowa, one blowy day in March. During the noon hour the deer—a full grown doe—came idly strolling upon the playground, creating the greatest excitement. She suffered the children to crowd around her and even to pet her.

Whence and how the deer came nobody knows. Wild deer are unknown in Iowa nowadays. She appeared at McGregor, a town on the Mississippi River, in February, coming across the ice, the supposition was from Wisconsin. But why she had chosen to leave home and kindred in the wilds to seek man's society is a mystery.

The strange, beautiful creature stayed about McGregor most of the time since, occasionally disappearing for several days. She would wander at will up and down the streets, occasionally dropping into some one's yard to take a nibble or two at a shrub. The many attentions of grown-ups and children were tolerated by the deer, but with head held high in a detached aloofness. Let a barking dog come running at her, however, and the doe became a wild thing at once, springing to action to defend herself from her hereditary enemy.

The belief is that the deer went up into the hills to sleep at night. It was hoped that she might become a permanent resident of the river woods about McGregor, since, with the ice gone out of the river, a return to the native haunts in Wisconsin would not be possible. If being made a community pet pleased the wild creature, she was sure of a home and plenty to eat in McGregor. But, alas, the deer got on the railroad track just north of the town and was killed. The town was shocked to hear of the accident, as all the inhabitants felt that they had lost a pet.—Our Dumb Animals.

SOME TWISTERS.

Fifty years ago the old red school houses were not used solely for teaching the children reading, writing and arithmetic during the day; but on every possible occasion the people gathered to have their singing school, spelling bees, and other educational amusements. It was also customary to have ever so often things that were out of the oridnary line of work or play. "Tongue twisters" were commonly tried out at social gatherings, and the following were among the most popular tried. Some were fairly simple and were given to the younger people to recite, while the older ones had the longer and more perplexing kind.

"Of all the saws I ever saw, I never saw a saw saw as this saw saws."

"Robert Rowley rolled a round roll round; a round roll Robert Rowley rolled around. Where rolled the round roll Robert Rowley rolled around?"

"Bandy-legged Borachio Mustachio Whiskerfucius, the bad but brave Bombardino of Bagdad, mandeb, to beat down an abominable bumble of helped Abormilique Bluebeard, Bashaw, of Babel-Bashaw."

"I saw Esau kissing Kate;
The fact is, we all three saw;
For I saw Esau, he saw me,
And she saw I saw Esau."

"When a twister a-twsiting would twist him a twist,
For twisting a twist three twists he will twist,
But if one of the twists untwists from the twist,
The twist thus twisted untwissteth the twist. "

Perhaps the most difficult of all to learn was the "twister" about Theophilus Thistle: "Theophilus Thistle, the successful thistle sifter, in sifting a sieveful of unsifted thistles, thrust three thousand thistles through the thick of his thumb. If, then, Theophilus Thistle, the successful thistle sifter, in sifting a sieveful of unsifted thistles, thrust three thousand thistles through the thick of his thumb see that thou in sifting a sieveful of unsifted thistles thrust no three thousand thistles through the thick of thy thumb."

Another curious one was this: "Thou wreath'dt and muzzl'dst the far fetched ox and imprison'dst him in the volcanic Mexican mountain of Popocatapetle in Cotopari."

At one time there was a fad among young people to give tongue twisters with misplaced consonants, such as in using a "V" for a "W" like this: "Villy Vhite and his vife vent on a voyage to Vest Vindsor and Vest Vindham von Vitsun Vnesday."—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

"THE WILLING WORKERS."

By Mary Lillian Smith, Aged 14.

We're a bunch of "Willing Workers."
Come and join us, if you will!
And we'll try to make you happy,
For it is our Father's will.

We're a bunch of "Willing Workers,"
"All for Christ," our motto be,
And we trust we have the power
To do something worth while for thee.

We're a bunch of "Willing Workers,"
And we all should do our part;
We should serve our loving Savior,
And do our work with a willing heart.

We're a bunch of "Winlling Workers;"
We're trying to do our best;
We should all work together,
For we all must stand the test.

We're a bunch of "Willing Workers,"
And we are a merry band,
Trying to save souls for Jesus,
For this is our Lord's command.

We're a bunch of "Willing Workers,"
And we're busy as can be Trying to send the Lord's sweet message
To children far across the sea.

MACARONI.

A little boy, out to dinner, thrice refused chicken gravy, of which he was very fond.

His hostess, who had added macaroni to the gravy, finally said: "Why, I thought you liked chicken gravy."

"I do sometimes," replied the guest; "but when my mamma fixes it she never puts in the windpipes."—Exchange.

A Scotchman story, perchance new, is about: This Scotchman was bound to London, and at each stop he left his compartment and hurried into the station, to rush back to his seat again before the train started. After this had been repeated many times, a fellow-passenger finally asked the reason. "It's because of my heart," the Scotchman explained. "The doctor says I may drop off at any time, and I'm buying my ticket from station to station."—New Yorker.

DIRECTIONS.
All checks and money orders should be made payable to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.
Communications pertaining to subscriptions and other business matters should be addressed to the Manager, or to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.
The Printed Label on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after four weeks, notify us, and we will make it right.
Communications intended for the Editor should be directed to him at 512 Camp Street. Correspondents will observe the following rules: 1. Write on only one side of the paper. 2. If you have a typewriter, by all means use it; otherwise use a good quality of black ink. 3. Leave a space of at least two inches at the top of the first page; leave a margin of at least one inch on the left-hand side of the page; do not crowd the words and the lines together. 4. Take special pains to write proper names correctly and legibly. 5. Use letter paper if you can get it—not note paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

FURTHER RESULTS.

Since our last issue the following subscriptions have been received: Rev. B. C. Taylor, New Orleans, 4; Rev. E. C. Gunn, New Orleans, 1; Rev. L. W. Cain, New Orleans, 5; Rev. J. C. Rousseaux, New Orleans, 2; Rev. J. E. Williams, Rolling Fork, Miss., 1; Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr., Lake Charles, La., 1; Mr. Sam Montgomery, New Orleans, 1; and Rev. A. W. Bailey, Duck Hill, Miss., 1.

The above is for one week only. Rev. E. C. Gunn has secured a total of 12 to date and declares he will get a total of 50; Rev. L. W. Cain has secured 7 to date; and Rev. B. C. Taylor has secured 4, so that a contest seems to be developing between these brethren here in New Orleans.

Louisiana, with 56,115 Methodists, has sent in 80 subscriptions to date, and Mississippi, with two Conferences and 141,939 Methodists, has sent in 12 subscriptions.

EDITOR OF WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY NOTES.

It may have escaped the notice of correspondents that there has been a change of editors of the column of the Woman's Missionary Society. Mrs. V. G. Hyams, of Natchitoches, La., who had been editing this column for some time, recently found it necessary to give up this work, and Mrs. J. E. Brown, Gloster, Miss., has been appointed to edit the column. All communications for this column should be sent to Mrs. Brown and not to the Advocate office.

AN ANONYMOUS REQUEST.

A postal from Jackson, Miss., which bears no signature but declares itself to come from "A Long Suffering Subscriber," claims that a number of subscribers have expressed themselves as being more than "fed up" on a certain pastor's seeking publicity through the Advocate. "Can't you give us some relief for a while?" asks this anonymous card.

As a matter of fact, the brother in question has not given any evidence that he is seeking publicity for himself. He mails us the weekly bulletin of his church, as some others do, and as we heartily wish all would do who issue a sheet of this kind. We are always eager for any bit of news from any section of our patronizing territory and we are grateful for any item sent us. The Advocate is sometimes criticized for the asserted scarcity of personal items and news from the charges. We carry all the news we can get and we take this opportunity of saying we are ever appreciative of any items of interest sent in to the office.

Now in regard to this anonymous card, we ourselves always sign our own letters and we do not feel under obligation to give special heed to the request of an unknown party—of one who criticizes one of our preachers while hiding his or her identity. But if the "Long Suffering Subscriber" will write again, sign his or her name to the letter, and give us a good reason why we should exclude the news about this brother and his church, we shall be glad to consider the request.

In this connection it is to be presumed that those who write thus and make requests and suggestions feel that they speak for the readers of the Advocate in general. As a matter of fact, such is not the case. We find great diversity of opinion among the readers of the Advocate.

Some two or three have suggested a surcease of controversy, while a very intelligent gentleman of New Orleans comes into the office, renews his subscription, expresses his pleasure in reading the Advocate and says that he believes controversy to be the "life of the paper." So also says one of our leading pastors here in New Orleans. One writes that we need less of controversy and more articles on holy living, while others hold that our beliefs affect the way we live and ought to be settled. So how are we to know that anyone who makes a suggestion or a request is speaking for any great number of our subscribers?

However, we do not refuse criticism, and we shall be glad to give any suggestion which seems helpful due consideration. R. H. H.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Dr. Hawkins, of Whitworth, and Mrs. Hawkins recently visited relatives in Canton, Miss.

Rev. B. D. Watson, of Clinton, La., did the preaching in a meeting recently held at Pine Ridge.

Mr. Warren F. Black, an appreciation of whom appears in our pages this week, was once a member of the Advocate force.

Rev. R. A. Bozeman, pastor of Epworth Church, New Orleans, will assist Rev. H. W. May in a meeting next week at Zachary, La.

Rev. S. A. Seegers, our pastor at Slidell, La., with Mrs. Seegers and their little daughter, is enjoying a vacation with relatives in North Louisiana.

Rev. P. D. Hardin, pastor at Brookhaven, Miss., recently assisted in a meeting at the Conehatta church, Union charge. Rev. R. H. Clegg is the pastor.

Mr. W. H. Black, prominent Christian layman, of New Orleans, has agreed to become the teacher of the Men's Bible class, Carrollton Avenue Church, this city.

Rev. J. T. Parsons held a revival at Pine Grove, La., July 24-31. He was assisted by Rev. B. H. Andrews, of Amite, La. The meeting resulted in several conversions.

Rev. C. J. Thibodeaux, pastor of the Lefourche charge, New Orleans District, is conducting a revival meeting at Labadieville. Rev. A. D. Matirn is doing the preaching.

Rev. A. E. Barrett, Mrs. Barrett and the baby, of Pearl River, La., recently spent a week end visiting in Greensburg, La., where Brother Barrett was formerly pastor.

Mr. and Mrs. D. C. Worrell, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Favourite, and Mr. J. H. Carter and his son Bobbie, all of New Orleans, have been recent visitors to the Seashore Camp Grounds.

Brother L. C. Evans, of Hattiesburg, Miss., writes that the Advocate has been going into his home for thirty-eight years, either to his sister, Mrs. E. Lou Whyte, or to himself.

Rev. W. H. Lewis, presiding elder of the Brookhaven District, with their daughter, Miss Alice, and niece, Miss Kathryn Slocum, recently enjoyed a day's visit to relatives at Lorman, Miss.

Recently Rev. J. Tillery Lewis, pastor of First Methodist Church, Tupelo, Miss., slammed a car door on his right elbow and broke a blood vessel. He is having a painful time with the wound, which is healing, but slowly.

Sunday, July 31, was a "red letter day" with the Sunday school at Greensburg, La., reports the St. Helena Echo. Several new names were added to the roll, while there was a much larger attendance than usual of old members.

Miss Clara Chalmers, of New Orleans, who has been in missionary work in Cuba for six years past, the last two years as president of Colegio Irene Toland, Matanzas, Cuba, arrived in New Orleans last week for a year's furlough.

In sending in a subscription, Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr., presiding elder of the Lake Charles District, Louisiana Conference, writes of a delightful reception in honor of Miss Julia Reid on Aug. 5. Miss Reid will do missionary work in Cuba.

Evangelist "Jimmie" Smith, member of the Mississippi Conference, has been in a great meeting in a union tabernacle at Greenville, Fla. Brother Smith has some open dates for the fall. Preachers desiring his services should address him at 4226 West Potomac Avenue, Dallas, Tex.

In sending in some notes for the Epworth League page, Mr. A. F. Hanson, president of the New Orleans Union League, writes: "We are really trying to do things for Christ in New Orleans." Such is indeed true. The Leagues in New Orleans are quite active and are doing a fine work.

The church at Wier, Miss., has recently been blessed with a gracious revival. Rev. C. A. Northington, the pastor, did the preaching. Professor Bill Fancher, of Collins, Miss., led the singing. Fifteen persons were received into the church upon profession of faith and several by certificate.

Editor Holland, of the St. Helena Echo, and members of his family were week-end visitors in Covington, La., recently, and they attended the Methodist church there on Sunday, July 28. Editor Holland speaks with praise of the sermon he heard on that occasion by the pastor, Rev. H. W. Jordan.

Palmer Creek camp meeting is announced for Aug. 21-28. Rev. J. Loyd Decell will do the preaching. Rev. W. W. Murray, Biloxi, Miss., pastor of the Coalville charge, and Rev. W. F. Baggett, pastor at Saucier, Miss., are in charge of the meeting, and they urge all pastors who are in reach to come and assist in this meeting.

Rev. Theodore Copeland, general evangelist, has returned from the northwest for a period of rest in his home, 3710 Euclid Avenue, Dallas, Tex. Brother Copeland held nine meetings while he was in Idaho, and hundreds were converted during these meetings, and nearly all of the converts united with the church.

Our church at Plain Dealing, La., where Rev. A. M. Wynne is pastor, is making big preparations for a great community-wide revival, beginning Aug. 14. Dr. Mark Terrell, of Dallas, Tex., one of our outstanding general evangelists, will do the preaching, and Prof. Baron De Ely, of Dallas, will direct the choir. Dr. Terrell has recently closed a fine meeting at Eden, Tex.

The trustees of the New Orleans Methodist Depository, 512 Camp Street, the building in which the Advocate is published, met on last Monday night at the home of Rev. R. H. Harper, to consider rental of the ground floor, necessary repairs to the building and other items. Mr. H. F. Foster, brother of Rev. John F. Foster, of the Louisiana Conference, is chairman of the trustees.

Recently handsome bronze medals were presented to Sheriff Downs and Jailer Penny, of Alexandria, La., for their faithfulness to duty in protecting a Negro prisoner from a mob. Hon. T. W. Holloman, prominent attorney, made the presentation. Mr. Holloman has been for a number of years Lay Leader of the Louisiana Conference, and is quite active in all the work of the church.

The Hon. J. L. Seawright, of Ackerman, Miss., was stricken on July 31 at church, just after he had finished teaching his Bible class, and died in a few minutes. In addition to his work as teacher of the Bible class, Brother Seawright was chairman of the board of stewards at Ackerman and a trustee of Millsaps College. "He died as he lived, serving his Master," writes the pastor, Rev. C. A. Northington, who conducted the funeral on Aug. 1.

Mrs. H. C. Tucker, missionary for forty years in Brazil, passed through New Orleans last week en route to visit a brother in Corsicana, Tex., who is seriously ill. Mrs. Tucker arrived in New Orleans on Thursday afternoon on the ship La Plata Maru, and was met at the Robin Street docks by Rev. J. C. Rousseaux, Rev. R. H. Harper and Rev. and Mrs. B. C. Taylor. Brother Taylor and Mrs. Taylor entertained Mrs. Tucker during her brief stay in the city and saw her to her train for Texas.

Rev. A. A. Simms, pastor on the Brooklyn and Bond charge, writes that the prospects are promising for full reports from the work under his care. He has recently been assisted in a revival at one of his churches by Brother Herman Lee Smith, of Ellisville, choir leader and young people's worker, who rendered a very fine service. Brother Simms recommends Brother Smith to any pastor who may need assistance in a meeting. Brother Smith has some open dates in August and September.

Rev. J. H. Moore, of the Eden and Satartia charge, in sending in a subscription, writes that he is in the midst of summer meetings, having held three and with another to be held. In the meeting at the Eden church he had the assistance of Brother C. P. Jones, whom he declares to be a very efficient and able evangelist. Brother Moore writes that if any of the brethren want to hold a meeting and have "some good old-time gospel preaching" they would do well to secure Brother Jones. Brother Moore will assist in three meetings outside his charge.

Rev. H. F. Tolle, formerly pastor for several years at Capitol Steert Church, Jackson, Miss., in sending in his renewal, writes: "There are three 'Brother Tolles' in the Florida Conference, as Corning was given license to preach and joined the Florida Conference in June, and was appointed to Oneco, Fla., and Joe is preaching at Oak Grove, and will get his license at next quarterly conference." The sons of Brother Tolle have excelled in college activities. Joe received a loving cup at the Southern College commencement as the 'best all-round athlete;' Corning was editor of the Annual, and Bob is president of the student body and manager of the football team.

The first Daily Vacation Bible School to be held in Pascagoula, Miss., began on last Monday morning at 8 o'clock, and is being carried on under the auspices of the Presbyterian and Methodist Sunday schools. The following is a list of those who will direct the school: Miss Katie Blair Woodward, Dean; Primary Department, Miss Elizabeth Gordon, principal, Miss Gussie Shelton and Miss Kathleen Kell, assistants; Junior Department, Mrs. M. H. Davis, principal, Miss Olga Delcomyn and Mrs. J. W. Sells, assistants; Intermediate Department, Mrs. C. A. Carrier, principal, Miss Nell Kell and Miss Margaret Woodward, assistants. Mrs. H. D. Cudabac will teach girls' sewing classes, Mr. M. H. Davis will teach the boys' craft work, and Mr. Bob Kell will have charge of the directed recreation; Miss Nell Kell and Miss Muriel Carrier will be the pianists for the two weeks school.

A press report from Lake Junaluska of Aug. 7 gives the following: "A new season's attendance record was established here to-day at the first of a series of five addresses by the Rev. Forney Hutchinson, Oklahoma City, Okla., at the annual assembly of the Epworth League of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Among the features of the week was the address last night of Dr. William T. Ellis, author and journalist, who expressed the conviction that travel in Bible lands will do more than anything else to combat destructive criticism of the Bible and to prove the history of Holy Writ. Declaring that travel through the area proves the truth and divine origin of the Bible, Dr. Ellis expressed the hope that every theological student would spend at least one year of his training in study and field work in Bible areas. He expressed the belief that such travel would clear away much doubt and induce straighter thinking and reverence for facts and truths of the Testaments."

Recently the Pacific Methodist Advocate carried on the cover a picture of St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at San Bernardino, Calif., and a picture of Rev. A. Inman Townsley, pastor of the church. The issue carries an editorial on the work of St. Paul's at Bernardino, from which we take this excerpt: "We spent two days with Brother Townsley, going in the homes of the people getting Advocate subscribers, and meeting the business men in their offices, and lots of folks on the street. Townsley knows everybody and everybody knows him; they know exactly how he stands in all public questions. He never disguises his position, and people admire and respect him for his frankness. He is a leader in church life outside of our own church even, for he is president of the Ministerial Union there." The many friends of Brother Townsley who were associated with him when he was serving charges in Baton Rouge and New Orleans will be glad to hear of his success. Louisiana also has a claim upon Rev. W. H. Nelson, the brilliant editor of the Pacific Methodist, for he is a native of the Crescent City, attended Centenary College, where he and Rev. R. H. Harper shared a room together, and he entered our ministry here in New Orleans.

MRS. A. K. McLELLAN DEAD.

On Thursday morning of last week, Aug. 4, at 9:30, Mrs. A. K. McLellan came to her eternal release. She had been seriously ill for some weeks in the Baptist Hospital of this city. She died the day following an operation undertaken as a last hope of saving her life. Mrs. McLellan was a Miss Ecker, of Natchitoches, La., and was brought up in the Methodist Sunday school and church at that point. She was a sweet Christian and vitally interested in her husband's work. The funeral took place in Shreveport, La., the city where she was married to Rev. A. K. McLellan, of the Louisiana Conference, our Sunday School Extension Secretary. We greatly sympathize with our bereaved brother.

BROTHER WILLIAMS DEAD.

We were grieved to receive a note from Rev. John L. Williams, formerly a member of the Louisiana Conference, and now a local elder residing in New Orleans and engaged in the work of the Louisiana Child and Home Finding Society, saying that he had been called to Fort Worth, Tex., by the sudden death of his father, a good man who had attained unto the age of 84. "Thank God, Father's death was triumphant," Brother Williams writes. He will remain several days with his aged mother, who is now 82, before returning to New Orleans. We grieve for our afflicted brother.

MEETING STOCKHOLDERS SOUTHERN ASSEMBLY.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Southern Assembly will be held in the administration building at Lake Junaluska, N. C., Tuesday, Aug. 23, at 10 a. m.

N. B. "LEAGUE OF FAITH AND ORDER."

By Rev. J. Tillery Lewis.

Dear Advocate: Kindly attach, as a post script to my article, "League of Faith and Order," sent to you last week, the following:

N. B.—After the above article was in the hands of the publishers I received an invitation from Mrs. D. P. Wright, Secretary to the League, to join the League. The invitation did not come from Brother Curtis, but it came from the League about two months after Brother Curtis had surreptitiously began organizing the "faithful" on the ground floor of the League. Since the "faithful" have everything in their hands, it would seem that I, who am judged to be a heretic, am given the opportunity to join the League. Poor me; if I do not join the League I will be black-balled by the League as a heretic; if I now join the League I will ever be regarded with suspicion and will be dealt with accordingly. My kingdom for a Soloman to tell me just what to do!

(The above, written under date of August 5, unfortunately reached us too late to publish at the foot of the article referred to, as the article in question had already been set and placed in the "first side" of our forms. Hence its appearance here.—Editor Advocate).

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, it has pleased the Almighty to take out of this world the soul of our deceased sister, MRS. J. U. MELANCON, a faithful and devoted member of the Earnest Workers' class of the Algiers Methodist Sunday school;

Whereas, when we saw her body lying amidst the beautiful flowers she loved so well, we knew we must bow to the will of God, and while heaven was made richer by her going away, we were made poorer, because we should be deprived of her sunny smile, her cheery disposition, and the perfume of her beautiful and unselfish soul;

Whereas, although we know that her remains lie peacefully in her home cemetery in Baton Rouge, yet the gentle influence of her life, the beautiful example of her steadfast faith in our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, her thoughtfulness for others even till death came at last to end her feverish sufferings, all these virtues will remains with us in sweet and happy memories;

And whereas, not only has the Earnest Workers' class lost a true and faithful member, but the Algiers Methodist church, as well, together with every organization of which she was a member;

Therefore, be it resolved, That we, the Earnest Workers' class, meeting in the home of Mrs. W. K. Mashburn, 1800 Bodenger Boulevard, emulate the example of our departed sister in following the Saviour; that we bow in submission to the will of God, knowing that he does all things for the best; that we extend our heartfelt sympathy to Mr. J. U. Melancon in his great sorrow, to the men of the Bonner home in the loss of their true friend, and to all the members of the family.

Be it further resolved, That these resolutions be sent to Bonner Home, to the Advocate, to Mr. J. U. Melancon, and a copy kept for class record.

Signed: Mrs. W. B. Warren, Mrs. J. Cude Rousseaux, Mrs. Thomas A. Rhoades, Committee.

JOHN HENRY WILLIAMS.

Mr. Williams was born at Marshal, Tex., Oct. 8, 1857. He died at his home at Bolton, Miss., June 14, 1927. This sweet privilege is mine, to pay a brief tribute to Mr. Williams, because of my long time acquaintance with him and his devoted family. For over thirty years I have been intimately associated with him, and always found him to be an honest, upright Christian gentleman, the very incarnation of human kindness and sympathy. While he did not belong to that branch of the church to which I belong, it made no difference to either of us. He was possessed, to a remarkable degree, of that love and charity to all mankind, which is beautiful to behold. He rarely missed a service at which the writer was preaching, and the earnestness to which he listened to the message was an inspiration to me. He was a man of surpassing geniality, and cheerful face, and kindly words shed their radiance upon all around. If I were asked to mention the outstanding feature of his character I would unhesitatingly reply, it was fidelity. Faithful to his friends, his family and to his God, he was not a one-sided man nor a man with but one idea or virtue. He so blended graces and good qualities, so combined the traits and characteristics which distinguish men as to be worthy of Antony's compliment to Brutus:

"His life was gentle, and the elements
So mixed in him, that nature might stand up
And say to all the world, 'This was a man.'"

He found his inspiration at his fireside and approached the ideal in his domestic life. He and his faithful wife, who was both his companion and helpmeet, inhabited as tenants in common that sacred spot called home, and needed no court to define their relative rights and duties. The invisible wall which shut in that home and shut out all else had their foundations upon the earth and their battlements in the skies. No force could break them down, no poisoned arrows could cross their top, and at the door of that home love and confidence ever stood guard. Beautiful home, beautiful lives that made it such. Let us believe that he who guards the destinies of our souls, has given immortality to the mortal, and has gathered to himself the generous spirit of our friend. Instead of mourning, let us look up and address him in the language of the poet:

"Thy day has come, not gone;
Thy sun has risen, not set;
Thy life is now beyond
The reach of death or change,
Not ended—but begun,
O, noble soul; O, gentle heart! Hail, and farewell."

C. P. COLMERY.

SAY IT WITH CASH.

By Rev. S. H. Werlein, D. D.

It is very easy for a facile writer or fluent speaker to vividly describe the condition and needs of the old worn-out preachers, and to appeal pathetically to the church for relief, but it is infinitely more needful that it be said with cash. Unctious and sympathetic language may be inspired by the subject, but this does not mean food, shelter, raiment. When, for instance, one of the Old Guard sends out an S. O. S. call, and says he owes the grocer $30, and has no further credit until this amount is paid, and there is not a dollar in the house, and different members of the home are sick, what is to be done? Do it with cash. Say it with dollars.

James asks: "If some brother or sister has no clothes, and has not food enough for a day, and one of you say to him, 'Good-bye, keep warm and have plenty to eat,' without giving them the necessaries of life, what good does it do?

This is the fourth year of the Superannuate Fund, and Dr. Todd tells us only a little more than half of the amount asked has been paid. Who is at fault? When the thirty-second question is asked at the quarterly conference: "What amount has been raised the present quarter for Superannuate Endowment?" there is often utter silence. Some preachers do not know. Some are not sure whether there has been appointed a Superannuate Endowment committee, and if so cannot name the members of the committee. Often owing to the absence of the chairman or the treasurer of the committtee, the question is not answered. If this fund was properly stressed it would not be difficult to raise the ten million. Who is at fault?—Pacific Methodist.

CONCERNING BROTHER SMOOT.

Rev. E. R. Smoot, one of the general evangelists of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has just closed a revival at the First Methodist Church, of Cullman, Ala. Mr. B. G. Grenfell led the singing. The services of these men was entirely satisfactory. In fact, the revival was one of the best ever held in Culman. In many of the services the presence of the Holy Spirit was manifested in a wonderful manner. Much lasting good was done.

We recommend these men most highly, and it is the desire of the church to have them back again.

GREAT REVIVAL AT PROSPECT.

On July 22 closed an eight-day revival at Prospect church, which was one, if not the greatest revivals this community ever had, and for which we feel especially grateful to our pastor, Rev. Lee R. Sparks, who did the preaching for us. It seems that he was at his best; seldom have I seen a man throw himself into his messages so spiritually as he did, which did stir the church to its foundations and, under the circumstances, I do not believe any one could have been a more efficient instrument in the hands of our Lord. The visible results were ten new members and three infant baptisms at the meeting, which makes a total thus far this Conference year of twenty additions to this church and eight infant baptisms, for which we feel thankful to God, and pray that his hand may lead us on to do more and better service for Christ in the future than we have in the past, for we expect to see and feel the results of this revival at Prospect for many years to come. We pray God's blessings on his people everywhere.

L. L. WILLIAMS AND WIFE.
Florien, La.

Christianity and the Christian church will continue in China and not be wiped out by the Nationalist movement; missionary work will be continued from America and from Europe, but may be considerably modified in organization and control, according to the consensus of opinion of a large number of missionaries, mission leaders and Chinese Christians, of whom Dr. A. L. Warnshuis, secretary of the International Missionary Council, New York, recently asked the question, "What is the future of the Christian church in China?"

CONFERENCE NOTES.

ELZA-STEPHEN-REMMEL HALL, MOUNT SEQUOYAH, ARK.

St. Louis Conference, in annual session in April, endorsed the Mount Sequoyah woman's building enterprise. They will make plans at the mid-year executive meeting for the payment of the quota, $1 per member, probably paying one-half of it by the end of this year.

West Oklahoma Conference voted a gift of $1,800 to the Woman's Building fund, Mount Sequoyah. This has been apportioned to the auxiliaries according to size and ability to pay. It will be paid quarterly as soon as possible.

Texas Conference placed the raising of the special fund for the Elza-Stephen-Remmel Hall in the hands of the Conference vice president, Mrs. C. B. Sheeks, Beaumont, Tex. She has especially emphasized the cultivation work of $1 per member to be paid in full by the close of the first quarter 1928. This is being presented at district and zone meetings.

Central Texas Conference expects to complete payments on the Methodist dormitory at the State University by January, 1928. The building fund for Mount Sequoyah will then be pushed vigorously. It is now being cultivated by distribution of literature.

Southwest Missouri Conference voted to liquidate its obligation to the Elza-Stephen-Remmel Hall fund by Oct. 1, 1928. Interest is being aroused at district meetings and zone meetings, also by the use of literature.

MERIDIAN DISTRICT MEETING.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Conference of the Meridian District met in the Methodist church at Waynesboro, July 7. Delegates were present from eleven adult auxiliaries, one Young People's and one Junior Society. Both the Young People and Junior reports came from Quitman.

Morning devotionals were led by Mrs. C. P. Hand. Mrs. H. B. Graves extended gracious welcome, and Mrs. A. C. Lee made response.

Mrs. Roulston Huggins, District Secretary, in her address, paid tribute to Mrs. W. I. Denton, whose term of office she finished last year. She spoke of work going forward and of increased interest manifested as a result of zone meetings. Zone leaders also enthusiastically told of meetings held in their zones and of great good accomplished.

We were privileged to have present three Conference officers, Mrs. T. B. Cottrell, Corresponding Secretary; Miss Mary V. Weems, Recording Secretary, and Mrs. Stanley Wilson, Superintendent of Children's Work, who, at this time, with the aid of blackboard charts, made a splendid and thorough explanation of the correlation of the Junior Missionary Society and the Junior Epworth League.

Mrs. Cottrell stressed the necessity of more Young People's organizations, only four having reported from Meridian District.

The closing benediction of the morning session was pronounced by Rev. W. J. Dawson.

Opening afternoon worship was led by Mrs. Knobles. Then Mrs. Cottrell gave a very interesting and helpful talk on the Council pledge and the Jubilee celebration, speaking of the wonderful growth in membership and finances this last half century. The celebration of the Jubilee is urged to be church-wide, international and inter-racial. She told about the five Jubilee goals, especial emphasis being placed upon the first goal—that of prayer.

Mrs. Sallie Smyle Ferguson was called forward by Mrs. Cottrell, and related some interesting things of the pioneer days of missionary work, she having been made a life member at 3 months old.

Mrs. Libby and Mrs. Wilson, in presenting that ever interesting subject, the Meridian Wesley House, spoke of the plan to add a second story in order to meet increasing demands, and requested auxiliaries to give to this fund.

A round table discussion, "Weak Points in Our Auxiliaries and How to Strengthen Them," led by Mrs. Dobson was entered into with spirit, and helpful suggestions were exchanged.

Delightful features of the day were the duet by Mmes. Slaughter and Gray; a reading, "The Finger of God," by Miss Katherine Chapman, and vocal solos by Miss Chapman and Miss Katherine Peel.

A rising vote of thanks to the Waynesboro auxiliary for their wonderful hospitality, and an invitation to meet with Quitman in 1928, brought us to dismissal.

JACKSON DISTRICT MEETING.

Quite a pleasant day was spent in Bentonia on July 1, when seventy-five or more delegates and visitors met to hold the annual session of the Woman's Missionary Conference of the Jackson District, with the District Secretary, Mrs. J. C. Wood, presiding. The devotional exercises were given by Mrs. J. L. Neill, of Yazoo City; the address of welcome by Mrs. C. H. Fisher, and the response by Mrs. Harry Shattuck, of Yazoo City.

Mrs. Wood gave a most inspiring opening address with needed information as to the work to be undertaken this year. Mrs. L. W. Alford, of McComb, Conference President, spoke upon the Jubilee year, which completes fifty years of "Woman's work for women" in Southern Methodism. The celebration will be held in Nashville, Tenn., in 1928, and the great objective is a spiritual awakening in the life of the whole church. Mrs. D. M. Key, of Millsaps College, presented an able discussion on "Mission Study;" and Mrs. T. M. Brownlee, of Capitol Street Church, Jackson, read a paper on "Stewardship," which was so fine a request was made that it be published in the New Orleans Christian Advocate. Mrs. Goodwill, of Osyka, spoke on Social Service; and Miss Rosa McNeil, of Jackson, who has been accepted as a missionary, and who sails for Africa in September, talked to us of Scarritt College. Of especial interest was a description of the beauties of the Bennett Memorial building, which will be in use next year.

Mrs. B. F. Lewis, the historian for the Jubilee year, was kept at home by illness. The Missionary Conference Society is indeed fortunate to have Mrs. A. F. Watkins, of Meridian, as spiritual cultivation leader for the Jubilee year.

The Juniors of Bentonia; Capitol Street, Jackson, and Grace Church, Jackson, gave interesting parts of the program. Other phases of the work were discussed and plans made for progress along some lines. Visitors of note were Rev. B. F. Lewis, of the Orphange at Jackson; Rev. J. H. Moore, pastor-host of Bentonia; Rev.

Sunday School

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Rev. A. M. Bennett writes thus of the Cokesbury schools held on the Tyro circuit: "We are in a revival here now, that is, we are having services to that end. We count the training school a big help in that direction. The survey has shown us the field, and pointed out the timber. The courses of study have sharpened our wits and stirred out enthusiasm. The two weeks in class have begotten a confidence in us, each for the other, by bringing us to a better understanding of each other. We feel that we are ready for a long pull and a strong pull, all in the same direction. The fraternal spirit between denominations never was better, made so largely by the work of the training schools. As a result of that two weeks' work we are running five schools where we were running three. The Baptists have established a new one, and an interdenominatonal school has sprung up in the consolidated school building. If we had such efficiency and consecration everywhere as we have in Hammontree and Sharp we would have better and more schools to take care of the people.

Rev. A. T. Clanton taught a class at Chapel Hill, on the Courtland circuit, using as a text, "The Small Sunday School." He taught the class at the morning hour and preached at night. Twelve credits were issued and eighteen united with the church. This was an effective piece of work. We need to hold a hundred meetings similar to this one.

The Cokesbury courses will help build up the country churches as nothing else has done. The places that need these courses most are slowest to ask for them. All we ask is to let us help the teachers and officers understand more fully their task in evangelizing the people. It is hard to go against the men who have charge of the work. Of course the success of the work will vary in different places, but give it time and do enough of it and the results will be altogether satisfactory. The testimonies of all who do the study are cheering. Our aim is to go to the most needy places in the Conference.

Let the men who have been holding back teach a class or have a class taught, and they will see the benefit of such work. We could have at least ten classes taught in each district if we would only unite in what the church wants done. What we need to do is evangelize the people under our care and the Modernists will have nothing to work on in our territory. It is simply killing time to be working on people at long distance. What we need to do is to clean house at home. It is very fascinating to get stirred up over bad conditions far removed from us, but it takes genuine consecration to lay hold upon the work right at us. "Be not deceived, God is not mocked."

If you have never tried observing Children's Week try it this coming October, and you will always observe it. This is one of the means of getting every member of the church to do something in the way of building the kingdom of God. Yes, it does take time and study, and prayer, and work, but how can one invest these elements to better advantage? Take a post card and write me saying you want literature explaining the how and why. Let us have a thousand men and women unite in prayer for the spirit of Christ to be in our midst. We all have made a sufficient number of pledges; what we need to do is observe these pledges.

Every day our faithful workers are passing into the great beyond. The latest is that of our friend and fellow-worker, Mr. J. Lem Seawright, of Ackerman, for a long time superintendent of the Sunday school, lately the teacher of a large Bible class in his school. We shall miss this gentle, sweet-spirited Christian gentleman.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

By Rev. C. D. Atkinson, Conference Superintendent.

I left home, Alexandria, La., Tuesday, July 26, and reached Junaluska, N. C., Tuesday, Aug 2. I came as far as Atlanta, Ga., in my car, accompanied by Mrs. Atkinson and our daughter, Frances Ruth. On Saturday, the day after my arrival in Atlanta, we visited Macon, Ga., where I have a sister living who had never seen my family. We had a blessed day together.

On Sunday, July 31, at 11 a. m., I worshiped with the congregation at St. Mark's, Atlanta, Ga., where Dr. Duren, formerly of Rayne Memorial Church, New Orleans, is pastor. The Doctor gave us a great prophetic message from the book of Isaiah. On Monday morning I attended the preachers' meeting of the two Atlanta Districts. Dr. Pierce, nephew of Bishop George Pierce, presided. I dined with Dr. Duren, and in the afternoon we called on Bishop Candler and drove out to Emory University. The Bishop was anxious to know the conditions in the flooded districts in our Conference. At the university we called for a few minutes on Dr. H. T. Carley.

On my arrival at Lake Junaluska, the first official I met was Dr. Shackford, who told what a fine session of the Leadership School was coming to a close, with prospects of a greater session to open this week. I have seen only three Sunday school workers from Louisiana, Mrs. T. W. Holloman and Miss Hickman, of Alexandria, and Miss Ella Hooper, of Houma.

My greatest interest on arrival was my mail, as I had not had a line from Louisiana in a week, and was very anxious about Mrs. McLellan's condition after her operation.

In my mail I find this message from H. L. Johns, of Natchitoches, He has secured his faculty for his Training School and has promised to teach in the New Orleans school.

Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr., writes: "Dr. Wynn and Brother Mayo asked me to meet with him to plan for a school here. We met on last Tuesday. We had a great trip to Sequoyah and back."

THE SUMMER VACATION.

The monotony of being chained to the commercial wheel in order to gain a livelihood is wearing and destructive. Not every one loves his work; the majority carry on their daily tasks with little interest in what they do.

If each individual could choose, or rather could be chosen for the work to which he is best fitted. the drudgery of earning the daily bread would be cut to a minimum, and the output and efficiency of the average person enormously increased. Often workers are square pegs in round holes, and for this reason there is so much friction and wear and tear. Vacation often is a period of relaxation, and most people try to get whatever they can out of the short pause in the daily grind.

Of course relaxation for city dwellers is best sought in the country, if it is possible for them to get there; it is the urbanites upon whom the greatest nervous demands are made who should never neglect an opportunity to escape from the city to the peace and quiet of country life.

The delusion that many persons hold that they are irreplaceable leads often to illness and premature death. It is not worth while to burn the candle at both ends. He who does not allow his body to relax from time to time will most assuredly pay for his zeal with a shortened existence.

The activity of sports are applicable to youth. Golf quiets the brain without fatiguing the body. Elderly and old persons may play golf with profit when no longer able to take part in the more energetic games of tennis and baseball. Riding and swimming are applicable to all ages, providing the body has not lost its elasticity, it being of course understood that nothing should be carried to excess.

Traveling also has a soothing effect on the body and the nervous system, when it can be carried on without worry and excitement. Change of environment, if conditions are not too uncomfortable, is always helpful. It has a mental as well as a physical effect.

Personal hygiene of baths and sleeping in the open air, rising early in the morning, with a brisk walk before breakfast, should not be forgotten as adjuncts to the amenities of a vacation trip which under most circumstances are few enough.

How to Reduce Varicose Veins

Rub Gently and Upward Toward the Heart as Blood in Veins Flows That Way.

Many people have become despondent because they have been led to believe that there is no remedy that will reduce swollen veins and bunches.

If you will get a two-ounce original bottle of Moone's Emerald Oil (full strength) at any first-class drug store and apply it night and morning as directed you will quickly notice an improvement which will continue until the veins and bunches are reduced to normal.

Moone's Emerald Oil is a harmless, yet most powerful germicide and two ounces last a very long time. Indeed, so powerful is Emerald Oil that old chronic sores and ulcers are often entirely healed and anyone who is disappointed with its use can have their money refunded.

Tri-County Union Meets at Poplarville.

The third quarterly meeting of the Tri-County Union was held at Poplarville on July 21. After the devotional, led by the president, D. C. Camp, the Union went into its regular business session. The department superintendents were appointed by the president, and a plan of work for the coming year was discussed and approved by the Union. The Picayune League was awarded the banner for having the largest delegation present. On account of the inclement weather Logtown and Lumberton Leagues were unable to be present. Immediately following the business session a social hour was enjoyed, and ice cream and cake were served by the Poplarville League.

Miss Louise Preston Appointed Life Service Superintendent of the Arizona Conference.

We have recently learned of the appointment of Miss Louise Preston, of Tucson, Arizona, to the office of Life Service Superintendent of the Arizona Epworth League Conference. Miss Preston is one of our own Conference girls and former editor of this column. We appreciate the honor that has been conferred upon her and know that she will reflect honor upon the office.

NEW ORLEANS EPWORTH LEAGUE UNION ACTIVITIES.

By Mr. A. F. Hanson, President.

Coming back from the recent Louisiana Epworth League Assembly, held at Mansfield, La., during June, with renewed inspiration and consecration, the Epworth Leaguers of New Orleans have been active during the past two months.

Devotional meetings have been very well attended in nearly all churches, and individual chapter programs are being carried out with unusual vigor in the face of torrid weather.

Two outstanding Union League programs featured the month of July.

A Union League boat ride was held on the steamer St. Tammany Saturday night, July 16. Over two hundred Leaguers and their friends graced the occasion, and a very good time was had by all. A special feature of the ride was the presentation of stunts by the respective chapters of the Union. Louisiana Avenue Church League won the judge's decision with a very unique "Midget" stunt, thereby receiving a ten dollar prize donated by Mr. O. J. Dunn, a Leaguer from Epworth Church. The judges were Rev. and Mrs. R. H. Harper and Mr. Neeb.

The second Union League program held during July was a combined vesper service of all the chapters, held opposite the Delgado Museum Sunday evening, July 31, at 6:30. The song service was conducted by Rev. A. M. Serex, of Second Church, and a very inspiring talk given to the Leaguers by Mr. Edgar E. Cayard, first department superintendent of the Union. A period of personal testimony followed Mr. Cayard's address. About 300 Leaguers were present, and those three hundred voices lifted together in song caused many of those driving through the park to take notice, and quite a few joined the gathering of Leaguers.

A meeting of the State League officers, district secretaries and Union presidents was held at Alexandria, La., Sunday, July 31, to discuss the State-wide programs to be carried out during the present year. Two members of the New Orleans Union were present, Mrs. R. P. Jackson, who represented the New Orleans District Secretary; Mr. Edgar Cayard, who was unable to be present; and Mr. Carroll Gelbke, who represented the New Orelans Union League. The plans discussed at this meeting will be presented to the New Orleans Leaguers at the August business meeting of the Union.

At the July business meeting the following was adopted as the policy of the New Orleans League Union for the present year:

1. That the business of the Union may be conducted without undue delay, the president shall be authorized to call a cabinet meeting at his discretion.

2. To organize a Junior Epworth Society or an Epworth Hi League in each charge, with active supervision over same.

3. To endeavor to enroll each League within the bounds of our district 100 per cent in the three covenants, namely: The Quiet Hour, the Fellow Workers, and the Christian Stewardship Covenants.

4. To maintain and support the Missionary Specials, the Conference Promotion Funds, and the Field Work program authorized by the State Epworth League.

5. To make our district and subordinate chapters more efficient by a more thorough understanding of the Standard of Efficiency, and by applying it in every way possible.

6. That each department may have a definite aim, let there be written policies of work from the departmental superintendents, the Junior Epworth Society, and the Epworth Hi League superintendents.

7. To stimulate the reading of church literature, namely, the Epworth Era and the New Orleans Christian Advocate, among our Leaguers.

8. To co-operate with the pastors and aid them in every way possible to further Methodism in New Orleans.

9. To maintain and endorse a budget of $350 for the coming year.

10. To do all in our power to organize our chapters so as to meet the requirements of the district award outlined by the State, thereby winning the James B. Grambling loving cup, to be awarded annually at the Assembly to the most efficient district of the State.

11. To have a copy of this policy sent to the State president, the District Secretary, the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and to each chapter president.

The New Orleans Union League officers for the present year are: President, Alfred F. Hanson; Vice President, Arthur Kern; Recording Secretary, Alvin Morris; Corresponding Secretary, Evelyn Patterson; Treasurer, John Morris; First Department Superintendent, Edgar E. Cayard; Second Department Superintendent, Gilbert Wade; Third Department Superintendent, Maude Valliant; Fourth Department Superintendent, Mrs. R. P. Jackson; Junior and Hi League Superintendent, Mrs. Edgar E. Cayard; Assistant Junior and Hi League Superintendent, Consuela Martinez; Chorister, Rev. A. M. Serex; Pianist, Hilda Brown; Epworth Era Agent, Addie Mehn.

Miss Maude Valliant and Mrs. R. P. Jackson, of New Orleans, are Second and Fourth Department Superintendents, respectively, of the State Epworth League. Mr. Edgar E. Cayard is District Secrtary for the New Orleans District, and Mrs. Edgar E. Cayard is Assistant District Secretry.

CENSUS REVEALS ASTONISHING FACT

8,549,511 Working Women in United States

MRS. W. M. BAILEY

Many Say Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helps Keep Them Fit to Work

8,549,511 women would be a vast army. According to the 1920 Census of Manufactures, that is the number of women and girls employed in all trades in the United States.

Napoleon said, "An army travels on its stomach." This army of women travels on its general health. Every working girl knows that time lost through illness seldom is paid for and seldom can be made up. Employers demand regularity. If she wants to keep her job or hopes for a better one, she must guard her health.

Atlanta, Ga.—"My system was weak and run-down, and I was tired. I was this way for five years or more. I read your advertisement in the papers and I decided to try your medicine, the Vegetable Compound, but I did not begin to take it regularly until after I was married. I got so much good from it that I feel fine and have gained in weight. I work in a broom shop, but my work is not so hard on me now, and I keep my own house, and work my garden, too. I am telling all my friends of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and how it has helped me."—Mrs. W. M. Bailey, R. F. D. No. 5, Box 27, Atlanta, Georgia.

Missouri Woman Helped

Parkville, Mo.—"I am proud to recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I was so ill that I could not lie down at night. Then I got my husband to go to the store and buy me a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I was up and around before the first bottle was gone, although I only weighed about ninety pounds. I took six or eight bottles and was able to do all my housework, washing and ironing, take care of my five boys, and tend to my chickens and garden, where before I had to hire my washing and part of my housework."—Mrs. Anna Cole, R. ZONE MEETING AT BOND, MISS.

On July 21 the Methodist church of Bond, Miss., was opened to the members of all the Woman's Missionary Societies of the churches in zone three, while they assembled and held the most inspiring and profitable meeting of the year. Every church in the zone was represented except one, and the ladies seemed to be very interested in the work; each responded with a good report. A picnic lunch was brought by each lady, and they were spread together on the church lawn, where the Bond ladies were lovely hostessess in serving iced tea. The morning program was as follows:

Welcome address, Rev. A. A. Simms, of Brooklyn; prayer, Rev. H. R. McKee, of Wiggins; devotional, Rev. A. A. Simms (Mark 14:6). This was well applied to the societies. Business, opened by our zone leader, Mrs. H. R. McKee, with a talk on the growth of the Missionary Society. The following repsonded to the roll call: Alexandria Memorial, Bond, Brooklyn, Stilmore, and Wiggins; each church was represented by its pastor. A letter from our district secretary was read, in which each society was urged to contribute as liberally as possible to one of our new missionaries. A pledge of $14.50 was made for this. A resolution committee was appointed, which consisted of Mrs. Hopkins of Wiggins and Mrs. Hinton of Stilmore. The topics discussed were: "Duties of Officers," Mrs. A. A. Simms; "Our Weak Points and How to Correct Them" (lack of consecration, time, attendance of meetings, and encouragement to young people), Mrs. I. E. Taylor; vocal solo, Blanche Perkins, of Brooklyn; benediction, Rev. Hollingsworth, of Stilmore. Lunch.

The afternoon session was opened by a song followed by prayer. Devotional, Rev. Flurry, of Alexandria Memorial (fiftieth Psalm); song, Brooklyn Juniors. Topics discussed were: "Meeting our Tasks Through the Juniors," Mrs. Hopkins; "Importance of Bible Study," Mrs. Lou White, of Bond.

Mrs. John Reed, of Wiggins, gave echoes from the Missionary Conference so well that every one present seemed to feel as if we were at the conference ourselves.

"Through the Missionary Society—Where?" Mrs. Flurry; "Why Have Zone Meetings?" Mmes. Simms, Hinton, Ramsey and Taylor. Round table discussion, "What the Missionary Societies Should Mean to the Home Church." Prayer, Mrs. McKee.

The minutes were then read by the secretary, Mrs. S. E. Perkins, of Brooklyn. Benediction, Rev. Hollingsworth.

The next zone meeting will be held at Stilmore on Aug. 25, 1927.

MRS. S. E. PERKINS.

Why is it that so many who boast that they would be willing to shed their blood for Christ are seen to wince when they are called upon to bleed their pocketbooks for the support of His Missions?

* * *

There is as yet no need of traffic cops on the celestial highway.

Good resolutions should be equipped with self-starters.

What have you done, up to this time, to prove that you really mean it when you say "Thy Kingdom come" in reciting the Our Father?

* * *

The financial problems of the Home Missions would be more nearly solved if all who withhold their support of the Foreign Missions, on the pretext that "there are still too many pagans to be converted in our own country," were sincere and consistent.

GRENADA DISTRICT PASTORS' ASSOCIATION.

At the call of the presiding elder, Rev. E. S. Lewis, nine of the pastors of the southern end of the Grenada District met in Durant, Miss., for prayer and conference together. The morning session was devoted to a discussion of the preparation and delivery of sermons. Many interesting and helpful suggestions were made by the pastors who participated in the discussion. The afternoon session was devoted to a discussion of books and reading, led by Dr. C. M. Chapman. Other themes discussed were, "Fundamental Elements of a Successful Pastorate," by Rev. W. O. Hunt, of Vaiden; "Church Building," by Rev. J. R. Murff; "Collecting the Benevolences," by Brothers Murff, McKibben, and Chapman.

The visiting pastors were served a delightful lunch by the ladies of the church at the home of Mrs. R. C. Elmore.

The presiding elder gave a very earnest talk on the need of co-operation among the pastors of the district.

Upon motion of Dr. Chapman, the organization of the "Grenada District Pastors' Association (Southern end)," was made permanent, with the presiding elder as chairman. Dr. Chapman and Mellville Johnson were appointed to co-operate with the chairman in the arrangement of the program for the next meeing, which will be held in September.

Eleven pastors are eligible to membership. Those present were: E. S. Lewis, chairman; G. R. Williams, secretary; C. M. Chapman, N. G. Augustus, J. R. Murff, Mellville Johnson, H. N. McKibben, A. A. Martin, W. O. Hunt.

BABIES AND HOT WEATHER.

In hot weather the children and infants suffer more proportionately than do the grown people who have become adapted to a warm climate. Even efforts to compensate by comparatively light clothing is not enough to prevent a certain heat stagnation in children. Pale, pasty-faced infants are, of course, anemic, yet the anemia does not always have to be the result of a high temperature. Nevertheless it is the common appearance of children even among those whose diets are adequate and who have no intestinal parasites.

Just how the heat diminishes the blood values is not clear. It seems possible that the digestive functions are disorganized, for it is not an uncommon thing to find both children and adults lacking in appetite for the first meal of the day. This is even more marked following sultry nights when a complete relaxation of the body is impossible.

Children and infants frequently suffer another annoyance from the heat which is not always easy to counteract. How often do we see infants covered with heat rash and inflammatory reactions in the creases of the skin due to profuse perspiration. This is notably the case when hygiene of the infant body has been neglected. Powder of a suitable kind, containing a small percentage of boric acid, will as a rule diminish the symptoms and make a reasonably comfortable baby. Close rooms, warm clothing, hot drinks and use of soap are given as factors in the development of the heat rash.

It is a mistake to neglect children in hot weather. Babies feel the heat as well, if not more, than grown people. They are unable to express their feelings, but react with peevishness, ill temper, loss of appetite and a sluggishness which are not normal. These are symptoms of something wrong, and the wise parents should take the matter to heart and ameliorate as much as possible a condition arising from circumstances over which they have no direct contorl. Powder, baths, fresh air, easily digested food, plenty of opportunity to play, sunlight, as few clothes as possible, will help matters considerably, and if followed consistently will make a healthy, happy, good-natured child.

Dried-Out Bowels Hold Malaria in Your System

If malaria is in your system, the only way to get it out without torturing and upsetting yourself is to take Dodson's Liver Tone to clean out all the hardened, dried-out accumulation of bile in the liver and bowels, and carry the germs out with it.

Never take calomel. That's wrong. Calomel is mercury—a dangerous drug. It jars the liver and cleans constipated bowels, that's true. But it salivates you—makes you sick and you lose a day from your work. It stifles the muscles of the bowels, deadens them so they can't act at all.

Dodson's Liver Tone cleans you out good so the liver is free to get the malarial germs out of your blood, and the bowels can carry them off. Before you realize it the chills and fever stop. Malaria is gone.

Get the big bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone from your nearest store. They all have it. Keep it in the house so you will have it handy to take nights before you go to bed.

REPORT OF REV. CHAS. ASSAF FOR APRIL-JULY, 1927.

April 25. While on my way home to Jackson I met a man on the train; we got to talking about Christianity; after the talk he gave me his name and asked me to move his membership to Capitol Street Church. He has been living in Jackson for the longest, and I gave his name to the pastor, Rev. T. M. Brownlee, in Jackson, Miss.

Seashore District.

May 1 to 8, with Rev. W. W. Murray, Coalville, Miss. We had a good revival at Cedar Lake church. During the services 44 people joined the church, 42 of them by baptism and profession of faith; 7 infants baptized, and several people at the altar for prayer and reconsecration, and promised to have an altar for prayer in their home; also Junior meeting organized for the children in the community, ages 6 to 22. We met every night before services and taught them how to pray and how to do the work; also 100 per cent prayer every night.

May 9. While I was in Gulfport waiting for the train at the hotel I went to the cafe to get my lunch; a young lady came to wait on me; I talked with her; after the talk she gave me her name to move her membership to the Methodist church in the city. I gave her name to the Rev. W. J. Ferguson, P. C. She has been living in Gulfport for two years.

Jackson District.

May 10. After I came home my wife introduced me to a man and his wife and son in our home; after we talked with them I found the man and son not members of the church; after the talk with him and the son, they gave me their names to join the church, with his wife, at Glendale Methodist church, at Bailey Avenue. I gave their names to the pastor, Rev. C. E. Downer, and he received them by baptism into the church, Sunday the 15th, in Jackson, Miss.

Brookhaven District.

May 21 to 23, with Rev. T. M. Ainsworth, Osyka, Miss. We had good services with altar prayer; several people at the altar for prayer and reconsecration of their life to the Lord's work.

June 3 to 6, with Rev. C. C. Evans, McComb, Miss., visiting the Syrians and some in other homes in the city. Sunday, 11 a. m. service I was with Rev. E. H. Cooley at La Branch Street, and 7:30 p. m. with Rev. C. C. Evans at Centenary. We had good services. Several people asked for prayers during the services.

Seashore District.

June 13 to 28. I went to the Seashore Divinity School for the Second Year Course of Study. During the school Rev. H. L. Daniels asked me to preach for him at Epworth church. We had two services Sunday, 19, at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. During the services one lady joined the church; she came to us from the Methodist Episcopal Church, Biloxi, Miss.

June 26, with Rev. S. F. Harkey, Bay St. Louis, Miss. He also asked me to preach for him during the school. We had good congregations, with good services. During the services we had altar prayer; several people at the altar for prayer, and they promised to have altar prayers in their home. I have my school work done, except Minto's Logic Book. After I came home I took it by the Correspondence School, in Emory University.

Newton District.

July 2 to 11, with Rev. R. M. Gibson, Trenton, Miss. We had a good meeting. During the services several people reconsecrated their lives and promised to do the Lord's work in the community, and have altar prayers in their homes. Four peoople joined the church by baptism. Junior prayer meetings for the children organized, ages 6 to 25. I was with them every night before the service, and taught them to pray and the church work.

Vicksburg District.

July 23 to 31, with Rev. L. P. Anders, Washington, Miss. We had a good revival. During the services several people came to the altar for prayer and reconsecration. Junior prayer meeting organized for the children, and taught how to pray, also church work. Nine people joined the church by baptism. Four infants baptized. We had several visits in the homes, and prayed with the people in every community where we held a meeting.

Services held, 54; number joining the church, 62; infants baptized, 11; junior prayer meetings, 3.

Pray for me and my work.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

RAMBLES AROUND ATLANTA.

Atlanta is one of the great commercial cities of the South. Its trade territory is served by a fine transportation system, including many miles of improved highways. A resident of New Orleans is delighted with the many opportunities afforded of driving day after day over good roads in different directions.

Atlanta is also an educational center. Two of the great institutions of the South are located here—Emory University and Georgia Tech. In addition, many other schools of more than local prominence are located in the city or its suburbs. Among these are Agnes Scott College for girls at Decatur, and the new Presbyterian theological seminary, recently moved from Columbia, S. C., also located in Decatur. It may not be generally known that the Congregational Church also has a theological seminary here. Its attendance is small, but it occupies a fine plant. There are also several fine schools for Negroes in Atlanta.

As might be expected, Atlanta is a city of churches and church-going people. And it is a Protestant city. The congregations we have seen have been large, attentive, and cordial. We are told that the church attendance during the summer is considably below the average for the other seasons of the year; that being so, the houses of worship must be crowded during the fall and winter.

The visitor to Atlanta has the opportunity of seeing many places that are worth while. We have not seen all that is to be seen, but we have made several trips that were of more than passing interest. Perhaps the readers of the Advocate will be interested in the mention of some of them.

The Chattahoochee.

Ever since we read, in boyhood, that marvelously beautiful poem of Sidney Lanier's, "The Song of the Chattahoochee," we have wanted to see the stream that has made famous, through the poem, the hills of Habersham and the valleys of Hall. So, soon after our arrival, under the expert guidance of Dr. W. A. Smart, we drove out the Pace's Ferry road till we came to the bridge that spans the famous stream.

In a kind of sub-concious way we were expecting to see a beautifully clear and romantically attractive small river. Only from such a stream could we imagine could come such a lilting melody as Lanier makes it sing. As soon as we saw it, we realized more fully than ever before that Lanier was truly a great poet—for only a great poet could have heard such music from such a muddy creek. We do not say the stream is not beautiful; but we do say that it takes a real poet to see as much beauty in it as Lanier saw. It is only fair to add that we are given to understand that the Chattahoochee is really a more attractive stream nearer its head than it is here, where the red hills have mingled their mud with its waters.

"The Battle of Atlanta."

At Grant Park, housed in a building erected especially for its display, is a marvelous painting that is worth going many miles to see. As a matter of fact, we were told that tourists from all parts of the world make inquiry concerning it as soon as they arrive at Atlanta. We do not speak of it as a work of art, for we have not the technical training to estimate it from that point of view, and we do not know what artists think of it; but as a realistic representation of a historic battle scene, it is hard to surpass. We were told that it took three artists three years to paint it, that they used several tons of paint and thousands of yards of canvas. It is so true to the actual battle of Atlanta that those who are familiar with the topography can identify easily the places where the battle raged; and the figures of the leading officers on both sides are so clearly drawn that they can be pointed out by name by those who have studied their photographs. As we looked at it we had to rub our eyes to realize that we were not looking at a real brick house and a real railroad and real trees and a real mountain in the distance. Whether it is a work of art or not, it is worth seeing.

It is hardly necessary to state that Grant Park is not named for General U. S. Grant, but for a distinguished citizen who gave liberally to its establishment.

Stone Mountain.

Most visitors to Atlanta want to see Stone Mountain, that strange geological formation of solid granite that rises several hundred feet above the surrounding country. The mountain is best known, however, not as a geological phenomenon, but as a monument-to-be to the Confederacy; for on the face of the mountain is to be carved in heroic figures the story of the matchless heroism of those who gave their all for the "Lost Cause." Through unfortunate misunderstandings, the work has not progressed as far as we had expected to see it; but the difficulties are being straightened out and it is expected that the work will be rapidly carried forward to completion. The mountain is some eighteen or twenty miles from Atlanta, but it is easily reached, and it is well worth the time and cost of seeing it.

"The Wren's Nest."

"The Wren's Nest" is the old home of the late Joel Chandler Harris, known affectionately around the world as the creator of "Uncle Remus." We visited it under the expert guidance of Dr. and Mrs. F. N. Parker. The home is now owned by an association formed to perpetuate the memory of the distinguished and beloved writer, and much of it is just as he left it. It seemed strange to us that so great a writer had no study or special workshop. We were shown a plain table at which much of his writing was done; but it was his habit to write when and where the notion struck him. How little is genius dependent upon the accoutrements of convenience that the less gifted think necessary!

"The Wren's Nest" gets its name from a beautiful incident: A mail box was placed in the front yard near the gate for the convenience of the postman. One day Mr. Harris noticed that a wren was building its nest in the box. He immediately gave orders that the wren was not to be disturbed—and he provided another receptacle for his mail. The wren's nest is still preserved, and from it the home gets its name.

The Burns Cottage.

Again under the guidance of Dr. and Mrs. Parker, we visited the Burns Club, the home of which, in the suburbs of Atlanta, is a stone cottage which is an exact reproduction of the two-room clay cottage in which the famous Scottish bard was born in Aryshire. The Atlanta club is but one of scores of such organizations throughout the world, maintained as a loving tribute to the man who "came as near counting all the beatings of the human heart as any singer whose melody has touched the deepest chords within the recesses of that sacred sanctuary." On the birthday of the poet the club holds a great celebration, at which a distinguished speaker delivers an address. The Atlanta club has been host to some of the most notable visitors to the city. We were fortunate in finding at the club Mr. Cabaniss, of the Atlanta Journal, an ardent Burns admirer, to whom we are indebted for gracious courtesies.

An Afternoon With Bobby Jones.

When we knew that we were coming to Atlanta for the summer, we hoped that we might at least catch a glimpse of Bobby Jones, conceded to be the greatst golf player in the world; when we learned that he was a student in the Law School of Emory University, we even hoped that we might meet him; but it was not even within our dreams that we might spend an afternoon with him on the links. And yet that actually happened. We didn't play a round with Bobby—not by a long shot!—but through the kindness of Dr. Plato Durham, who is one of Bobby's "chums," we had an invitation to be one of the "gallery" of two (Dr. Durham himself being the other) to accompany him in the first game he played after returning from Edinburgh, Scotland, where he had just won the British Open, the greatest golf honor in the world. Bobby is as fine a gentleman as he is a golf player. He is both honored and loved in his native city. His teachers pay him the tribute of saying he

A VIOLENT ERUPTION IN "A COMMUNITY CHURCH."

By Bishop Warren A. Candler.

On Park Avenue, in New York, there is located what is called a "Community Church."

A "Community Church" is an institution into the membership of which are admitted people of all sorts of beliefs and of no belief. They are not "valiant for the truth," and they come together on quite other grounds than on the basis of a common faith. They engage in such a mindless merger for economic reasons apparently—that is to say, in order to save expenses at the cost of truth.

Perhaps the members of a "Community Church" have some settled principles; but if so, and if they asserted their variegated dogmas, the body would be reduced to a debating society at once. Hence to preserve peace they must eschew all loyalty to any tenets of faith and maintain an institution of moral and religious pacifism. In the end this leads to habits of indifference, if not hostility, to definite convictions, and that condition of mind and heart issues in creedless contention against all creeds, even against belief in the plainest teachings of the Holy Scriptures.

It is not strange, or surprising, therefore, that the man in charge of this "Community Church" on Park Avenue, New York, (miscalled a preacher), poured forth a violent attack on the Bible recently. Among other irreverent and senseless stuff he is reported to have said:

"Why should we be satisfied with the damaged goods of the New Testament? After you have rescued a few pages from it the New Testament is useless. Its psychology is hopeless, its morals are outworn. To-day we need another such genius as Paul to do the work that he did, but there is no such man. There is not a first-class man in the church to-day; the first-class men go into science, business and the arts.

"In the minds of many Christianity and religion are identical, but that is not true. There are true and beautiful religions in portions of the world where the name of Jesus is never mentioned. Religion in the real sense of the word springs from the hearts of men, from the ages of human experience. We don't need the Bible; every man can write his own Bible."

Harangues of this sort are more or less common nowadays, and they are always pleasing to the ears of creedless mobs and faithless congregations.

But sensible people are growing tired of such outputs of folly.

Upon this eruption of nonsense and profanity in the "Community Church" on Park Avenue in New York, that ably conducted paper, "The News and Observer," of Raleigh, N. C., comments cogently as follows:

"The most serious and insidious attacks upon the Bible once came from unbelievers, atheists and men who loved to create a sensation by attacking the citadels of truth. None of the Ingersolls and others destroyed the faith. The Word remains as the sure foundation after generations of assaults by skeptics and cynics and unbelievers.

"To-day the most danger to the Bible and religion does not come from its open foes. It can meet and vanquish all such. The enemies to be dreaded are sometimes found in the pulpit, preachers who still minister at holy altars, giving the people who are hungry for the bread of life nothing but stones. The latest and most dangerous is Rev. John Haynes Holmes, who rattles around in the pulpit of Community Church on Park Avenue, New York. He told his congregation that the Bible is useless except for a few pages of the New Testament, that the religion of the future will have nothing to do with Jesus, no use for the Bible or for any church. He declared that 'Jesus never rose from the dead,' and that 'all the sum and substance of Christian belief has been destroyed by science' and 'we don't need the Bible, every man can write his own Bible.'"

The able editor (Hon. Josephus Daniels) goes on to say:

"If such profanation had been uttered outside the pulpit, it would not have been quite so shocking. It shows that in a cult of present-day unbelievers, not honest enough to give up 'the livery of heaven,' the Bible is no longer a guide and a light. Such preachers no longer believe in the Way, the Truth and the Life, and they are seeking to destroy the faith of those who listen to their attempt to remove the ancient landmarks. * * *

"When a preacher says 'every man can write his own Bible' and 'we don't need the Bible,' he may have a place in the world. But it is not in the pulpit."

The "Community Church" is not common in the South, and for the most part such profane babblers, like the talker employed to entertain this "Community Church" in New York, are found only in the North and Northwest.

This fact is to the honor and benefit of the Southern people.

The Southern people accept the Holy Scriptures as the veritable Word of God, the sufficient rule of faith and practice.

Nourished by these Scriptures, they have pronounced religious convictions which they regard as too sacred to be compromised by merger schemes resting on considerations of mere economy.

Their characteristic faith found expression in the message of President Woodrow Wilson, sent to our gallant soldiers as they entered the World War. That illustrious son of a Southern Presbyterian preacher accompanied the Bibles distributed to the young men of the army with this noble word of exhortation in which the evangelical faith of the Southern churches was uttered at the moment of supreme crisis in our eventful times:

"The Bible is the word of life. I beg that you will read it and find this out for yourselves—read, not little snatches here and there, but long passages that will really be the road to the heart of it. You will find it full of real men and women not only, but also of the things you have wondered about and been troubled about all your life, as men have been always; and the more you read the more it will become plain to you what things are worth while and what are not, what things make men happy—loyalty, right dealing, speaking the truth, readiness to give everything for what they think their duty, and most of all, the wish that they may have the real approval of the Christ, who gave everything for them—and the things that are guaranteed to make men unhappy—selfishness, cowardice, greed and everything that is low and mean. When you have read the Bible you will know that it is the Word of God, because you will have found it the key to your heart, your own happiness and your own duty."

What a contrast is seen between this lofty message of the great President and the cheap chatter of the talker who serves the "Community Church" on Park Avenue in New York!

Men of power and pronounced convictions, like President Wilson, are not produced by "Community Churches;" nor do they participate in such creedless combinations.

Strong men have strong beliefs. A flabby faith cannot beget a forcible character.

The Christian people of the South will do well to cling to the faith of their fathers and leave the "Community Church" alone.

By their fruits churches are know, and the fruit of the "Community Church' has proved to be both insipid in its flavor and intolerable in its nature.

PROTESTANTISM FORSAKES ITS COUNTRY CHURCHES FOR THOSE IN VILLAGES.

From the Institute of Social and Religious Research, New York.

As this is Rural Church Year, the discovery by the Institute of Social and Religious Research that the decline of the country church has been caused in large part by a strongly marked trend of rural Protestantism villageward, will be of timely interest to thousands of mission study groups that, in city and country alike, are now discussing the church in rural America.

In a report just issued by the Institute, figures are given to show that nearly a third of the members of village churches throughout the United States are farmer folk who have forsaken their country churches for churches in nearby villages.

"An analysis of the residence of church members of village and country churches shows that, except in the South, the country church is losing to the village church," says the report, which presents, under the title "American Agricultural Villages," the findings of a nation-wide survey made under the direction of Dr. Edmund Brunner.

"In the Middle Atlantic and Middle West regions village churches have almost as many members living in the country as the country churches have members. In the Far West the total membership roll of the country churches is only one-third of the country members enrolled in village churches. Even in the South three out of every ten country people belonging to churches have united with village organizations.

Nationally speaking, two-fifths of the country church members have united, not with their own, but with village churches. They constitute nearly one-third of the enrollment of village churches, while only 3 per cent of the country church members live in the villages.

"This movement villageward has had a marked influence on rural religion. It has meant fewer in attendance at country church services and more irregular services, diminishing funds and, therefore, a still more poorly paid leadership. True, there are exceptions. In all but twenty-five communities there were found country churches. The South, as a region, has not succumbed to the tendency of country churches to decline to the same degree as other regions.

"The question of why country people preferred village churches to country churches was answered in all regions in the same way. The village church has a better preacher, a better building and frequently better music than the church at the crossroads. The automobile and improved roads have made it possible for the more prosperous to come to the center and enjoy these advantages and secure the satisfaction that comes from worshiping with numbers of people.

"Many signs were observed in this survey that village churches have in general failed to take into consideration the results of the increasing tendency of country people to attend village churches. Farm areas surrounding villages were often found almost entirely neglected by the village churches."

The findings of the survey also show that village churches, even though they draw so large a proportion of members from the open country, are by no means thriving institutions; and that they attract very few young people.

"Over half of the 140 villages studied," says the report, "have in them some church receiving home mission aid. Sixty-eight per cent of the Far West villages and over half the Southern villages have in them home mission aided churches.

"The proportion of males and females in the total population for the three age-groups, ten to twenty, twenty-one to forty-four, and forty-five years of age and over, was secured from the census. Church memberships of every church in 117 villages were similarly divided," the report states. "In the population, 48.5 per cent were males, 51.5 per cent females. The church membership contained 39.9 per cent males and 60.1 per cent females.

"Obviously the village church is not reaching men and boys as successfully as it is reaching women and girls. This holds true for every region and for nearly every age-group. The only exception is in the South, where, of the males forty-five years of age and over, the proportion in the church membership slightly exceeds the proportion in the total population. In every region a disproportionate part of the village church membership consists of older people, especially older women.

"In all three age-groups the percentage of females of villages affiliated with the churches exceeds that of males. While only 35.8 per cent of the older males in the total male population are church members, 56.4 per cent of the females are reported on the church rolls. The higher percentage of females holds for every age-group in all four regions. In the churches of the western villages there are relatively twice as many women as there are men who are church members. The South and Middle West lead in percentage of female population in the church membership.

"Men and boys are not conspicuous on the list of subsidiary organizations, women and girls outnumbering them nine times. Country churches are little interested in organization. Only eight men's and three boys' groups are reported by the 619 churches found in the open country parts of village communities.

"The outstanding fact about the subsidiary organizations of village churches, the Sunday school excepted, as well as about village community organizations, is that only 6 per cent of the members are boys and girls."

DR. CARLEY AND "ORTHODOXY."

By Rev. J. L. Decell.

In Dr. Carley's second "Orthodoxy" editorial in the Advocate of Aug. 4, he replies to the observations made upon his first article which was in the issue of June 23.

Of course one could not know what was in the Doctor's mind, and an interpretation of his words was all that was possible for a reader of his paper.

It is of general acceptation that the word "orthodoxy" conveys certain thoughts about the essential facts of Christianity and is not restricted in its meaning to mere quibbles over nonessentials. Brother Carley uses the words "truth" and "belief" in his first article, and only speaks about "opinion" in the second in interpreting his meaning. An opinion may be false, but the truth cannot be untrue. In fact his use of "truth" and "belief" in connection with a discussion of orthodoxy left little room to infer that he was only speaking of differences between the Baptists and Methodists and such like.

To say the least, it is quite unusual to have an editor of a Methodist Advocate urging Methodist people to hold an "open mind" on immersion and close communion, etc., and to be "constantly seeking after the truth" concerning the same, while at the same time he very dogmatically declares if they do not, they have a "closed mind and a crytallized intellect." The fact that they are Methodists would indicate that they had "reached previous conclusions."

It is encouraging that after in his first article the editor unfrocked the Rev. John Wesley from being an "authoritative settler of any question of belief" he quotes two long paragraphs from a sermon of his to prove that persons may differ in opinions and yet both be Christians. But Mr. Wesley never tried to force "the open mind on closed subjects," nor to encourage us to be ever "learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth." (II Tim. 2:7.)

Mr. Wesley said: "As to all opinions which do not strike at the root of Christianity, we think and let think." There are truths which strike at the root of Christianity and he never dallied with them. He said: "The Scripture of the Old and New Testament is a most solid and precious system of divine truth. Every part thereof is worthy of God; and atlogether are one entire body, wherein is no defect, no excess." And "God made Adam by immediate creation" and "Adam came directly out of the hands of God without the intervention of any creature."

It is good that we are no more "unorthodox" than was Mr. Wesley.

CHINA APPROVES CHRISTIANITY.

"There is no other organization in China today working so hopefully for a new day of freedom as is the Chinese church," replied the Rev. J. H. Bruce, a Canadian missionary just returned from North Honan. "Though comparatively small in numbers, the teaching and activities of the church have won the approval of all classes except the Russia-controlled communists. Christian standards of conduct are given prominence in the Chinese secular press, and Christians are occupying many of the highest positions of responsibility in the nation. The evacuation of the missionaries can be thought of only as a temporary measure of expediency, for the task of the church is far from fulfilled."

Dr. James H. Franklin, secretary of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, who has just returned from a visit of several months studying conditions in China, says: "Very much of the foreign scaffolding has been shattered everywhere, and unsound portions of the structure erected by us may have fallen. But if Christ has been the foundation we may go forward in confidence that on it the Chinese, preferably with our fraternal co-operation, will erect a superstructure that will abide. Let us be grateful for some part in the foundation work. Let us covet co-operation with the Chinese Christian architects and builders of the superstructure."

The new Chinese Christian church, according to the Rev. Courtney H. Fenn, a Presbyterian missionary in Peking, will be "not an imported denomination or group of denominations, not an exclusive or anti-foreign body, not a mission permanently supported and controlled by foreign churches, but of the Chinese, by the Chinese, and for the Chinese, foreign churches and missionaries accepting such part in its life as the Chinese Christians wish, and making such contribution to its evangelistic, educational and literary work as may be agreed upon in actual conference." CONFERENCE ON EVANGELISM AT JUNALUSKA.

The general subject of the Conference on Evangelism to be held at Lake Junaluska, Aug. 21-26, will be "Mobilizing for a Church-Wide Revival."

On Sunday, Aug. 21, Bishop Mouzon will preach in the morning, and Dr. Arthur J. Moore, pastor of the First Methodist Church of Birmingham, Ala., will preach at night.

On Monday morning, Aug. 22, Dr. Luther Bridgers, of Gainesville, Ga., will conduct the devotional service, and Bishop Mouzon, Dr. Robert E. Goodrich, of Shreveport, La.; Dr. Burke Culpepper, of Memphis, Tenn., and Mr. O. B. Andrews, of Chatanooga, Tenn., will discuss "Our Need of a Revival." The afternoon of the day will be given to a school of methods. "The Opportunity of the Evangelist in the Coming Revival" will be discussed by Rev. L. J. Miller, of Nashville, Tenn. This address will be followed by a round table. Dr. Arthur Moore will preach at night.

On Tuesday morning, Aug. 23, the devotional will be led by Dr. Lovick P. Law, of Siloam Springs, Ark. Dr. Harry M. North, of Wilmington, N. C., and Dr. Walt Holcomb, of Tampa, Fla., will discuss "Preparation." Dr. L. R. Akers, of Wilmore, Ky., will preach at 11 a. m. In the afternoon the time will be given to a school of methods. Dr. Arthur Moore will speak on "The Opportunity of the Pastor in the Coming Revival," and his address will be followed by a round table. Dr. Charles L. Goodell, of New York City, will preach at night.

On Wednesday morning, Aug. 24, Rev. J. W. Carter, of Lexington, Ky., will lead the devotional. Dr. R. L. Russell, of Atlanta, Ga., and Dr. Thurston B. Price, of Lake Junaluska, will discuss "Methods," and Dr. Charles L. Goodell will preach at 11 o'clock. In the afternoon school of methods, "Getting Results," will be discussed by Rev. Henry W. Bromley, of Cynthiana, Ky., and afterward a round table will be conducted. Dr. John A. Hutton, editor of the British Weekly, will preach at night.

On Thursday morning, Aug. 25, the devotional will be led by Rev. John B. Andrews, of Siloam Springs, Ark. Dr. Luther Bridgers, of Gainesville, Ga., and Dr. J. W. Perry, of Nashville, Tenn., will speak on "Conservation," and at 11 o'clock Dr. Hutton will preach. On Thursday afternoon, in the school of methods, "Relating the Revival to the Whole Progress of the Church" will be discussed by Dr. W. G. Cram, and after his address a round table will be held. Dr. Charles L. Goodell will preach at night.

On Friday morning, Aug. 26, the devotional will be led by Rev. W. M. McIntosh, of Columbus, Miss. "Consecration" will be discussed by Dr. Andrew Johnson, of Wilmore, Ky.; Dr. William F. Quillian, of Macon, Ga.; Bishop Darlington, and Dr. Arthur J. Moore, of Birmingham, Ala. This session will close with a consecration service.

The music of this conference will be in charge of the song leaders of our church who are approved by the Committee on Evangelism.

On Aug. 19 practically all railroads in the Southeastern Passenger Association will sell round-trip tickets for one fare plus one dollar. Arrangements are made for the entertainment of guests at hotels, including the Assembly fee, for the six days of the Conference at $15. It is to be hoped that many of our pastors can avail themselves of this opportunity.

SECRET PRAYER.

Jesus knew the tendency of the human heart to try to display itself when at worship, so he commanded that we pray more in secret than in public. The closet of prayer will draw one very much closer to the Father than any other place or method. If every real Christian could have some private corner or room where he could go and find that communion with God alone which will strengthen the fiber of the soul and give him an experience with God, how much better would all our churches be? It seems to me that every Christian should long for an assurance that God hears and answers the secret desires of the heart.

Secret prayer will renew one's faith in a real, living God, for when one has communion with Him he has more faith in His real existence for him in his own life. To so many people God is so far off they do not know Him. This secret prayer life will enable the Christian to commune with the father as a living, real, Divine Father, who understands what he needs. If this communion in prayer is continued he will slowly begin to become like Him in life and desires. Isn't it simply wonderful that Christian people can become so filled with the Spirit of our Master till they will want to please God in all their life? This manner of prayer will give one a strange sense of power within which will grow. Prayer is the keynote of all spiritual power. The Christian who does not pray is so weak, and, unless something comes into the life to change that trend, he will become cold and hard. I am convinced that here is our privilege and our need.

Amory, Miss. W. R. LOTT.

THE BRAZIL CONFERENCE SETS GOALS.

By O. E. Goddard, D.D.

I have now held "Retreat Meetings" in each presiding elder's district in the Brazil Conference. I shall go now to the Central Brazil Conference for similar meetings in each presiding elder's district in that Conference. These "Retreat Meetings" are given largely to prayer and conference. All our talking, praying and planning revolve around three matters: (1) The 1928 revival campaign; (2) Religious education in the local church; (3) Ministerial training. These three cardinal matters are given all possible emphasis.

At the close of each meeting, resolutions were adopted. In each district they set some goals. The goal set by each district in the Brazil Conference for the revival campaign in 1928 is a number equal to twenty per cent of the present membership. Each child will be asked to work, plan and pray for at least that many additions during the year. The Brazil Conference now has eight thousand members. This means that their minimum goal will be sixteen hundred additions or professions of faith during the ensuing year. This does not mean to limit the power of the Holy Spirit. It does mean that they will pray and pray for at least that many. They will be very happy if they can exceed that number. Nor does it mean to take in members without adequate instruction. They will continue to enroll probationers and instruct them until the pastor is satisfied as to the genuineness of their faith and their fitness to be received into the church.

They also set a goal for the next two quadrenniums. Their goal for the next eight years is to doble the present membership. This means if this goal is realized that in 1934 the Brazil Conference will have sixteen thousand members. How many churches in the homeland will add a number equal to eighty per cent of the present membership? How many Annual Conferences will double their membership in two quadrenniums?

They also set goals as to new congregations to be organized, the number of churches and parsonages to be built, and the number of churches now organized to be brought to self-support during the two quadrenniums. These goals are as follows:

New churches to be organized in eight years..68
New churches to be built in eight years.....35
Parsonages to be built in eight years.....23
Present churches to be brought to self-support.20

Pastoral and evangelistic work in the Brazil Conference is largely in the hands of the Brazilians. The major part of our missionaries are teachers and heads of institutions. W. H. Moore, W. M. Carr, Anderson Weaver and Jalmar Bowden are in Granbery College. J. M. Terrell is Superintendent of People's Central Institute in Rio and presiding elder of the Rio District. H. C. Tucker, the nestor of Brazil Methodism, is in charge of the American Bible Society. This leaves only Paul E. Buyers, who is presiding elder of the Petropolis District, treasurer of the Conference and pastor of the Petropolis church. All the other districts and all the other pastoral charges in the Brazil Conference are filled by Brazilians. So far as I can discern, the nationals are in hearty sympathy with this program of evangelism for 1928 and the comprehensive program given above for the two ensuing quadrenniums. The church at home should thank God for the good work already done in Brazil and for the auspicious outlook for even better work during the two ensuing quadrenniums.

Each district unanimously and enthusiastically recommended the appointment of a Conference Superintendent of Sunday Schools. They welcome the new program of religious education in the local church. In each district retreat meeting, one-half day is given to conference with pastors, superintendents and teachers about the new developments in religious education. They are eager to know the up-to-date program and will try to follow it.

I am well, busy and happy.

"LEAGUE OF FAITH AND ORDER."

By Rev. James H. Felts.

If being a "Fundamentalist" consists of accepting without hesitation or mental reservation "all the canonical Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments," and being "persuaded that the Holy Scriptures contain sufficiently all doctrine required of necessity for eternal salvation through faith in Jesus Christ," and trying "to instruct the people committed to my charge, and to teach nothing, as required of necessity, to eternal salvation but that which I have been persuaded may be concluded and proved by the Scriptures," I am, beyond question, a "Fundamentalist."

There is before me a little folder, "League of Faith and Order, North Mississippi Conference," which pricks my curiosity and stirs my pugnacity. To review the whole of it would be to ask for more space than I am entitled to. Suffice it to say, there is not a declaration in it that may not be found in our book of Discipline, so far as the faith of our people is concerned. It seems to be fathered by some of our best men. Nor do I, by implication or otherwise, challenge the utter sincerity of a single one of them. At the same time I most vigorously challenge the implied insufficiency of the vows all of us have already taken, together with the implied failure of our church to properly protect its ministry and membership from "strange and erroneous doctrine." It might be worth the while of these brethren to read paragraph 269, page 127, of our Discipline. There it is expressly stated that "preachers who disseminate, publicly or privately, doctrines contrary to our Articles of Religion" are to be proceeded against "as in the case of immorality."

I love my church. I believe in her doctrine and polity. I have never wavered for one moment in my devotion to her. If the time has come when I need to take another vow I will go to the same old altar, in the same old way, and say again: "I am so persuaded, and have so determined, by God's grace," and, "I will, the Lord being my helper." To me, the vows suggested by this little folder are equal to saying to the world, "I have violated my vows, been untrue to my church and Lord, and am using this method to get back to the faith of my fathers. My church vows were and are insufficient."

One thing is certain, if the solemn vows taken at the altar of the church will not hold a man, these vows will fail. Another thing is equally true, if the church vows are sufficient, these are not needed. If these are superior to the original they should be substituted therefor in the regular way. If they are inferior, why should a man give them a moment's serious consideration?

The personal pledge one is asked to take is interesting. "I, in becoming a member of this League of Faith and Order, hereby solemnly pledge myself to uphold and defend the standards of our faith to the best of my ability, and to endeavor to carry out my solemn obligations and vows to God and his church." When I was ordained elder I promised "with all faithful diligence to banish and drive away all erroneous and strange doctrines contrary to God's word." I am ready to stand at the bar of my church and Lord this day and give answer as to how I have kept that vow. Why should I obligate myself again? Are two oaths better than one? What becomes of the Bible injunction, "Let your communication be, Yea, yea; Nay, nay: for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil."

The second paragraph follows: "And further, that I will not knowingly vote for any one for public office in our church who does not stand for and uphold these principles without any reservation or equivocation whatever." In the first place, no man has ever been knowingly ordained in our church who had such reservations. It just can't be done. And if there is one solitary member of our Conference who declines to respect his vows I haven't the honor of his acquaintance. And I will, in the light of my vows, go these brethren "one better." Not only will I decline to vote for a known violator of his vows for office, but for the postorate as well. This paragraph looks to me like a cheap bid for "political preferment."

The closing paragraph is equally interesting. "I further pledge myself, that in the event my views on these fundamentals are changed, and I find myself out of accord with these principles, I will voluntarily retire from this organization by notifying the president or secretary of my withdrawal."

And thus we have the sorry spectacle of a man who has become a heretic being dumped back into the church or Conference without apology, and as easily as getting a divorce in Russia. It's a sad commentary on the vows we have already taken. And who is doing this? A self-appointed and self-constituted group of men having no rights or privileges that are not common to every member of the Conference. What is the effect? If it is still-born it is of small moment, despite the secret methods used for a time in its organization. If, on the other hand, it lives and flourishes, we will have an arbitrary and dictatorial organization in the church that is superior to the church. It will pass on the faith of every man. It, and it alone, will say who is worthy of any place of trust. And just what knowledge, or virtue, or orthodoxy, or ability these brethren possess that entitles them to be judge and jury, or final court of appeals, doth not appear.

I have declined in the past to join certain temperance societies. My church vows were and are sufficient. I have more recently declined to sign tithing cards. Again, my church vows are sufficient. I have tithed more than thirty years. I shall continue so to do to the end. It is the least I can do with an open Bible before me. That open Bible and my church vows are altogether sufficient to meet every possible demand I am willing to respond to. If I fail to heed them I will fail to heed even a call from the dead.

I regret the organization of this "League." We are already organized to the limit. We have no need for another organization. We just need to preach the gospel, carry out our vows already taken, quit generating suspicion with reference to each other, cease the "holier-than-thou" attitude, love one another for Christ's sake, forgetting not that "we be brethren," and "maintain and set forward, as much as lieth in us, quietness, peace and love, among all Christian people, and especially among them that are or shall be committed to our charge."

The time may come when our great church will be sharply and finally divided on certain issues so vigorously discussed these days. If it should come in my day I will be found with those who represent the "faith of our fathers." I belong there. I am there. There I remain. But I will do my fighting in my church, through my church, for my church, with the implements furnished by my church, and not through some private organization that ultimately, if not now, puts a question mark before the name and faith of every man who is not a member thereof. All I need to fight sin and erroneous doctrine is furnished by the Word of God and the church of which I am a member. I shall certainly not join an organization the constitution and pledge of which is both a confession of failure and a challenge to discord and division.

"And if a house be divided against itself, that house cannot stand."

THAT PLEDGE.

What do the organizers of the Faith and Order League mean when they say in the Personal Pledge: "That I willl not knowingly vote for any one for office in our church who does not stand for and uphold these principles without any reservation or equivocation whatever?" Do they mean to say that they will not vote for any man for office in our church who is not a member of the League of Faith and Order? I would like to know what they mean. Within the past ten days I have met ten or twelve of the best men in the North Mississippi Conference who were not asked to join the League till it was thoroughly officered and a constitution adopted. In case I should join the League would I be prohibited from voting for some of my good brethren who say they will have nothing to do with an organization on the basis of this proposed League of Faith and Order? I am just asking some of the members of this League to answer. These ten or twelve men I have seen in the past ten days are good men and I will not oppose their election to office. In a personal letter to the writer a few days ago Bishop Candler says: "With reference to the leafiet you sent me I would say that considering the aggressive movements of liberalists all over our country a League of Faith and Order might be of use, but I would not approve of any organization that proposes to affect our preachers' or people's vote. I think that will tend to factiousness and will do no good to a League designed, or ought to be designed, to serve."

"ORTHODOXY."

By Rev. John W. Ramsey.

The Advocate of Aug. 4 contains what purports to be an explanation of an editorial which appeared in the Advocate a few weeks ago. The chief trouble with the editor's explanation is that it fails to explain and is as absurd and illogical as his original editorial.

The editor says: "What we intended to be—and what we believe was—a timely comment upon what appears to us as an unfortunate tendency on the part of some good people to measure the doctrinal soundness of some other good people by the standard only of their own opinions." Now, it occurs to me that this is an exceedingly broad assertion for any editor to make just at this time when there is a nation-wide, if not a world-wide, controversy relative to the fundamentals of the Christian faith, and I hereby call upon him to cite one single instance in proof of his statement that there is a "tendency upon the part of some good people to measure the doctrinal soundness of some other good people by the standard of their own opinions." Let him be specific in his citation, because his assertion is in need of specific proof.

The truth is that those of us, whom the editor is kind enough to classify as "some good people," who stand for the essentials of the Christian faith in opposition to those who have "mental reservations" concerning these assentials, or boldly reject them altogether, do not "measure the doctrinal soundness of others by our own opinions," as the editor asserts, but we measure them by the only standard of orthodoxy, viz., the Apostles' Creed, which was adopted centuries ago by the church as a summary of the essentials of the Christian faith, the fundamental teachings of the Bible. The man who, unequivocally and without mental reservations, accepts the principles of the Christian faith as contained in the Apostles' Creed is orthodox. He who rejects said principles is a heretic, be he an editor, teacher, layman, or preacher. The Methodist who accepts these essentials as interpreted by the creed of the Methodist church is an orthodox Methodist; the Methodist who rejects them or claims the right to interpret them according to his own opinion is a heretic, and the moment he finds himself out of harmony with the teachings of the Methodist church he should get out—and he will get out, if he is honest. And that's that.

The editor's allusion to the "rigidly orthodox" Methodist and the "rigidly orthodox" Baptist is far-fetched and does not apply at all to the question of orthodoxy for the simple reason that a difference of opinion concerning the non-essentials is neither orthodoxy nor unorthodoxy; but it is just what I have called it, namely, a difference of opinion—nothing more. The editor's trouble lies in the fact that apparently he has befuddled his own thinking processes in a futile attempt to confuse difference of opinion concerning the non-essentials of the Christian faith with the essentials. Let him once discriminate between the essentials and non-essentials and his hazy thinking on the subject of orthodoxy will disappear as the dew before the rising of the morning sun. To assist him in the clarfiication of his thought, let me say this: A man may entertain opinions about the non-essentials; but he cannot and must not entertain opinions about the essentials, because rock-bed or ultimate truth has been fixed beyond the mutations of human thought by divine revelation and formulated in the Apostles' Creed, which is interpreted for all Methodists by the creed of the Methodist church—and beyond this no Methodist has a right to go and remain in the Methodist church. To assist the editor further to clarify his thought, I would refer him to Webster's International Dictionary for a definition of the word orthodoxy which seems to have brought him confusion.

In justification of his former editorial on "Orthodoxy," the editor gives us a lengthy quotation from one of Mr. Wesley's sermons, but the quotation in the connection in which the editor uses it is clearly a misapplication and a misinterpretation of Wesley's words. It is enough to make Mr. Wesley turn in his grave when present day modernists misapply and misinterpret his words in support of their erroneous theories. Here is a part of the editor's quotation from Mr. Wesley: "Whatsoever the generality of people may think, it is certain that opinion is not religion." Well, is not that precisely what I have stated in the above paragraph when I said that orthodoxy does not concern difference of opinion regarding the non-essentials? Let the editor stick to that and he will find his way out of the woods. Here is another of the editor's quotations from Wesley: "Hence, we cannot but infer that ten thousand mistakes may consist with real religion." Assuredly, "mistakes may consist with real religion;" otherwise, there could be no real religion on earth—but how do these words of Mr. Wesley support the editor's position on orthodoxy? The editor quotes once more: "But there are some truths more important than others." Certainly, and who has ever attempted to gainsay it? "But surely there are some which nearly concern us to know, as they have a close connection with vital religion. And doubtless we may rank among these that contained in the words above cited, 'There are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost; and these three are One.'" Evidently, then, while Wesley regarded a difference of opinion concerning the non-essentials as unimportant, he taught that faith in the Holy Trinity is essential to orthodoxy, and he said, as quoted above, there are other truths "having a close connection to vital religion." How, then, the editor can make Wesley's words serve his purpose of reducing orthodoxy to the vanishing point of insignificance is beyond my comprehension. His position on orthodoxy is altogether untenable. Some one has said: "To try to set matters right when complaint is made, without acknowledging they were wrong, is a miserably poor sort of procedure."

The fundamental mistake with those who decry orthodoxy and would substitute life for creed lies in their reversal of the processes of thinking indicated by their substitution of cause for effect and effect for cause. Indeed, the mix-up of their mental scintillations is such that they remind me of Mark Twain's description of the fire-fly:

"The lightning-bug is brilliant,
But he hasn't any mind;
He goes glimmering through existence
With his headlight on behind."

FROM LAKE JUNALUSKA.

The fourteen active bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will each receive a gift of a building lot at Lake Junaluska, seat of the Methodist Southern Assembly, it was decided by the Board of Commissioners in a recent meeting when they approved the suggestion of the general superintendent, Ralph E. Nollner, to present a lot to each of the denomination's bishops as a site for a summer home.

That the Methodist Southern Assembly is launched on an unprecedented era of prosperity, which in probability will result in liquidating the debt on the property and turning the entire plant over to the Southern Methodist Church at the next General Conference, was indicated by several forward-looking projects which the Commissioners approved at their meeting Friday. So optimistic are the Commissioners on this score that a day in August, 1928, was fixed as the tentative date for a jubilee meeting to celebrate the cleaning up of a debt of something like $300,000, which has hampered the work of the Assembly and prevented its acceptance by the General Conference of the denomination as a connectional enterprise.

Another project which the Commissioners discussed favorably was the desirability of locating at Lake Junaluska a Biblical Seminary for the benefit of candidates for the ministry and ministers who on account of limited educational advantages are not able to meet the entrance requirements in Methodist standard institutions of learning. Due to the fact that there is a church-wide sentiment calling for a better prepared ministry, it is believed that this project will meet with wide favor among leaders throughout the connection. Should the plan go through the proposed seminary will be controlled and operated by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as a special institution to meet special cases. Courses in English, Bible, Church History and Doctrine, Methodist Polity, Hymnody, and other phases of denominational education will be conducted in the seminary, provided plans go through. The Commissioners appointed a committee to formulate plans.

The Commissioners heard with approval plans of the Junaluska Woman's Club to build an attractive archway and approach to the grounds of the Assembly. The Woman's Club, through its president, Mrs. J. A. Bullock, of Montgomery, were working on plans to raise money to finance the project, and they set Wednesday, August 4, as "Rock Day," when each man, woman and child is expected to bring a native rock or stone, to be used in building the arch.

John R. Pepper, of Memphis, presided over the meeting. In addition to President Pepper, commissioners present were: E. A. Cole, Charlotte, N. C.; E. L. Brown, Asheville, N. C.; W. P. Few, Durham, N. C.; F. D. Jackson, Tampa, Fla.; Hugh J. Sloan, Waynesville, N. C.

The commissioners approved the report of Superintendent Nollner, who is in his first term as general superintendent of the Methodist Southern Assembly.

FLOOD RELIEF NOTICE.

To Whom It May Concern: We need help for pastors and churches in the flood area. Every congregation, not in the stricken district, could and should help. Send amounts for North Mississippi to Mr. S. V. Wall, treasurer, Cleveland, Miss.

We have about $1,200 in hand to date. Bishop Candler has sent about one-fourth of that. We need at least $8,000. Amounts not required for pastors will be put on assessments.

Louisiana and Mississippi Conferences are far ahead of us in this matter. Brethren: Please.

J. E. CUNNINGHAM,
For the Committee,
North Mississippi Conference.

THE GREENVILLE DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Greenville District Conference met at Cleveland, July 14 and 15, the meeting having been postponed from an earlier date on account of the flood. In the absence of the presiding elder, who was unable to reach the conference for the opening, Rev. C. P. Moss was elected temporary chairman and Rev. R. G. Lord was elected secretary. The attendance was good throughout the session, especially the second day, which was Layman's Day. Only two pastors were unable to attend, Revs C. A. Parks and L. A. McKeown. The same old Greenville District spirit was much in evidence, even though the flood had come like a tragedy within a happy family. The banners of our great district have not been lowered, but instead the whole district has come to the rescue of the flooded area like the vital organs rejuvenating a weakened member.

During the first hour of the conference steps were taken for flood relief, when a call was made to all the North Mississippi Annual Conference for a free-will offering to meet the needs of the stricken section. A committee was appointed to make a survey and ascertain the exact needs. Already money has been raised to repair the district parsonage.

The conference was blessed with the presence of some distinguished visitors, such as Rev. L. P. Wasson, presiding elder of the Aberdeen District; Rev. and Mrs. C. T. Floyd, of Moorehead; Dr. J. R. Countiss, of Grenada College, and Hon. J. M. Foreman, of Indianola, Conference Lay Leader.

At the evening hour of the first day Dr. Henry Felgar Brooks, pastor at Clarksdale, brought a very powerful message on the work of the Holy Spirit.

The second day was given largely to the laymen. Mr. S. V. Wall, District Lay Leader, had charge of the program. He had on this program such speakers as Mrs. Nellie Summerville, Prof. McMillan, Mr. Davis of Cleveland, Miss Ruth Kellogg, J. H. Sherard, J. H. Johnson, Judge Percy Bell. The high point of the program was the masterly address of Hon. J. M. Foreman at the 11 o'clock hour. The following lay delegates were elected to Annual Conference: Judge Percy Bell, Greenville; J. H. Sherard, Sherard; S. V. Wall, Cleveland; Mrs. Nellie Summerville, Greenville; J. H. Johnson, Clarksdale; Mrs. F. G. Bobo, Bobo; Waddy West, Greenville; J. T. Mathis, Leland; Mrs. S. L. Pope, Tunica.

The conference was diligent to attend to all the business due to come before it. The presiding elder, Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, presided with the fairness and expedition characteristic of the man.

The people of Cleveland, as was expected, took bountiful care of all the guests, receiving them into their most hospitable homes and serving them bountiful luncheons each day at the Rotary club room. By invitation the conference meets next year in the city of Greenville.

R. G. LORD, Secretary.

FROM HON. T. M. EVANS.

I.

When I read the Rev. W. T. Bazzel's reply, page 4, July 14, New Orleans Christian Advocate, I was impressed that we were about to agree, but in the conclusion he makes the following statement:

"I have said before in this paper that the controversy over the questions at issue between Fundamentalists and Modernists is injuring the church, hindering the gospel and threatening to divide our beloved Methodism into hostile camps. This is true, not because controversies concerning differences of opinion are necessarily harmful, but because the ultra Fundamentalists are manifesting a spirit of intolerance toward all who disagree with them. They would denounce as heretics a great many devout and loyal men simply because said men do not accept their own special interpretation of Genesis; they would even go further and class all men as atheists who have not closed their minds against all additional light, but are willing to investigate and learn. They would have State laws enacted compelling the schools to accept their veiws and forbidding, under severe penalties, any one to investigate the origin of man. They tell the world just what the first chapters of Genesis mean, and then denounce as traitors to the church all who fail to agree with them as to just what said chapters really do mean."

Now I am not acquainted with any of these Fundamentalists referred to in this article. I have never denounced any as heretics, neither did I say anything unkind of atheists or infidels, neither did I ask anybody to accept any interpretation that I might place upon the first three chapters of Genesis, or any other part of the Bible, neither do I class all people as atheists who have not closed their minds against all additional light, but are willing to investigate and learn; but I submit that since Christianity as taught by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is based on the assurance that the Bible is the Word of God, and that the first three chapters of Genesis is the inspired Word of God, and that the same has been adopted by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as the foundation of the Christian Religion that all Methodists should seek information in regard to divine things from the Bible, and should accept the information obtained in the Bible as the truth, and not substitute the theory of professed scientists who make no claim to inspiration for the truth, and I have heard of no Fundamentalists who have called on the church to secure legislation preventing any one from establishing schools for the propagating of any kind of scientific theories or even atheism or infidelity, but certainly the tax payers of the State have a right to prohibit the teaching of any theories that would tend to destroy the faith in God, or as to the teaching of Genesis and the creation of man and tend to destroy good morals, in tax-supported schools, and certainly the membership of the church has a right to deny the teaching of anything in schools belonging to the church that tends to contradict the Holy Bible in any way.

No State, so far as I am informed, has ever forbidden the teaching of science or scientific subjects in the schools maintained in the State, but in the public schools and universities supported by taxation in whole or in part, it is not a question of what the legislature forbids to be taught in the schools, but the question is what will the legislature authorize to be taught in tax-supported schools.

The Holy Bible is the only book which the legislature has no authority to prohibit the use of in tax-supported schools in the State of Mississippi, but from the organization of the public school system and the establishing of colleges and universities supported by the State the legislature has always directly directed what should be taught, or created a Board of Trustees or a Board of Education with authority to designate said schools, and nothing should be taught in such schools, except that which is so designated by the duly authorized authorities, and it is really strange that any person with enough intelligence to secure a license from the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to preach the gospel or to secure a position in a college or university supported by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, would not be sufficiently intelligent to know that only those things which have been authorized by the legislature can be taught in tax-supported schools.

Now Brother Bazzel charges the Fundamentalists with a spirit of intolerance. Let me call the brother's attention to the fact that God is the most intolerant person in all the universe, as well as the most generous. It is a great mistake to take God's love, mercy, forbearance and grace for toleration. God has no toleration for falsehood or unbelief or sin of any kind.

First God is the author of capital punishment. See Genesis, chapter 2, verses 16 and 17, which reads as follows: "And the Lord God commanded the man, saying, of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat: But of the tree of knowledge of good and evil thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." He destroyed all but eight persons in Noah's time for their wickedness.

In Ahab's time we find that Ahab was using the altars erected to God for the worship of idols, and supporting the priests of Baal out of the revenues of the State, and that Elijah, after calling for fire upon the altar to consume his offering, took 450 of the priests of Baal to the Brook Kison and slew them. This was for no other crime than for worshiping other gods. And many other instances contained in the Bible shows God's intolerance for sin. And Christ tells us, Matthew 5, eighteenth verse, that he came not to destroy the law, but to fulfill. "For verily I say unto you, till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled."

There is no remission of sin without the shedding of blood (Hebrew 9:19-22). "For when Moses had spoken every precept to all the people according to the law, he took the blood of calves and of goats, with water, and scarlet wool, and hyssop, and sprinkled both the book, and all the people, saying, this is the blood of the testament which God hath enjoined unto you. Moreover, he sprinkled with blood both the tabernacle, and all the vessels of the ministry. And almost all things are by the law purged with blood; and without shedding of blood is no remission."

God has no toleration for sin or unbelief, and I cannot understand how the substituting of "Darwin's Theory" of Evolution for God's plain statement of the creation can be preaching a higher standard of religion, than the prophets of Baal were teaching in Ahab's time, and if they desire to found a church on the theory of science instead of the plain teaching of the Bible they should organize a church for that purpose, and secure their own churches, schools and publishing houses, instead of taking those that have been dedicated to "Jehovah the God of Genesis."

As further evidence of God's intolerance the history of the human family which God created in his own image, and for his own glory, from the earliest history to the present time has suffered the curse as stated in Genesis for the violation of God's law to the extent that every child born into the world prior to the present generation has suffered the penalty of death, and perhaps there cannot a person be found in all the world who is not looking forward to and expecting the death penalty to be executed upon him. There is not an affliction, a thorn or a thistle or a blemish on the human race that does not bear evidence of God's intolerance for sin.

We are living in a day when there are many people worshiping a little love-sick God who is incapable of being angry. It is very offending to some ministers and church people in this day to refer to the anger of God. They serve a loving God who never gets angry. There can be no such thing as a loving God who never gets angry, there can be no such thing as loving without anger in a sin-cursed world. Think of a loving mother who could stand with a smile and see the ravenous beast destroy her babe—she is a loving mother and cannot be angry. Think of a loving father who could stand with a loving smile on his face and see a brute of a man commit an assault upon his wife or daughter and not be angry. It is impossible for love to abide in a breast that will not be angry with wrong.

WHEN ATTENTION LAGS.

The Pessimist.

Nothing to do but work,
Nothing to eat but food,
Nothing to wear but clothes
To keep one from going nude.

Nothing to breathe but air,
Quick as a flash 'tis gone;
Nowhere to fall but off,
Nowhere to stand but on.

Nothing to comb but hair,
Nowhere to sleep but in bed,
Nothing to weep but tears,
Nothing to bury but dead.

Nothing to sing but songs
Ah, well, alas! alack!
Nowhere to go but out,
Nowhere to come but back.

Nothing to see but sights.
Nothing to quench but thirst,
Nothing to have but what we've got;
Thus through life we're cursed.

Nothing to strike but a gait;
Everything moves that goes,
Nothing at all but common sense
Can ever withstand these woes.

THE POTTERS.

By Pearl Highfill.

Day after day the old potter's wheel turned, and the deft hands of Grandfather Paddock shaped the pliable clay into useful and beautiful jars, vases and pottery of all kinds.

One day upon the potter's wheel there was formed the most beautiful vase that had ever been made there. Its shape was unusual and the leaves and flowers that decorated it looked as if they were carved of the finest marble by an ancient artisan. But there was a flaw in one side of the vase, where a stone had been left in the clay.

Tourists and lovers of the beautiful admired the vase and wished to purchase it until they saw the ugly flaw in its side. Then they exclaimed, "Oh, what a pity that the flaw is in such a grand looking vase." "Grandfather," said little Danny one day, "why did you leave the flaw in the vase that everyone thinks so pretty? If you had not left that ugly place in it I know you could have sold it a long time ago and gotten lots of money for it, but no one wants it now." Then he looked thoughtful and said, "Grandfather, it is such a beautiful vase, all except that one ugly place. I do wish it had been pretty, too; and grandfather, you never made anything with flaws, as you call them, in it before. You are so careful to get all the sand and rocks out of the clay you work with. Why did you happen to make this vase with an ugly place in it?"

Grandfather Paddock looked very thoughtful for a moment, for the moment he had thought would come some day and the moment for which he had labored for hours making his masterpiece for that one moment, had arrived, and he lifted his heart to God in prayer that he might help the child of his heart to see the great truth as he wished him to see it. Then he replied: "Danny, I have waited for a number of months to tell you a story, and one that I hope you will never forget. It is a long story, but I shall make it as short as I possibly can, and I shall tell you why I left the flaw in the vase that otherwise would be beautiful. But first I shall tell you the story of my life.

"I have always loved beautiful things. But I could not go away and study painting, so I decided to take what material I had near at hand and make as beautiful things of it as I could. So year after year I have worked with the clay and made these useful, pretty things you have seen since you could remember. I did it partly to make my living, but mainly because I loved to turn the commonplace and ugly into the beautiful and useful things. Since the tourists have come to my door and my fame as a potter has grown to be nation-wide I have become rich. I could have made the vase that you and every one thinks bautiful, without the flaw, and sold it for a large sum of money, for it is by far the finest piece of pottery I ever made. But I put the flaw in the vase for a purpose, and if it serves the purpose I wish it to serve, then I shall count it the greatest price a piece of pottery ever brought and a greater price than all my rare pieces put together ever brought me."

Danny looked surprised and said, "Why, grandfather, do you really mean you put the flaw in the vase on purpose? Please tell me why."

"Because I love you, Danny."

"Because you love me? Why, grandfather, I can't see why that would have anything to do with your love for me."

"Since your earliest childhood you have been taught about God and his love, but I wanted you to learn a lesson that you could never be able to forget, and I thought you would have that lesson impressed upon your mind more deeply in this way than in any other.

"God is the Great Potter. We are as clay in his mighty hands. You have seen how clay can be used and shaped into any shape, ugly or beautiful, and you know that if a vessel is to be beautiful there must not be a flaw in it. And there will be flaws in it unless the potter has his way with it and the clay yields itself to his hands.

"God wants all of his vessels to be beautiful. He sent his Son into the world to show people just how beautiful he wanted them to be, and to tell us that we must yield ourselves to him and let him shape our lives into the beautiful forms he wishes them to be. He does not want any flaws in our characters. Flaws in character mar their beauty just as much as that flaw mars the beauty of that vase."

Danny looked at the beautiful vase with the flaw, and his bright, sunny face was the most thoughtful his grandfather had ever seen it. Then he said: "Grandfather, I think you have the price you wish for the vase. I do not want any flaws in my character. I am going to always let God keep the flaws out so it will be beautiful, for he is a great potter and he can do it, can't he? Grandfather, sing that pretty song you are always singing when you make your most beautiful vessels. I have wondered if that song helped you to make them so beautiful."

"Yes, son, I can make my vessels prettier and do everything better when I am thinking of the Great Potter and letting him have his way in my heart and life."

The potter's face shone as he lifted his deep, rich voice and reverently sang—

"Have thine own way, Lord,
Have thine own way;
Hold o'er my being
Absolute sway.

"Mould me and shape me
After thy will,
While I am waiting,
Yielding and still."

MOLLY'S PLAN.

"When I get big I'm going to be a famous general," said Ted, marching up and down the room in his little soldier suit. "I'll go to war, and help anybody that is in trouble."

"And I'll be a nurse and take care of the wounded soldiers," said Dora, pinning a piece of flannel on her arm to look like the cross worn by a nurse she had seen a few days before.

"I'll be a great doctor and help the sick soldiers, too," said Herbert. "I guess that's about as nice as winning battles. Dr. Graves wears a sword, too."

"Children," called mamma from the kitchen, "which one of you will run to the grocery for butter for my cake?"

"You go, Molly, said Ted and Dora together. "You don't mind doing errands."

So the little girl ran off with her basket, and the talk in the sitting room went back to what the children would be when they grew up. It was a cold, windy day, and they all had to play indoors; so Herbert and Addie had come over to visit their cousins and have a good time together.

Just the week before the children had seen a great parade of soldiers, so their minds were taken up with the swords and the uniforms and gold braid.

"Mamma, which one has the best plan?" asked Ted when the cake was finished and they all sat together in the sitting room. "Addie wants to be a great singer and all the rest of us but Molly are going to war to help people, Molly says she is going to stay at home and help you always, so tell us which has the best plan."

There was a queer, little light in Mrs. Kile's eyes as she took the baby on her knee and said, "I think I'll let you decide which is best. While I was baking cake I noticed that the Red Cross nurse was too busy to untangle baby's foot when he caught it in the rug, and the famous general never saw the puppy upset him in his rough play. You know this general said he would help any one in trouble when he grew up, so the baby called loudly for aid. The general marched right past without ever noticing him and the doctor stepped on his fingers as the army retreated. After that the famous singer was too busy to sing 'Rock-a-by' for the baby and he had a hard time generally."

"You left out Molly," said Dora when her mother paused a few moments. "You didn't say anything about her."

"I thought you all knew what Molly did," said Mrs. Kile. "She picked up the poor baby and put medicine on his bruised fingers, she ran some errands and then had time to sing 'Rock-a-by' for this little man. You see, she is working at her plan right now instead of waiting till she gets big."

"Molly's plan is the best!" cried all the children together. "We'll try to begin now, too."—Selected.

DIRECTIONS.

All checks and money orders should be made payable to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Communications pertaining to subscriptions and other business matters should be addressed to the Manager, or to the New Orleans Christian Advocate. The Printed Label on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after four weeks, notify us, and we will make it right.

Communications intended for the Editor should be directed to him at 512 Camp Street. Correspondents will observe the following rules: 1. Write on only one side of the paper. 2. If you have a typewriter, by all means use it; otherwise use a good quality of black ink. 3. Leave a space of at least two inches at the top of the first page; leave a margin of at least one inch on the left-hand side of the page; do not crowd the words and the lines together. 4. Take special pains to write proper names correctly and legibly. 5. Use letter paper if you can get it—not note paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

RAMBLES AROUND ATLANTA.

An Afternoon With Bobby Jones.

is one of the most brilliant law students they have ever known. As we watched this master of the "ancient and honorable game" play, we noticed that his style differed in several particulars from our own. We refrained, however, from calling his attention to his weak points. We have it in mind, with Dr. Durham as a partner, to challenge him to a match for the championship of the world. (Lest some unsophisticated reader fail to catch the humor of the foregoing statement, we adopt Artemus Ward's device and label it "goak"—joke.)

"Old" Emory.

We could never have felt quite satisfied if we had failed to visit Oxford, Ga., where the famous "old" Emory was located. It is a 36-mile drive from the "new" Emory, but the road is fine and the trip is easily made in an afternoon. It does seem a pity that a magnificent plant, worth probably half a million dollars, headed for generations by famous men and the producer of scores of other famous men, who have blessed the world, should have to be forsaken. But the demands of changing times and conditions are inexorable, and out of the great "old" Emory has come a greater "new" Emory. A preparatory school is maintained at Oxford; and it is not too much to hope that ultimately there may be developed there a great junior college, the need of which type of school is becoming increasingly evident in the development of a properly correlated educational system.

Of course we visited the old cemetery at Oxford and stood reverently by the graves of Bishop James O. Andrew, Bishop A. G. Haygood, and of a score of others whose names are writ large in the history of men as well as in the annals of the skies. A notable company will ascend from that sacred plot when the trumpet of the resurrection is blown.

A Garden of Dahlias.

There are flowers—and flowers—and flowers; but President Harvey W. Cox, of Emory University, has a garden of dahlias that is just about the finest thing we have ever seen in the way of a floral display. He knows how to make these flowers grow, and he loves to make them grow. He spends two hours a day working with them—from 5 to 7 in the morning. It is really an arresting thought that while some men are sleeping their lives away, other men are making beautiful flowers grow.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. L. J. Miller did the preaching in a recent meeting at Topisaw.

Rev. J. L. Decell was the preacher at the Palmer Creek camp meeting, recently held.

Miss Elizabeth Williams, daughter of Rev. John L. Williams, will attend Mansfield College, Mansfield, La., the coming session.

Dr. Mark Terrell, evangelist, owing to a slight change in his engagements, has an open date for a meeting, beginning Sept. 4.

Rev. F. B. Hill, our pastor at Merryville, La., some time since received a painful fall, which caused him trouble for quite a while.

Rev. J. A. McCormack, of Franklin, La., has recently assisted in a revival meeting at one of the points on the Kentwood charge, Louisiana Conference.

Rev. J. H. Foreman assisted Rev. T. B. Winstead, on the Harperville charge, in a good meeting at Hopewell church, and Rev. L. J. Miller at Harperville.

We regret to learn that Rev. J. D. Fomby, our pastor at Barham, was recently in the Mansfield Hospital with blood poisoning. We trust that he is now recovered.

The presiding elders of the Louisiana Conference are meeting in Alexandria, La., to-day to take up the distribution of money for flood relief and other important matters.

Rev. S. J. Davies, writer of "Safety Signals," which appear regularly in our pages to the pleasure of our readers, writes that he is "camping" for a while at Bella Vista, Ark.

Rev. John L. Williams, of Louisiana Child and Home Finding Society, and Dr. H. G. Hawkins, President of Whitworth College, were callers at the Advocate office on last Monday morning.

Rev. A. K. McLellan, Sunday School Extension Secretary, will be in a Cokesbury School, Sept. 4-8, at St. Maurice, on the Campti charge, if the plan of the pastor, Rev. P. O. Lowrey, materializes.

A recent copy of the Methodist Visitor, edited by Rev. L. E. Crooks, our pastor at Standard, La., shows great activity in the church at that point. The church at Standard is undergoing extensive repairs and redecorating at the present time.

We appreciate the receipt of an announcement by Mrs. W. H. Huntley of the marriage of her daughter, Josie Warrene, to Mr. Audie Franklin Fugitt, on Thursday, Aug. 11, 1927, at Cobden, Ala. These happy young people will live at Hattiesburg, Miss.

In sending in the money for ten subscriptions to the Advocate, Rev. Leon I. McCain, of Minden, La., writes as follows: "I preached for Brother E. L. Cargill at Pleasant Valley church last night (Aug. 6). With his approval I presented the Advocate cause and secured eight new subscriptions from his leading people. You will hear from Brother Cargill soon." We are very grateful to Brother McCain for his continued loyalty and helpfulness to the Advocate.

Rev. J. A. Wells and Rev. W. T. Griffin did the preaching at the Shiloh camp meeting. Mr. L. E. Havens led the singing. The attendance was good and the meeting pronounced the best for years. The meeting was held in a new tabernacle and twenty-nine "tents" were occupied.

Rev. J. G. Snelling, Louisiana Conference Secretary of Missions, preached morning and evening on last Sunday at First Methodist Church, of this city. The pastor, Rev. J. B. Peters, is away on vacation, devoting a part of his time to attendance upon the School of Evangelism at Junaluska.

We regret to report that Rev. L. W. Cain, pastor of Parker Memorial Church, of this city, has been called to Texas on account of the death of a half brother. We sympathize with Brother Cain. In his absence on last Sunday, Rev. A. M. Serex preached at the morning hour and Rev. Leon Picone in the evening.

The assistant appreciates the receipt of an announcement of the birth of a son to Rev. and Mrs. T. F. King, of Berwick, La. Brother King is pastor of the Patterson charge, where he has done a good work through almost a quadrennium. Mrs. King has been one of the finest workers in the church at Berwick. May God bless the child.

Rev. G. D. Purcell, pastor at Baker, La., did the preaching in a recent meeting at Davis' Springs, on the Campti charge. Brother Purcell was the pastor on the charge 28 years ago and organized the Methodist church at Campti. Miss Lillian Gallion, of Natchitoches, La., a recent graduate of Asbury College, Ky., was the young people's and children's worker during this meeting.

The Methodist Visitor, published by Rev. H. D. Suydam, pastor at Arcola, Miss., is one of the best papers of this kind which we have seen—an eight-page paper devoted to the interests of the charge, and carrying, in addition to news items, a number of helpful articles. From the August number we learn that progress is being made in the effort to repair and repaint the churches at Murphy and Lock.

The Pacific Methodist of Aug. 4 says: "Bishop Sam R. Hay has been busy since coming to the coast, preaching and inspecting the work and attending to his multifarious duties." The many admirers of Bishop Hay, made during his recent presidency of the Louisiana Conference, will not be surprised at the report of his activity in his field. He is accustomed to keep in close touch with affairs in his episcopal district.

Beginning on June 19 and running through July 3, Rev. L. Richard Nease, our pastor at Gueydan, La., was assisted in a good meeting by Rev. W. E. Thomas, general evangelist. Mr. Priestly Miller led the singing. Brother Nease writes that Brother Thomas is the pastor's friend, and that his preaching is forceful and sane. Nineteen were received into the church, sixteen upon profession of faith, as a result of this meeting.

A sub-district Sunday school rally for the Minden District of the Louisiana Conference will be held at Pine Grove church on Aug. 24. Dr. F. C. Wren, District Secretary, presiding. Rev. K. W. Dodson, presiding elder, will conduct the devotional service and will also serve as toastmaster at dinner. Addresses will be delivered by Mrs. R. E. Smith, on "Young People;" by Rev. H. E. Pfost, on "Missions in the Sunday School," by Rev. A. K. McLellan, on "Special Days That a Small Sunday School Should Observe," and by Professor Raulins, on "Worship in the Sunday School." At the Departmental Hour the District Superintendents will be in charge as follows: Elementary, Mrs. F. C. Wren; Young People, Rev. Jimmie Harris; Adults, Mrs. Purcell, and Missions, Rev. H. E. Pfost.

The Old Men's Home of Jackson, Miss., has taken in forty-six men in twenty months, and more are to come. The expenses of the home are growing all the while, and there is an indebtedness of $8,000 due soon. Rev. W. G. Francis, Superintendent, asks that the Sunday schools of all denominations be kind enough to give one Sunday between now and the second Sunday in October to the interests of the Old Men's Home at Jackson.

We recently carried an item concerning the fine sons of Rev. H. F. Tolle, formerly pastor for some years of Capitol Street Church, Jackson, and now at First Church, Tampa. The two of the sons, who have entered the ministry, preached on a recent Sunday in their father's church, Corning F. Tolle at the morning service, and Joe Tolle at the evening service. A Tampa paper bore the pictures of these young men and carried a good story concerning their initial effort.

On Aug. 23 Bishop Warren A. Candler will be 70 years of age, but time has left so little mark upon him that his ceaseless activity, his mental alertness and his abundant labors for the church would rather indicate a man of 40 or 50. We hazard the prophecy that for many, many years to come the church will be safe in the leadership of this great man in our Methodism. On the evening of Aug. 23, the Druids Hill Methodist Church, of Atlanta, Ga., will give a reception in the Bishop's honor.

A correspondent from Auburn, Miss., sends us the following: "Revival services were recently held at Adams church, Auburn, Miss., with Rev. Charles A. Schultz, of Lumberton, doing the preaching. We feel that we have never had a more gracious series of services, and that great good has been done. We cannot commend Brother Schultz too highly for his untiring efforts, and as a community we have learned to love and admire him. That God may richly bless his future service, also those of our beloved pastor, Brother F. J. Jones, is our prayer."

The entire morning service at St. Paul's Church, San Bernardino, Calif., on July 24, was given to the celebration of the ninety-second birthday of Mrs. John D. Buie. She was present and enjoyed the old-time camp meeting hymns and fervent "Amens." The pastor, Rev. A. Inman Townsley, read an original poem on the long and useful life of "Grandma" Buie, and she was presented a cake made by Mrs. Townsley. The cake was topped with ninety-two candles. Brother Townsley formerly served charges in New Orleans, and Mrs. Townsley is a native of this city, and was brought up in Second Church.

Mr. Robert J. O'Neal, lawyer of De Ridder, La., last week attended the Executive Committee meeting of the Louisiana Conference Board of Church Extension in this city. He and Rev. B. H. Andrews, our pastor at Amite, La., also in attendance upon the Church Extension meeting, called at the Advocate office. Since his return home, Brother O'Neal has sent in the money for nine subscriptions to the Advocate, secured by the pastor at De Ridder, Rev. H. W. Ledbetter. Six others have indicated their desire to get the Advocate, and Brother O'Neal writes that they hope to bring the total to twenty-five. Good!

Last Sunday Rev. E. C. Gunn, pastor of Carrollton Avenue Church, this city, who has been assisting in the new work at Reserve, La., organized a church at that point, and steps will be immediately taken to purchase a desirable site in the "model town" of the Godchaux Sugars, Inc., and fronting on the Jefferson Highway, and to begin at once the erection of a $5,000 chapel. Mr. John P. Greven, manager of the refinery, is a leader in the enterprise, and will be one of the trustees of the church. Mrs. Greven is the architect of the chapel building, which will be of pleasing Spanish mission style, stucco finish, and appropriate to this old section of the country. When finished this will be the only Southern Methodist church on the Mississippi between New Orleans and Baton Rouge.

Beginning on the first Sunday in August, Rev. P. O. Lowrey, pastor, conducted a meeting at St. Maurice., La., on the Campti charge. He was assisted by Rev. S. L. Riggs, of Cedar Grove, La. Brother Lowrey has announced meetings for other points on the charge—at Clarence beginning the third Sunday in August, and at Campti the first Sunday in September. In these two meetings Brother Lowrey will have, as an assistant in song and work among children and young people, Brother Tom Chalker, of Enterprise, Ala., a recent B.D. graduate of Yale University and one of the paid singers in the Yale Glee Club. His father and Brother Lowrey were college mates. At Campti Rev. W. C. Childress, of Mansfield, La., will do the preaching, and the meeting will be held in the tabernacle, use of which the Baptist people have kindly tendered.

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

This is written at Bella Vista, Ark. Mrs. Davies and two daughters, Misses Jane and Mary, with me thrown in, are out for an outing. After trying Oklahoma, Colorado and the Biloxi coast for the three preceding summers, we decided on the Ozarks for our present vacation. Our hired house is perched on a mountain slope and faces the wide extended golf links and the tiny lake. The scenery—mountains, streams, valleys and magnificent stretches of forest lands, varied with vineyards and orchards— is charming. It is cool, damp and refreshing up here. The noted Ozark mist tempers the too ardent rays of the sun, and one needs light covering at night. Folks are first folks about here as usual. They call it "the land of a thousand smiles." Well, they smile and frown, rent, buy and sell with just about as keen regard for the main chance as in other places, maybe a bit more. Legal tender is tended and accepted just as quickly as anywhere in this land, where the average citizen, man or woman, seems abundantly able to take care of his own, with an eye on the other fellow's own. I have not noticed any special marks of piety among the crowd who frequent the summer resorts. Automobiles crowd the roads, the golfers are busy on Sunday just as they are in Louisiana on this day. It is of little practical use to moralize or legislate on keeping the Sabbath; the remedy lies within, not without. The ideal Sabbath is not one of so-called Puritanical rigidity, nor of wild, loose abandon of its sanctity, but is one which the Lord of the Sabbath has given us, removed alike from Pharisaical legalism and from a total disregard of its religious privileges.

Strange indeed it is, that sane, sensible people exhaust themselves with dissipations on the Sabbath day and call these rest-destroying, nerve-wasting activities pleasure. "Stop, look, listen," is more than a road sign. It hangs on either side of life's highway. Do you read?

As the sun rose above the crest of the mountain range facing the cottage wherein we presently abide, and the incense of morning's breath spread its offering of light and beauty over valley and field, I opened my Bible and read again that wonderful letter to the church at Ephesus. Colinage said the most sublime ever written. Paul—yes, I believe he wrote it—was undoubtedly sitting in a heavenly place when he wrote about them. Oh, these evangels of the New Testament! How fully, how faithfully, how truly did they portray the blessed Christ. Matthew gives us the Christ of the kingdom of power; Moses, the active, living, moving Christ; Luke, the human, universal, all-embracing Christ; John, the Christ of light, life and love. Paul enthrones him, ever blessed, crowned with glory, honor and majesty, high above all, before whom every knee shall bow of things in heaven and earth.

Our faith may grow weak and stagger if only fixed on Jesus as a moralist or a mere teacher, but must move forward with the swing and stride of a conqueror when its rapt vision is centered on the Son of God as the inspired apostle presents him to the Ephesian church. The imperial sweep and range of regal power as given to the believing saints for all time is a sufficient answer to those who would doubt his deity. And only such an One can stem the fierce tide of wickedness which has swept the world since this epistle was written, and is still sweeping it. The Christ of the ages is the Savior of men to-day as he was when his ambassador penned these glowing words from the Roman dungeon. And the world's need is possibly as dire to-day as then, for millions know him not, and other millions deride him. To win the world for him and to him is the task allotted the church. Then the steadfast, clear-visioned, never doubting but that all dominion and all majesty, all power dwell in him. He shall be victor in the end.

LUCY COLLIER WHYTE was the daughter of Prof. W. J. Whyte and Josephine Whyte. She was born in Mobile, Ala., April 13, 1857. She was educated at Barton Academy, Mobile, Ala., where her father for many years was professor of Greek and French. On Dec. 28, 1883, she was married to W. J. Evans, of Harrison County, Miss. To this union were born two daughters, Mrs. E. J. Carlin, of Hattiesburg, Miss., and Miss Maud J. Evans, of Piave. On the 16th day of August, 1926, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Carlin, the beautiful, well spent life of Sister Evans came to its earthly close, and she passed to the home of the just and the pure, in the house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. Her whole life had moved in that direction, and her spiritual gravity naturally carried her home to the fellowship of the saints in light. Her faith in God never wavered. With her it was an established fact. She believed every word of the Bible. Back in the rosy morning of her life, when her heart was flushed and radiant with the gentle graces that gave form and charm to her character, she gave her heart to God at the age of 13 years, and followed her devout and exemplary parents into the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. She loved her church, and in its communion her convictions and sympathies found congenial companionship. From the doctrines and discipline of her church she never swerved. She maintained the validity and integrity of her memerbership with unblemished fidelity. She loved the ministers of the church, and they were ever preferred visitors in her home. Her two daughters were trained in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, and their beautiful Christian lives are now attesting a mother's discipline and afford practical expressions of her example. They "Arise up and call her blessed." "Her husband praiseth her." Services were conducted in the Carlin home in Hattiesburg by Rev. Robert Selby, presiding elder; Rev. A. J. Davis, and Rev. Joseph A. Smith. She was buried at Bond, Miss., from her home church, where the funeral services were conducted by Rev. G. E. Allan, her pastor; Rev. W. J. Ferguson, Rev. H. R. McKee, and Rev. R. N. Davis, the last mentioned a devout friend and former pastor of the Baptist church of Bond. The floral decorations and offerings at the church and grave attested the love and esteem of her many friends from Bond, and distant towns and communities. It was very fitting to have had her funeral at her home church, which had for twenty-seven years been her pride, and had known the blessings of her presence, and felt the benefit of her prayers, her influence, her life, her work in the Sunday school, prayer meeting and Missionary Society, and all the activities of the church. It is impossible to think of the Methodist church in Bond without thinking of Sister Evans, and her love for and loyalty to it. It was my blessed privilege to be the guest in the Evans' home during a twelve days' revival in Bond six months before Sister Evans got her promotion. I can never forget her solicitude for my comfort and with what gentle grace and cultivated dignity she presided in her home. There she loved and there she was loved. She was a devoted and affectionate wife, a loving and self-sacrificing mother, a true sister and a saint of God. She is survived by her noble husband, Judge W. J. Evans; two daughters, above mentioned; two brothers, H. E. Whyte, of D'Lo, Miss., and O. E. Whyte, of Newton, Miss.; and one sister, Mrs. L. B. Hester, of Jackson, Miss., and a devoted sister-in-law, Mrs. E. Lou Whyte, who has been a member of the Evans' household since her return as a missionary to Mexico, years ago. Never two sisters loved each other more truly than did Sisters Evans and Whyte. To those who suffer the unspeakable loss of such a loved one it ought to soften the sharpness of their agony to think of her beautiful, useful and faithful life, and that she is now free from all suffering and pain, and is forever happy "over there," in hallowed peace, feeding upon the fruit of the tree of life in the paradise of God. "He that believeth in me though he were dead yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." May all who mourn her death meet her in the land of eternal rest.

DAN E. KELLY.

On the 28th of June, 1927, the death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Mills, and took their child, a little son, from earth to heaven.

"There fell upon the house a sudden gloom,
A shadow on those features fair and thin;
And, softly from that hushed and darkened room,
Two angels issued, when but one went in."

This little child, GILBERT REID, was just a little better than three years of age, being born April 12, 1924. It was but a short while from the time he was first taken ill, till the little body succumbed to the fatal disease, and heaven claimed as an angel one whose life here on earth shone as a star of the first magnitude in the firmament of childhood. Left behind to mourn their loss through the passing away of this child are: a tender father and a loving mother; two brothers, Johnny and Vernun; six sisters, Marie, Ruby, Lillie, Nannie, Jimmie Lee, and Merle. It is said that God gives children to be a blessing to the lives of the parents, and a blessing to the life of every member of the family, and that whatever touches the life of any member of the family touches the life of the entire home. Indeed, has this truth been realized. Gilbert was a beautiful child. He was strong, and because of his strength he fought mightily against death. The parents stood by him day and night. They ministered to his every need. The physicians labored with skill. The children, with tear-dimmed eyes, anxiously waited, the church was called to prayer; but the Lord had need of a splendid cutting for his vineyard, or a little bud to bloom in his garden.

"O, not in cruelty, not in wrath,
The Reaper came that day;
'Twas an angel visited the green earth,
And took the flower away."

Dear parents, tender children, little Gilbert cannot come to you, but you can go to him. You have been traveling along the road of life together. Gilbert has turned a bend in the road. You will see him when you go his way and travel farther on toward the goal of life. "A little child shall lead them." May the blessings of our Heavenly Father rest upon you, and may God, who knows the human heart, pour into your souls the balm of his comfort.

Life, say not good-bye! Give little warning;
But in some brighter clime, bid me good morning!

W. I. WHITE, Pastor.
Kossuth, Miss.

MRS. NELLIE OMA ROGERS (nee Watts) was born in Claiborne Parish, Tulip, near Athens, La., June 4, 1870. She departed this life Dec. 28, 1926. She was the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Josiah Watts. In early childhood she moved with the family to Bienville Parish, Saline, La., where she had resided until death. She was married at the family home on Nov. 26, 1889, to James H. Rogers, the ceremony being conducted by her pastor, Rev. P. Burkett. She is survived by her husband, one daughter, four sons, three sisters and one brother, and a host of relatives and friends, to mourn her passing. She united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, when a child, and had been a faithful member, a true and devout Christian, always ready and willing to assist in any way she could to help make life brighter for those about her. She was a loving, devoted wife, a kind, untiring mother, and a friend to all. Though our hearts have been made sad and our home lonely, we look forward to the time when we shall meet her in our eternal home. She was laid to rest in Mill Creek cemetery by her pastor, Rev. E. W. Day.

Her son-in-law,
L. P. MORELAND.

On July 23 the death angel visited the home of Brother and Sister M. Falkner and claimed little MARY BONNIE as one that was due in heaven, only letting her stay with her father and mother and one little brother and two sisters about two or three years. Oh, how short the time with father and mother! Little Mary was only sick a short time. So shocked was the writer when early Saturday morning, July 23, the news came to me to come to Phoenix church to conduct the funeral service of little Mary Falkner. But we can only look back when all day little Mary's busy feet had pattered to and fro, and all the day her little hands had been in mischief so, and oft mother's patience had been tried, but her tender, loving care had kept her through each day from harm and safe from every snare. But when little Mary's cheeks upon the pillow pressed she would give a kiss and say, "Good night, I love you, dear mama, you have been so kind today." And in these words would little Mary speak, "Good night, I love you, too, mamma." Your baby's eyelids are closed, and tired feet and restless hands enjoy the sweet repose. The trouble and the weariness to mother indeed seemed light, since love had thus her efforts crowned to guide her steps aright, and as mother picked the playthings up and put them all away I hear little Mary say, "Good-bye, mother, I meet you again some day." So weep not, father, mother, brother and sisters, as those who have no hope, but lift your eyes off the lifeless form of little Mary and behold her in the bosom of Jesus, standing in the beautiful gates, saying to a sad-hearted father and mother and brother and sisters: "Hurry and come and join me with the Redeemed host of heaven."

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Echoes From Executive Committee Meeting.

The Executive Committee of the Woman's Missionary Conference met in the Woman's Bible Class room of Galloway Memorial Church, Jackson, Miss., Saturday, July 1, Mrs. S. W. Alford, President, presiding. The following members were present: President, Vice President, Corresponding Secretary, Recording Secretary, Treasurer, Superintendent of Children's Work, Superintendent of Social Service, Superintendent of Supplies, and the Secretaries of the Hattiesburg, Jackson, Newton and Vicksburg Districts.

Mrs. Alford conducted devotionals. She read Acts 2:5-11, the thought she brought to us being the "Power of Prayer." To accomplish the task of Christian women, the task that God has assigned to us, let each pray that we may have the vision that God alone can give. As leaders of the Conference, we should be women of prayer, (1) for a world vision, (2) for a missionary church, (3) for right attitudes toward our fellowmen, (4) that the young people might be won for Christ, (5) that every underprivileged life be given an opportunity for Christ. The worship period was closed with a prayer from each member of the committee.

The President told of the interest of our entire body for the flooded area of the Conference, and asked that members of the Executive Committee assure the auxiliaries in this district of our interest and willingness to help them.

In reporting, the Treasurer urged the women to make up the deficit on the pledge that will surely arise from the flood situation.

The Superintendent of Social Service told of the growth in her department. She stated that she had received letters of appreciation from the Council Superintendent of Social Service. She urged more interest in Social Service work, and recommended that each auxiliary study the two books authorized by the Council, "Know Your Courts," by Elizabeth Tilton, and "We The People and Our Constitution," Mary Clark Barnes—books on which we would get credit in study course.

The new Superintendent of Children's Work, Mrs. Stanley Wilson, stated that there was a growing interest in the correlation of the Junior Epworth Leagues and Junior Missionary Societies. She told of her visit to the Epworth League Assembly and of her plans to work with the Conference Junior League Superintendent. She urged that District Secretaries cultivate League District Secretaries. In speaking of the difficulties of the flooded area, she suggested that some other auxiliaries adopt each one of these auxiliaries for this year.

The Secretaries of Hattiesburg, Jackson and Newton Districts reported work moving forward, special interest in zone meetings, rural work and Young People and Children's Departments. Each reported a good district meeting and each claimed 3 new auxiliaries.

Vicksburg district, though the center of flood distress, is distinctive in that it has six Gibson members and reported six new auxiliaries. Secretaries from Brookhaven, Meridian, and Seashore Districts were absent.

The Committee discussed Conference plans for the Jubilee. The Executive Committee will form the Conference Jubilee Committee, the District Secretaries with the zone leaders the District Jubilee Committee, and the Executive Committee of the Auxiliary the Auxiliary Jubilee Committee. The President stated that we must have a spiritual Cultivation Leader and a Historian for the Jubilee work. Mrs. B. F. Lewis was elected Historian at the Annual Meeting in Brookhaven. Mrs. A. F. Watkins was unanimously elected to fill the office of Conference Spiritual Cultivation Leader. She pledged herself to the big work entrusted to her and urged the District Secretaries to send the names of Auxiliary Vice Presidents as soon as possible so that preparation for the Jubilee can begin at once.

Mrs. Alford stated that she had received a letter from the President of the Louisiana Conference asking that Mississippi Conference take over the work of assuming responsibility for the Woman's Page in the New Orleans Christian Advocate. A motion was made and carried that we assume this work. Mrs. J. E. Brown, of Gloster, was elected to serve in this office.

A motion was gladly carried that we send our Conference President, Mrs. L. W. Alford, to the School of Missions.

The President stated that the three representatives from our Conference, Janet Head, Helen Sells and Eurania Pyron, who have been in training at Scarritt College, have been accepted by the Candidate Committee. Rosa McNeil, who was consecrated at last session of Council, will sail for Africa in September. We have been asked by Headquarters to assume the expenses of a scholarship at Scarritt College for Ethel Clements, daughter of one of our missionaries at Havana, Cuba. A motion was made and carried that this scholarship be assumed by our Conference.

It was moved and seconded that each District be responsible for $50 as a love gift to Miss Rosa McNeil. The motion prevailed.

The meeting was closed with prayer by Mrs. L. W. Alford.

MRS. L. W. ALFORD,
President.

MARY V. WEEMS,
Recording Secretary.

NOT EQUIPMENT BUT THE MAN MAKES THE DIFFERENCE.

Every great school, college or university has been built around the personality of some one man. The educated men of America can, as a rule, recall some personality in early youth who largely shaped their destinies. The dominating personality of Robert K. Morgan makes him such a man. He unmistakably impresses his personality on his students. His influence brings out the noblest, best traits in a boy. His instructors are so selected that this one idea may prevail, viz—to develop personality in a boy of the highest type.

The ideals of Morgan school are the highest, to train boys for useful citizens in the church and state, and to develop mind, soul and body alike.

Write to Mr. L. I. Mills, Sec., Morgan School, Petersburg, Tenn., who will send you a catalog and tell you what Morgan School can do for your boy.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

More and more the local school will take an interest in training the officers and teachers for more efficient work. Unless the pastor and the superintendent take courses of study it will be difficult to lead all the teachers in real study. The secret of getting a class to study is for the teacher to set the example; the secret of leading the teachers to study is for the pastor and superintendent to lead the way. It is almost impossible to succeed in getting others to do the thing you are not willing to do. Leaders must lead, not complain and exhort.

When the superintendent is elected to that important post of leadership, the pastor ought to put into the hands of the superintendent one or more of the many books that will guide him in his work. Then the superintendent will be prepared, in a measure, to stimulate the teachers in their study; the result will be that the teachers will be prepared to lead the members of the class into serious study of the Bible. The leader who has been appointed to take charge of the work of Leadership Training as outlined in Point VII of the Program of Work will be able to do a great piece of work. The heart of it all is to have Jesus Christ enthroned in every life and thus build the kingdom of God. To be sure, this is a slow, difficult process, but it is an effective method of making strong Christian character.

Our training work heads up in the two schools, one at Lake Junaluska and the other at Mount Sequoyah. This year a number from Mississippi are attending the school at Lake Junaluska. It has been my privilege to attend this school since its organization. The attendance this year is more than 250. This is the best session I have ever attended. The seriousness of the students, the hard work they are doing in class and in committee meetings is sure to produce good results for the church at large, the spiritual fervor of the entire group is at high tide. We have the experience of the kingdom on earth as it is in heaven. The majority of the men and women come in their cars. It is possible for a larger number to attend this school than in the past, as travel is so much cheaper by automobile. Would that we had not less than fifty of our leaders attending this great school of the prophets. Later I shall give the names of those from North Mississippi who are attending the school.

The teachers tell me they cannot undertake the observance of Children's Week until their respective pastors indicate their desire to do this piece of work. The results of the observance of the week justify all the effort expended. Give it a fair trial and see for yourself. This will take the place of Rally Day. It gives an opportunity to take a "forward step" in the work of building the kingdom.

The school at Shaw is preparing to do the best work in its history. The superintendent, Mr. C. E. Harrison, is deeply interested in the progress of his school.

Relative to the observance of Children's Week, Rev. E. C. Driskell, of Fulton, writes, "We want to do everything that will help our people."

Varicose Veins

Reduced or Money Back

Simple Home Treatment That Is Giving Amazing Results.

The world progresses. To-day ailments that took weeks to cure can now be ended in a few days. If you have varicose veins or bunches you can start to-day to bring them back to normal size, and if you are wise you will do so.

Just get an original bottle of Moone's Emerald Oil at any dispensing pharmacist and apply it night and morning as directed to the enlarged veins. It is very powerful and penetrating, and only a little is required.

After a few days' treatment the veins will begin to grow smaller and by regular use will soon reduce to normal.

People who want to reduce varicose veins, or get rid of running sores and ulcers, should not hesitate to get a bottle at once. It is so powerful that a small bottle lasts a long time. Any pharmacy can supply you.

MRS. W. E. COURTS.

MR. W. E. COURTS, of Cary, Miss., was born on May 20, 1854, in Holmes County, Miss., near Old Richland, and was the oldest son of Mr. and Mrs. H. T. Courts. On Dec. 18, 1873, he was married to Miss Carrie Fathree. Both he and his wife became members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in early life, and were devoted members of the Cary church at the time of his death, which occurred March 31, 1927. He had been a resident of Sharkey County for many years, and had a part in the development of this rich Delta section from a jungle into one of the greatest agricultural sections of Mississippi. He loved his country and was genuinely proud of her accomplishments. He was a prosperous planter and was surrounded with the comforts and the conveniences of modern plantation life. He was a well informed man and was interesting and entertaining in his conversation. One of his neighbors made the statement to the writer a few days before his death that Mr. Courts was a model man and a true gentleman. It had been the writer's privilege to know him but a short time, and only as a sick and suffering man, but our acquaintance soon grew into a friendship and a fellowship that it has rarely been his pleasure to enjoy. At first he talked much of his worldly plans, but when it became more evident that he was suffering from an incurable malady, his mind suddenly turned to things heavenly and eternal. And while he never lost interest in his business affairs, his heart was fixed on his preparation for the heavenly. I think we might truthfully say that his soul "quit" this world some time before his real departure. He had been a Christian for many years, and he knew how to make ready for his going away. His courtesy and devotion to his noble and charming companion was beautiful. Their wedlock had not been blessed with children, and this disappointment seemed to sweeten and tender their relationship to each other. She misses him now, and sorrows for him, but with the hope of a true child of God. He told us a short time before he left that he was all right, that God was with him and that his loved ones were waiting for him at the beautiful gate. We carried his body to Vicksburg for burial, and there the funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. G. H. Thompson, pastor of Crawford Street Methodist Church. Afterward we laid his body to rest in the beautiful cemetery on the hills of Vicksburg. The floral offerings were many and lovely, and were very comforting to the sorrowing loved ones. We shall try to meet him.

His pastor and friend,

J. E. WILLIAMS.

This is the most important conference of the year and I trust every official will be present. As this is the last round of the quadrennium it will perhaps be the last opportunity of the elder to get acquainted with some of the officials. Let pastors be ready to nominate the new officials and to answer all disciplinary questions. All together for a great wind-up.

Faithfully,

HATTIESBURG DISTRICT EPWORTH LEAGUES MEET AT McLAIN FOR BIG PICNIC.

On Friday, July 29, a crowd of Hattiesburg District Epworth Leaguers met at McLain at 3 o'clock for a picnic and a "get together" meeting. Rev. J. B. Cain issued the invitations. The Leagues represented were: McLain 13, Leaf 6, New Augusta 15; Hattiesburg 11, Lucedale 36, Petal 2. This made a total of eighty-three persons present.

After a few minutes of meeting old friends and making new ones, and a snappy mixing game, the Leaguers gathered in the school auditorium for a short program. Brother Linton led the singing of a few old favorites. Frances and Rosena Harrell, of Hattiesburg, sang as a duet, "Confidence." Rev. J. B. Cain, as master of ceremonies, introduced Miss Berta Nall, of Petal, Conference Hi League Superintendent, who made a splendid talk, stressing the importance of work with the boys and girls of Hi League age, and urging the attendance at the Hi League camp, to be held at Camp Dantzler, near Hattiesburg, the week of Aug. 29. Other "notables" present were B. F. Harrell, Secretary of Hattiesburg District; J. H. Weems, Conference President, and J. B. Cain, member of the Conference Epworth League Board. Each responded to an introduction with a brief, peppy talk. Mr. Weems suggested that a Union of the Leagues of this section be organized. It is to be hoped that plans for this organization may be completed soon.

After the adjournment with the League benediction, more games were enjoyed on the school lawn. Every one entered into the exciting game of handkerchief snatch, the Murphys defeating the Finnegans by a score of 7 to 6. A relay, with four teams competing, was quite interesting. Letters were passed down the line and back again, when all together it was discovered that they spelled "winner." After playing off the tie, the "1's" defeated the "3's" by several seconds. In an interesting game of bean bag basket ball, the Greens, with Miss Margaret Grey, of New Augusta, as captain, won by a score of 3 to 2.

Lunch was spread under the trees. With it was served delicious iced lemonade, prepared by the McLain Leaguers.

It is hoped that this successful affair is only the beginning of a series of such meetings that will bring the young people of Hattiesburg District into closer fellowship with each other through Jesus, the great Commander.

THE MISSIONARY BUDGET FOR 1927-28 OF THE GENERAL EPWORTH LEAGUE BOARD.

Believing that the missionary budget for the year 1927-28 of the General Epworth League Board will prove of interest we present it as follows:

Africa (Congo Mission, entire support)	$50,000
Paine College, maintenance fund	15,000
Arizona, work among Mexicans.	10,000
Translation, foreign fund	4,000
Field work, Epworth League in foreign lands	3,000
Epworth League Chair of Religious Music	4,000
Epworth League Chair of Missions, S. M. U.	4,000
Epworth League Chair of Missions, Emory U.	4,000
Student Pastorates, Tucson, Ariz., and Berkleys	6,000

Concerning these last three items, you will rejoice that the League is making possible the continuation of a work begun a few years ago by the Board of Missions at Dallas and Atlanta.

The above is taken from the report of the Commissioners of Mississippi Epworth League Conference at their Annual Assembly. We wish to get this before the Leaguers of this Conference so that they will be able to understand more fully the great need of the mission pledge and the need of meeting our missionary obligations. We are planning shortly to publish the mission pledges of each district.

JACKSON, MISS., GLENDALE METHODIST, MAKING CREDITABLE PROGRESS.

At the last Annual Conference there was created the fifth appointment for the city of Jackson on the Bailey Avenue car line, in the northwest section of the city, which now bears the official name of Glendale. The wisdom of our presiding elder, Rev. J. L. Decell, in recommending the appointment at this time is clearly visible with results that are very gratifying for nine months of the year. The charter membership was seventy-six, and the total membership to date is 136, with a Sunday school, average attendance of which is seventy-five; Woman's Missionary Society membership, forty-five, and Epworth League, twenty-five.

Since organization last November, through courtesy of the City Board of Education, the Galloway school auditorium has been used for Sunday school and morning worship.

A very desirable building site, 65 by 150, has been recently purchased for $1,250 on Bailey Avenue and Glendale Street, on which lot the new brick veneer church, with approximate cost of $12,000, is now under construction, and it is expected by the building committee to have same completed sufficient to enable its use for the first service Sunday morning, Sept. 4, of a two weeks' series of evangelistic services, conducted by Rev. Claude P. Jones, of Hattiesburg, one of our able Conference evangelists.

Very appropriate and impressive ceremonies, incident to the breaking of ground for the new church building, were recently conducted by Dr. H. Walter Featherstun, assisted by Dr. J. M. Sullivan, Dr. Julius Crisler, Judge Morgan Stevens and Mr. John Armstrong, who made short addresses, supplemented by several vocal selections by ten representative young ladies from our orphanage.

Last Sunday, the 7th, we were pleased to have at the 11 o'clock hour, the presence of and an inspiring message from our beloved presiding elder, Rev. J. L. Decell, in the beginning of his fourth round.

It is very probable some reader would appreciate the opportunity to invest with a cash contribution, or the approximate cost, $50, for a memorial window in memory of a departed loved one; if so, you may please communicate with the pastor, Rev. C. E. Downer, 1519 Bailey Avenue, or Mr. J. F. Biggs, chairman of the building committee, 1105 Bailey Avenue. Any amount, however, will be received with great appreciation and acknowledgment duly made, account of Glendale church building fund.

WHY WE SHAKE HANDS.

Did you ever wonder why it is that folks usually shake hands when they meet? Perhaps you know that many things we do have come down to us as customs from our early ancestors. Shaking hands is just such a custom.

In the olden days every one had to carry a sword to protect himself from robbers or enemies he might meet. He always kept his right hand on the handle of the sword in order to use it if necessary.

Of course, when he met a friend it was customary to hold out his right hand to show that it didn't hold a sword ready for attack, and the friend did likewise. They shook hands then, as a token of their trust in each other.

Of course, the custom doesn't mean that any more. Imagine grandfather or Uncle Jim holding a sword in his pocket! Men no longer need to carry such weapons, but the custom remains with us.—Selected.

CAMPTI, LA., DAILY VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL, MINDEN DISTRICT.

Just after the close of the Daily Vacation Bible School at Springhill Miss Dorothy Dale Hillard, of Scarritt College, conducted a similar school at Campti. Because of a number of cases of mumps in the town and other sickness the enrollment was not as large or the attendance as regular as it would have been under ordinary conditions. However, as the result of the co-operation on the part of the entire church and the intense interest of the pupils the school proved to be a very pleasing success. Miss Hillard was especially appreciative of the attentiveness, teachableness, splendid work and good discipline of the boys and girls of the school. One evidence of this was the fact that she was able to tell the congregation present for the graduation program that the children had required only one practice for their program, and that each article made during their handwork periods had been so well made that not one had to be left out of the exhibit.

The school was conducted in the Methodist church with a daily program from 9 to 12 a. m. The program included worship, music, Bible, missionary and health stories, health talks and demonstrations, games, memory work, and various types of handwork. An efficient young carpenter consented to give the older boys instruction in carpentry, and this work was done at the parsonage with the co-operation of the pastor and his wife. Splendid volunteer teachers were secured to assist Miss Hillard in all departments of the work. The entire school was taught the salutes and pledges for the Christian and American flags.

The worship program for each morning included an offering by the pupils and helpers. This offering was supplemented by a free-will offering by the congregation present on graduation evening, and the total offering was sent to a needy church in the flooded district. The presiding elder, Dr. Dodson, was present for the graduation program, Saturday evening, July 10, and expressed his deep interest in and appreciation of this work for his district.

Miss Hillard was granted free use of the office of the Campti Lumber Company to do her secretarial work for the school. She enjoyed the association of all those with whom it was her privilege to work and meet. She was boarded at the Lake Hotel and was invited out a number of times. A desire was expressed by the leaders of the church and many of the children that a similar school be held next summer in Campti.

On Friday afternoon, July 9, the teachers and children forgot their work for the time being and went to Lavina springs for a picnic. Most of the older boys and girls hiked to the springs. The afternoon was spent in playing new games the children had learned, in singing and in kodaking. The happy occasion was climaxed by a picnic supper.

PILOT TOWN AND PORT EADS.

My Dear Dr. Harper: I know that you and the readers of the Advocate will be glad to read this bit of news. I am just back from my semi-monthly trip to Pilot Town and Port Eads, and the Lord surely crowned my labor with his blessings at these two points.

At Port Eads, Sunday morning, the following took the vows of the church, and with the help of God, I organized a new church, to be known as the Port Eads Methodist Episcopal Church, South: H. H. Regan, J. T. William Taber, Oscar Nagel, Barney Schofield, Mrs. H. H. Regan, Mrs. Williams, Mrs. Frank Buras, Mrs. Neville, Mrs. L. Scarabin, Mr. L. Buras, Mrs. Anthony, Charles Marshall, Mrs. Louis Buras, Otto Hensche, Mrs. L. Buras.

At the Sunday school here we had fourteen children, and this new congregation in the future will be represented in all the branches of the church; a Woman's Missionary Society will be organized in the near future.

At Pilot Town, Sunday night, I had twenty-five children at the Sunday school, and a very good attendance at the service.

We need a chapel here very bad; the ground I can get for nothing. Will some one help? In this work I need Bibles, Testaments and song books; I know that some one will contribute the price for these necessities.

You are invited to come and visit this new field; your prayers are much needed.

EAGER SHOPPERS THRONG STORES

Salesgirls Dread Bargain Days

Louisa was tired. From morning until night she had been on her feet in the busy department store. No matter how she felt, she must serve her customers with a smile. Her head throbbed and her feet ached. Week after week, she felt her strength ebbing until she was in a run-down condition, not fit to work.

"My mother suggested that I try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound," she writes. "I took only three bottles and it brought me about all right." Through the Vegetable Compound, she found better health to do her work and she told the other girls about it.

That was several years ago. Louisa is now Mrs. L. G. Van Dyke of 1246 Spring St., Morrell Park, Baltimore, Md. She is the mother of three healthy, active children. She says that she found the tonic effect of the Vegetable Compound helpful to her during this critical period.

Every working girl knows that to do her work properly and easily she must have good health. She can not afford to lose time from her work. Girls who suffer from weakness and run-down condition should try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

VACATION SCHOOL AT SARDIS.

Dear Advocate: Beginning on July 11 the Sardis Methodist church began a two weeks' Daily Vacation Bible School, under the direction of Miss Elizabeth Stinson, of Jonesboro, La. Miss Stinson is a consecrated young lady and a very capable director for a Bible school. She is one of our Scarritt-trained young ladies. Miss Stinson was assisted in this work by a number of our local church workers. If the list of these workers was not so long, I would make honorable mention of each one.

In this Daily Vacation Bible School we registered over one hundred and thirty boys and girls, and the average attendance was around the one hundred mark. The children made a free-will offering to our orphans of $14.87. This Daily Vacation Bible School was fostered by the Woman's Missionary Society, and the director was sent out by the Council. So favorably impressed were the people with this school that they have said that we must have another next year.

WHAT IS YOUR LIFE EXPECTANCY.

In the first place, what is life? Many explanations and definitions have been offered. None are explanatory, and none satisfactory. All in common evade the issue or becloud the understanding; they attempt to define an abstract quality of living matter of which we know nothing beyond its manifestation.

The fact remains that life, meaning thereby the aggregate lives of the multitude of cells which go to make up the body, terminates quickly or slowly in advance of or beyond the average number of years experience has shown that man lives. And the reasons? First, heredity. It is a fact well known to insurance companies that longevity is a familial characteristic. This may not mean that the ability per se to hold body and soul together is inherited, but that barring accidental death, the bodily resistance to disease is an hereditary quality.

The second influence which modifies longevity is infection or infectious diseases, either acute or chronic. Modern medicine has decreased the danger from acute contagious diseases which in the past swept away millions regardless of hereditary resisting power. This decline began in the eighties, continuing down to the present day. Smallpox, yellow fever, typhoid, malaria, leprosy, plague, even scarlet fever, have lost or are losing their terrors and their victims. But, they have been replaced or are at least matched by a more subtle and insidious form of life-destroying agent. This is the chronic, low-grade infection which causes but few symptoms and little if any pain. The pus organisms of low virulence and other bacteria of perhaps no virulence at all under normal circumstances localize themselves in the tonsils, the teeth, the sinuses, the kidney tubules, the intestinal tract, the bile passages, and as the persistent drop wears away the stone so do their toxins gradually, very gradually, bring about degeneration and death of the highly specialized organs. This is the explanation for the enormous increase in deaths from cardiac and arterial diseases since the acute infections have been conquered.

Finally, there is a third factor which is by no means the least of all those that torment the body and hasten the end. This factor is the hurry, nervous strain, anxious worry, wasted energy and futile striving after that which is attainable and that which is not. In short, it is composite of all these influences which we must meet in economic life. A shortened life is the price many pay for being born in an age that is very unlike any other. The demands of environment have altered more rapidly than adaptation can evolve. It is an inexorable law of nature that man must adapt himself to his environment or perish. He does the latter in increasing numbers every year, though as a whole the average life expectancy has been greatly increased when compared to former times.

Heredity, disease, environment—these are the arch enemies of life. And disease is the greatest of them all.

Calomel Attacks the Bones and Deadens the Bowels

Never take calomel. It is mercury—a dangerous drug. If you are constipated, bilious, sick, headachy, stomach sour, meals don't taste right, hot days make you drowsy and lazy, take Dodson's Liver Tone. That's all you need.

Calomel salivates. That's why you have to take salts the next day to get it out of your system so it will not eat your bones. You have to stay at home a day to recuperate from the shock it gives you. No wonder Dodson's Liver Tone is so popular. All you do is take a spoonful at night. By morning you are cleaned out good, head is clear, you feel as light as a feather; you are not sick, no danger of salivation, and you can eat anything you want. Think of that.

Get the big bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone from your nearest store. They all have it. Keep it in the house so you will have it handy to take nights before going to bed.

CONSOLED.

A rector in South London was visiting one of his poorer parishoners, an old woman, afflicted with deafness. She expressed her great regret at not being able to hear his sermons. Desiring to be sympathetic and to say something consoling, he replied, with unnecessary self-depreciation, "You don't miss much."

"So they tell me," was the disconcerting reply.—Kansas City Star.

WHY THESE "APPALLING LOSSES?"

By Bishop Warran A. Candler.

A group of men known as the "Continuation Committee of the Inter-Church Conference" has published recently a report according to which all the churches are suffering "alarming losses" of members.

While the report gives statistical returns from comparatively few of the churches, the figures given are for the largest of the evangelical denominations, and they may be accounted as reasonably accurate as far as they go.

Estimating on the basis of the statistics of the thirteen churches reporting, the committee reckons that the losses of all the denominations last year approximated 500,000. This exhibit of losses is characterized as "appalling," and so it is.

Several explanations of this large loss in membership were offered by the committee, the main one being "the pruning of the rolls of membership" for one reason or another.

Other explanations of the losses which were suggested were (1) the effect of the migration of people from point to point in the widely extended territory of our country; (2) the abnormal "financial drives" of the churches and the financial pressure of such movements as the disappointing and disastrous "Inter-Church World Movement;" (3) the demoralization following "the world war;" (4) the undervaluation of church membership by many who once united with the churches and then drifted away from them; (5) and "the negligence and indifference of pastors" to the observance of church laws concerning church membership.

None of these causes adequately explain the "appalling losses" reported by the committee. Most certainly no "pruning of the rolls of the churches," however trenchant, should be accepted by the churches as explaining the decrease of their memberships. Surely the real increase of members has fallen far below what it ought to have been, if it can be figured out of sight by "pruning the rolls." Surely more souls should have been added to the churches than this inadequate explanation implies.

Doubtless sensational, not to say hysterical, "drives" have ended in depressing reactions.

The disastrous failure of the ill-advised "Inter-Church World Movement," by which some $5,000,000 was worse than wasted, has done much to discourage the churches that participated in it to their hurt. That movement injured the work of the churches in both the home and foreign fields.

The after-effects of the world war have been unfriendly to the work of the churches. Great revivals followed the war between the States, culminating in the work of grace known as "The Moody and Sankey Revival," which extended over the entire nation and reached the British Isles beyond the seas. But such results did not follow the "world war." Great revivals prevailed in both armies during the war between the States; and when that conflict ended, many thousands of Christian soldiers, converted in the camps, returned to their homes and kindled anew the fires upon the altar of religion. But no such revivals prevailed among our troops in France. The controlling minds who were in charge of the religious work among our soldiers overseas put more emphasis upon "phyical comforts" and "social service" than upon personal salvation and spiritual life. Some of them went so far as to predict that when "the boys" came home they would have nothing to do with the churches, but would cast away their creeds and ceremonies; and that they would demand more liberalistic organizations, if they chose to enter any church at all.

Following the lead of such men not a few preachers fell to berating the churches and depreciating definite faith and disparaging unworldly piety.

Well, we now see the lamentable outcome of all such things. The nation needs, as it needs nothing else, a revival of religion; but the churches are depressed and perplexed by the situation which confronts them.

Such conditions should not excite surprise so much as they should lead to repentance and a return to God. But repentance is impossible, if the preachments of a certain class of vain talkers are accepted as religious truth.

Some of them declare there is no such thing as a settled and fixed Gospel; that "progress" demands that faith be always in a state of flux, and that even the moral law is not to be held as a correct and final standard by which to determine right and wrong.

With liberalistic tenets of that sort no sensible sinner can be brought to repentance, no revival of religion brought to pass, and no church be built up.

If the Gospel is no better than the fluctuating teachings of an ever changing rationalism, and the church is nothing more than a club organized for "social betterment" in the realm of physical comfort alone, why should there be any preaching, any preachers, or any church?

For a decade and more certain types of preachers, in alliance with sensational writers of scrofulous novels, have been denouncing the church, depreciating the Bible, and deriding revivals of religion, to the delight of the scoffing world. The result is now apparent.

Men of this sort are no longer to be followed, if religion is to revive and the churches to prosper.

It is time to return to common sense and Scriptural Christianity.

A writer, who makes no claim to theological learning or ecclesiastical statesmanship, in a recent newspaper article uttered some wise and timely things. In the course of his thoughtful article he said:

"To the layman who observes the situation with interest and without prejudice, it seems high time for a change in tactics.

"If the church was a dominant force in community life when it taught religion and nothing else, and if the churches that took up vaudeville lost prestige, and if the preachers who now have the largest following are those who teach the old-time religion, one cannot escape the conclusion that the people have an appetite for religion.

"To offer them a substitute is simply to lose their confidence and respect and send them away empty.

"There can be no leadership, of course, unless there is contrast between leader and followers. And since the people have gone to school and the man in the pew knows just as much as the man in the pulpit, the preacher has no chance to establish himself as a leader if he depends on his ability as a lecturer.

"The old-fashioned preacher led because he confined himself to religion, and in that field he knew more than the members of his flock knew.

"The modern preacher is not better informed than the members of his congregation, nor is his intellect superior to theirs; but he can acquire the superiority essential to leadership by the simple expedient of sticking to his trade.

"He knows religion as the people do not. They will learn eagerly if he is able to teach. But if he hasn't anything to offer except entertainment, he can't blame them if they go to hear better entertainers.

"When the church quits its ancient role and begins to compete with "worldly" things, it is like a merchant who has a monopoly of bread and yet fills his shelves with toys."

The vaudeville-actor type of preacher-lecturer has occupied public notice far beyond his deserts. It is time to retire him from further consideration. He has done the churches hurt enough.

It is now time to turn back to the Scriptural Gospel by which alone all the achievements of Christianity in the past have been wrought and by which all its triumphs in the future must be won.

The Bishop of Liverpool, in his instructive work, "The Christian Leaders of the Last Century," says of that saving Gospel:

"The true remedy for all the evils of our day is the same remedy that proved effectual a hundred years ago—the same pure unadulterated doctrine that the men of whom I have been writing used to preach, and the same kind of preachers. I am bold to say that we want nothing new—no new systems, no new school of teaching, no new theology, no new ceremonial, no new gospel. We want nothing but the old truths rightly preached and rightly brought home to consciences, minds and wills. * * * There never has been good done in the world excepting by the faithful preaching of evangelical truth. From the days of the Apostles down to this time, there have been no victories won, no spiritual successes obtained, except by the doctrines which wrought deliverance a hundred years ago."

The faithful preaching of this evangelical Gospel will make an end of "appalling losses" in the churches, and it will bring an era of glorious gains.

The churches have lost members in exact proportion to their loss of that Scriptural faith.

QUO VADIS.

By Arthur Madison Shaw.

Stranger, whither art thou speeding?
What impels thy hast'ning feet?
Why thy fellows pass unheeding
In the street?

Why this tug of brain and muscle,
And this strain of eye and hand?
Why this mad'ning rush and bustle
Through the land?

Does thy life hang on a minute—
Or thy country's welfare—say?
Wilt thou lose the world, or win it,
In a day?

Thou art hast'ning to thy duty—
Striving in it to excel—
If thou know'st its worth and beauty
It is well!

But thou hear'st the dollars jingle,
And thy greedy heart is bold;
For thy palm doth itch and tingle
For the gold!

Or, the siren song of pleasure
Lures thee like a maiden's kiss;
And thou deemest that the measure
Of earth's bliss!

Nay! perchance thou seekest fashion:
Bauble fit to please a child!—
Or thou giv'st the rein to passion,
Base and wild!

If 'tis so, then thou wilt never Know the joy of sweet content
All thy labor and endeavor
Are mis-spent!

'Tis a dream thou callest gladness;
'Tis but ashes thou dost crave:
And thou rushest in thy madness—
To the grave!

Pause, and listent to the beating
Of the heart within thy breast!—
Swift as light beams life is fleeting:
Stop and rest.

Rest, and think where thou art going;
What thou toilest at and why!
Sift the seed thy hand is sowing!—
Thou must die.

Leave thy phantom chase, and turning,
Cast thine empty dreams away:
Seek to sate thy soul's deep yearning:
Kneel and pray.

Pray for pow'r to conquer fully
Greed and self and appetite;
To discern and follow truly
What is right.

Here thy Heav'n is in the making—
Think, and work, and pray, and live—
Earth is famish'd—hearts are breaking
Up, and give!

Give to men thy best endeavor;
Give thine all to God above;
Love till death, and then forever,
Live and love!

LOVE ENVIETH NOT.

By W. Y. Millican, M.D.

I.

St. James asks: "Do you think that the Scripture saith in vain, that the spirit that dwelleth in us lusteth to envy?" Whence we are to learn, if I mistake not, the apostle's meaning that envy is the offspring of lust, or evil desire, and that lust or evil desire is the property of that corrupt nature which we all inherit from Adam. Desiring, and not obtaining, we envy those who are more successful than ourselves. Envy is malignant discontent at another's good fortune, and its objects and occasions are as numerous as the shades of human character and the varieties of human conditions. People are envied for their worldly goods, their personal attractions, their intellectual endowments, the reputation they have won by their talents, the position they occupy in society, the influence they exercise over others, and indeed for all sorts of superiority except superiority in virtue. For whatever else men may be envied for, for their virtue they are never envied. They may be envied for the rewards of their virtue, but not for their virtue itself. The fallen archangel is represented in our great English epic as envying our first parents, not for their innnocence and purity, but for the honor and blessedness which these qualities bring them, and which he has lost by his guilty rebellion against God. Envy is too depraved a disposition to see the beauty of holiness, and to covet it on its own account; but everything else, as Dr. South observes, "will make a man to be envied, which shall set him above being pitied."

This base and wicked passion is one of the earliest developments of human depravity and one of the last demons cast out of a regenerate heart. All of the original passions of our nature are in themselves innocent, and, when duly directed and regulated, they contribute to the good of man and the glory of God; but envy is a spirit of unmingled and unmitigated evil, a compound of selfishness and malignity utterly incompatible with the unfallen state of humanity, and so unworthy of the sons of God that one is never willing to acknowledge himself actuated by so vile an impulse. Often, however, it is discovered where it is least suspected—in persons of polished manners and amiable deportment and apparently of the most noble and magnanimous dispositions. Ah! could we penetrate the secrets of official and professional life, and of the several literary and aesthetic occupations, where we find the highest culture, and the greatest degree of refinement, how often should we discover the serpent creeping among the fairest lilies and coiled beneath the sweetest roses? Of these lofty pursuits, indeed, envy is the ordinary and easily besetting sin, and, if it is to be traced anywhere, it is in statesmen, and men of letters, and men of science, and the makers of many books, and the inspired masters of the pencil and the chisel, and those who can sway the grave judgment of senates by lucid and persuasive speech, and soar heavenwards on the wings of genius, charming all ears with their melodies. Envy is everywhere. It is the moral epidemic of the world. Like the spider, it weaves its snare alike in the palace and in the cottage, in the halls of learning and chambers of legislation, in the warrior's tent, in the artist's studio, the gay salons of fashion, and around the very altars of God. The city merchant, the rustic laborer, and little children in their sports, are subject to its baneful influence.

It is the great sectarian sin, the pestilent schismatic, that has rent again and again the body of Christ and lacerated the Redeemer with many a wound in the house of his friends. And sad it is to see how different religious societies hate and malign one another, what plans of circumvention they employ, what unworthy trickery of perversion, beguiling unstable souls, compassing sea and land to make one proselyte, lest they should be eclipsed by the superior success of their neighbors; whence arise calumnies, controversies, bitter contentions, as if they were striving to furnish a sort of gladiatorial entertainment for a gazing world. And in church choirs and Sunday schools may we often discover the same hateful spirit, among sweet children, and fair virgins, and youthful saints, like a toad in a bed of tulips, a buzzard in a bevy of doves, a demon among the adoring seraphim. And in our Bible societies, missionary anniversaries, and other organized efforts of Christian philanthropy; in conventions and conferences where we discuss questions of vital interest to the kingdom of Christ, and adopt measures for the promotion of Christianity at home and abroad; the fiend is sure to play his part, marring our noblest schemes, and spoiling our best performances. And whenever the sons of God assemble themselves together, Satan comes also among them, setting brother at variance against brother, embittering faction against rival faction, converting Christian zeal into a kind of prize-fight competition; and so loving hearts are divided, and sacred terms are perverted, and prudent councils are defeated, and the gospel of our salvation is dishonored, and charity, or love, is driven weeping out of the world.

To see that envy is utterly incompatible with love, we need but glance at some of its characteristic qualities and fruits. Love is disinterested goodness; envy is unmingled and unmitigater selfishness. It would grasp all riches, absorb all enjoyment, engross all admiration and esteem. Every superior and rival would it destroy, and live alone in an impoverished or depopulated universe. Alexander the Great, who could bear no greatness but his own, would carp at the valorous deeds of his captains, as if whatever praise was bestowed upon them were taken from himself; "a great weakness," says Dr. South, "and enough to make the conqueror as much an object of pity as his conquest could be of envy." "The envious man," observes Bishop Hall, "feeds on other's evils, and hath no disease but his neighbor's welfare." Such a one, if rich, would have all others poor; if poor, would reduce the rich to his own condition. If he occupies an elevated position, he would thrust down all aspiring rivals; if his station is an humble one, he would drag those who have risen above him back to his own level. Like Gideon's fleece, he would absorb every particle of moisture that falls from heaven, and leave all around him as dewless as the desert. Love is the brotherhood of the heart; envy is as malicious as it is selfish. Joseph was hated by his brethren because he was beloved by his father, and they could not speak peaceably unto him because he had dreamed a dream which made him their superior. And Haman was full of indignation against Mordecai because he held a high place with the king. And the same evil spirit inflamed the wrath of Saul against the victorious shepherd boy, and made him seek to slay his own son-in-law. The envious man resents the good of others, as if it were an injury to himself. He hates you because another loves you, curses you because you are blessed of God. Rather than see you wafted along by the breeze of fortune while he lies becalmed, he would have you shipwrecked beyond remedy. All who are above him, he regards as black clouds obscuring his day and deserving his displeasure.

Envy is like the ocean, which, because it cannot shine as the firmament, would shroud the starry luster of the latter with its vapory exhalations. Nay, in order to enjoy the glimmer of its own rushlight, it would extinguish the sun and leave the world in darkness. Love is a meek and gentle spirit; envy is as outrageous as it is malicious. One of God's secretaries tells us it is "cruel as death and insatiable as the grave." There is in its hate an inhuman fierceness, in its action a diabolical fury, which respects no dignity, reverences no sanctity, pauses abashed at no splendid array of virtue. What stirred up Satan against the perfect man of Uz, and brought the Sabaeans and Chaldeans, and marshaled the wrathful elements of nature, to do such terrible execution upon the patriarch, and upon his children, and upon all that he possessed? What but envy of his large estate, vast revenues, increasing honors, and flourishing family, all watched over by the wakeful eye and protected by the powerful hand of him who gave them? And what but the eclat of his valor and the glory of his achievements drew upon the son of Jesse at once the applause of the kingdom and the murderous wrath of its monarch? And why did Ziber accuse Mephibosheth to his master? And why did Ahab shed the blood of Naboth? Full well we know the animus of these traitors and butchers—the fierceness of their hate, the fury of their revenge. And was it not by the instigation of the same cruel and ruthless spirit, that the noble and self-denying men of former times—illustrious patriots, public benefactors, servants of the living God, of whom the world was not worthy—were so often persecuted, falsely accused, deprived of their possessions, chased from home and country, thrust into horrible dungeons, subjected to lingering tortures, or hurried forth to a violent death?

Superior worth was their crime, and envy the executioner. And what slew Caesar, and banished Cicero, and put out the eyes of Belisarius, but a merit too great for wealth to reward, or envy to endure? Envy murdered Abel at his altar, and nailed the Son of God upon the cross. Envy first blighted the bloom of paradise and breathed a curse over God's fairest creation; and ever since it has raged through the scene of its ruin, filling the earth with dire confusion, and wasting carnage, and every evil work; and well saith the wisest of ancient monarchs: "Wrath is cruel, and anger is outrageous, but who can stand before envy?" Love is ready unto every good work; envy is as mischievous as it is outrageous. There is no injury it would not inflict upon its happier neighbor. It would make you an object of shame and sorrow to your friends, of mirth and mockery to your foes. It would poison your peace and blacken your fame, deprive you of what is worth more than mountains of gems and gold, and send you forth like Cain—but without his crime, a helpless wanderer through a blighted world. What is the fairest reputation but a mirror reflecting its ugliness, which its foul breath therefore delights to sully, and its rude hand is ready to shatter? With an angel's face and an angel's voice it comes to strike down private character and public virtue, array itself with the spoils of its victims, and feast and fatten on what it has desroyed. While you are quietly pursuing your honest calling and suspecting no ill from any quarter, it is treacherously working its mine under your walls, kindling its fires in your cellar, dropping its poison into your wells, inflaming your enemies by its falsehoods, alienating your friends by its calumnies, with a whispered suspicion blasting your good name, before you are aware of the tongue that hurts you, or the hand that smites you. And who shall set bounds to its wickedness, or limit its baleful power?

FROM HON. T. M. EVANS.

II.

Now Brother Bazzel calls for facts, and I think he is entitled to them, and also the church.

It is impossible for me to give all of the individuals who appear to me to be misleading the people, which so far as my observation goes have uniformly come from colleges and universities.

I remember the first sermon that I ever heard in which the truth of Genesis was questioned, while I was yet a boy. The minister was a graduate in literature and in medicine, and had been a minister of the gospel for many years, boasted in private conversation and in the pulpit that he kept as well posted on the topics of the day as any man he knew of, and was one of the most popular ministers that I have met. He was trying to harmonize the discrepancy between the Bible and science. He said that science had established that instead of God creating man, the heavens, the world and all things, in six days of twenty-four hours, he meant to say six periods of time of long duration which probably was six million years.

I remember the impression that it made on my mind. I had not investigated for myself at that time, but had more faith in God's ability to express the facts in proper language easily understood than I had in the ability of the preacher to speak for him and to correct his mistakes. I was not ready to accept explanations that were not supported by facts. Since then I have read several articles by a bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, trying to explain this discrepancy by showing that it was of six periods of time of a million years each, but after making investigations for myself I am thoroughly convinced that all of these distinguished scholars who are taking their time, which should be spent preaching the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, in trying to reconcile the Bible with science, have exposed their ignorance of the Bible. Not knowing anything of science I am not able to criticise their knowledge of scientific subjects.

Now the first three chapters of Genesis do not undertake to state when, where or how God created the heavens or the earth. It was sufficient to say that in the beginning God created the heavens and the earth. This was done before God said: "Let there be light!" See Genesis 1, verses 1 to 3. And in the fourth verse we are told that God divided the light from the darkness, and called the light day and the darkness night, and the evening and the morning were the first day. In the sixth verse he divided the water, but the waters had been previously created. In the seventh and eighth verses we find that he had divided the waters which were under the firmament. The waters above the firmament he called heaven. This was the second day. There is not a single suggestion in the whole first chapter that God created water, light, earth, rocks or anything else during the first six days referred to in the first chapter of Genesis; therefore, these distinguished scientists have confused science with nonsense. For instance, we take the eleventh and twelfth verses, where God said let the earth bring forth grass, fruit trees and all manner of vegetable matter. Think of a blade of grass or a tree that grew a million years! And in the twentieth and twenty-second verses: "Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life and the fowl" that hath life. Think of a fish or a fowl living a million years! And verses twenty-four to twenty-seven, where he created all animal life and human beings. Think of a man or an animal living a million years! Genesis states specifically the things that were created in six days.

The fact is, that all nature corroborates the statement contained in the first three chapters of Genesis as to the creation of the animal, vegetable and human life.

Genesis, first chapter, verses 24-27, reads:

"And God said, Let the earth bring forth the living creature after his kind, cattle, and creeping thing, and beast of the earth after his kind; and it was so.

"And God made the beast of the earth after his kind, and cattle after their kind, and every thing that creepeth upon the earth after his kind; and God saw that it was good.

"And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness: and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth.

"So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created him; male and female created he them."

It will be observed in all nature, vegetable, animal and human life, each species is reproduced after its own kind, as God made them, male and female.

Now it was necessary that God make an egg from which the chicken is hatched or a chicken to lay the egg. If he made the egg first he must have made a hen to hatch it. Therefore the presumption is that he made the chicken in pairs, male and female.

During all the ages there is no record that our Modernists have been able to produce, and they would surely produce it if they could, where a hen's egg hatched a fish or a fish hatched a hen, or that a cow gave birth to a sheep or a sheep gave birth to a cow; therefore, since there is no instance during the past history of the world where one species of animal propagated another species of animal, it is unreasonable to ask intelligent people of ordinary common sense who have not lost their inherent intelligence in academic training to accept as a fact that man has ascended from some lower species of animal. I do not deem it necessary for us to disturb our minds investigating such propositions, and do not consider it at all wise for us to seek additional light from those who are no more discreet than to waste their time in such investigations.

I would have as much respect for a man who would attempt to apply science to a railroad locomotive to see how long it would take it to grow, according to the laws of nature, or to a large railroad system to see how long it took it to grow according to the laws of nature, as I have for a man who attempts to tell how long it took God to create the heavens and the earth, according to the laws of nature of which we are acquainted.

God is not a creature of the laws of nature or in any way subject to them, but God is the author of the laws of nature. God is not subject to Biology, but God is the author of the things of which Biology teaches or attempts to teach. Biology only deals with things that have been created by God and cannot treat of the God who created them. Science does not apply to God, but God is the author of all true science. God is not limited by science, but science is limited by God; but there is one thing that is certain, he who is initiated into the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, must accept the Holy Bible as the Word of God and God as infallible, and therefore, his word must be inafallible.

And whatever others may think or say, those who remain in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and those who are ordained to preach the gospel of the Lord Jesus by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and those who are employed in the educational institutions and editorial positions by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, are expected to believe and teach the things taught in the Holy Bible as the Word of God. And whenever their intellectual training willl not permit them to do so, they should retire from such positions held by them and supported by the church and not seek the use and position to teach things that are contrary to the teaching of the Holy Bible and the doctrine of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

III.

About twenty-five years ago I began reading a book entitled, "Personal Salvation," written by Dr. Tillett, the Dean of Theology at Vanderbilt University, which was then included in the list of books for young preachers to study who were entering into the ministry. I read to where the statement was made that there was no such thing as total depravity, that if there had ever been such a thing as a totally depraved man that no such person could now be found. When I reached this point I closed the book. If man is not totally depraved, but only partially so, then Jesus Christ was not a Redeemer, but only a cobbler, instead of coming to redeem that which is totally lost and totally condemned and totally destroyed, he only came to put up a repair shop to repair curable injuries; therefore, he was only an adventurer who brought upon himself unnecessary persecution and his crucifixion was without benefit to the world.

My observation is that the preachers looked upon as Modernists in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to-day, as well as the laymen, received their university training at this institution.

If Christ was not a Redeemer, his only benefit to the world was in living and not in dying; therefore, he should have preserved his life in order that he might have been a benefit to the world by teaching for many years.

Now the question of total depravity is the Crux of the whole controversy. Some two years ago I asked a high school girl to let me examine her book on Biology, and on examination I found that it was teaching that a small piece of vegetable matter had fallen into water and, under the influence of the heat of the sun, and moisture, it had acquired animal life, from which developed all species of animal life, and that from some species of animal developed the first human being. Now it was this character of science that the States of Mississippi and Tennessee sought to prohibit. But it is this character of science upon which the Modernist bases his theory of the creation of man, and, therefore, all that has been said in either the Old or New Testaments is false. For instead of the infirmities of man and the wickedness of the race being brought on by man's voluntary act as a free moral agent, the human race has gradually developed from the lowest species to the highest species of the human family in morals and intellect of which we have any record, and therefore the human family was never under condemnation of death for the transgression of the law or afflicted with any curse because of the violation of the law, and therefore, could need no Redeemer to redeem them from such transgression and death, but only needed a teacher to instruct him in the higher things of intellect and morality in this life; therefore, the only benefit that man ever received or could ever hope to receive from Jesus Christ was through the instructions received from him, and instead of subjecting himself to the cruel persecutions that brought on his death he should have preserved his life to instruct people in the things of this world, and instead of committing the gospel to his apostles and the church he should have reduced all that he said to written documents, that the world might receive the benefits thereof. But on the contrary, if the Genesis statement be true, that God created man in his own image, an intelligent, free, moral agent, and committed all that he had created in this world, except one tree, to his care as the sovereign power of the world, and that by reason of Adam's transgression in eating the forbidden fruit, he came under the sentence of death and became a subject of the devil who was at enmity with God, then he was totally depraved and totally destroyed.

A dead man can have no vitality, and a man under sentence of death in law is dead, and Adam being dead was totally dependent on some external means of grace or power for his restoration to life, or even for a reprieve for a term of years; therefore, he was totally dead, totally incapable of preserving life or restoring life. His intellect may have been maintained as well as his moral attitude, otherwise, toward God. When a man dies he is totally dead, whether his life is taken instantly, while he was enjoying the best of health, and his corpse may be in perfect condition, he is as dead as a man who is eaten up by cancer or leprosy; therefore, the question of inherent total depravity of man does not depend on his intellectual, moral or physical condition. There is only one distinction in this life, all are totally depraved by nature, but Christ says, "He that believeth on him is not condemned; but that he that believeth not is condemned already, because he has not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God." So the only distinction between men in this world is not the distinction of total depravity, but the distinction is in the faith. The distinction is clearly taught in the first three chapters of St. John.

There is no inherent righteousness in any man. Abraham's faith was imputed to him for righteousness, and so with us, it is by faith that righteousness is imputed to us; therefore, instead of Christ spending a long life teaching the world how to live and a long code of morals for this life he spent three years organizing his twelve apostles to preach the gospel of repentence towards God and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ as the means of salvation and redemption, and then gave his life as an atonement for the transgression of the world, that all who believed on him might be saved; therefore, from the orthodox standpoint the supreme object of Christ's appearance on earth was not to repair the impaired human race by instructions which he gave them, but to redeem a lost world by the atonement made in the shedding of his blood. While the Modernists teach that Christ's mission on earth was to teach man how to live in the world, and clean up and regenerate society; therefore, these two schools of theology cannot remain harmoniously in the same organization. Therefore, in all kindness to the Modernists, I submit that it is not in accord with the ethics which Jesus Christ taught and which they claim we should live by, for the Modernists to assume to take over all of the institutions of the Southern Methodist Church as the means of propagating their doctrine, when all of our church buildings, property and pulpits were secured and dedicated to teaching the doctrine of the total depravity of man, the new birth by faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and the resurrection of the dead. Let me illustrate my idea of the total depravity of man. When the great passenger steamship that was called the Titanic was dedicated in making her first voyage across the Atlantic Ocean with several thousand passengers thereon, every passenger on that boat was wholly dependant on the sufficiency of the boat to save his or her life and land them safely on America's shore, and were totally powerless to save themselves from death by drowning without aid from some other source, and when the ship struck an iceberg and went down every person on the vessel was totally lost, except those who accepted salvation from some other source. No passenger had inherent power to save himself. So with every human being, he is totally lost except he accept the salvation by the Lord Jesus Christ.

It is no answer to this argument that many who are not Christians possess high attainments in refinement, literature, art, science and business, and appear to possess a very high degree of morality. The Scripture says that Satan can transform himself into an angel of light. Depravity does not consist of imbecility, ignorance or what society would call immorality. It was the high degree of efficiency of the German army and navy that render it so totally depraved to Americans and their allies. The more wonderfully intelligent and efficient the enemy is the more totally depraved he is to God.

THE "LEAGUE"—A PROTEST.

By Rev. Wm. W. Woollard.

What condition in our Conference makes needful the organization of the "League of Faith and Order," with its creed and subjoined pledge? What consideration made desirable its "quick work" and semi-secrecy? I have not seen any of the literature sent to a limited and apparently chosen number, inviting them to become charter members of the organization in our Conference.

Beyond all question we need, probably first of all, "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." An Annual Conference ought to be, and is, a brotherhood. It ought to cultivate mutual confidences and respect. Any such movement or organization which creates division, or is likely to create division, can be justified only by that which really threatens to break down this brotherhood in its "unity of the faith." To be sure the persistent dissemination of dangerous heresy by an appreciable number of our ministers, who could not be disciplined by orderly processes, might justify such an organization; but even then only when orderly processes had utterly failed. Such an organization, if it were not a mere fiasco, with selfish ends in view, would in its nature be revolutionary. It might be the first step to what was recently advocated in this paper, i.e., a division in our church. Even then, to commend itself to brave men, its pact should be "an open covenant, openly arrived at." The days of "secret treaties secretly negotiated" and of "secret caucuses," have forever gone, we trust, even for the State, not to speak of the church, if they ever existed for the latter. These secret State treaties, the result of "quick work" and sub rosa execution, always had something sinister about them, no matter how high-sounding their phrases might be. No one to-day would question what was the ultimate purpose of "The Holy Alliance."

If there is a minister of the North Mississippi Conference who is not true to the essentials of our faith, I do not know it. My acquaintance with our brethren is fairly extensive after forty years of association with them. To be sure, some are more "open-minded" than others. Is that a crime? Some are willing to make a resurvey of our inheritance from the fathers, to see for themselves if the "old landmarks" shall stand as they have stood. They want to be able to give an answer to the questionings of this generation for the facts they preach. Are they censurable for this? Occasionally, it is quite probable, some lift on their trowels from the board untempered mortar. Some are given to speaking too much of that which they know too little. It has ever been so. Doubtless it will ever be so. But take our ministers by and large they preach a pure gospel; such in the main as Wesley and Asbury and McKendree proclaimed. As said above, if there is a minister in our Conference who burns strange fires on our altars, I do not know him. Thank God, the essentials of our faith are faithfully taught from our pulpits.

I am not unaware that insinuating statements are made, sometimes more directed ones, reflecting on the intellectual integrity and moral honesty of some of our brethren. The more is the pity! Only the other day an honored and worthy member of our Conference said to me, with some acid in his tones, that those who were unificationists in the late issue before the church, are now evolutionists. The pity of it is that he seemed to believe it! He is not a man who deals in unnecessary humor or badinage. He is a serious-minded man. The organization of this "League," effected as it was, is an implicit if not an explicit suggestion that there are a number of brethren of our Conference who are not 100 per cent Methodists, not the Simon pure, who should be circumscribed and not chosen for places of responsibility, and are therefore a menace to the wellbeing of our church. This kind of thing ought to stop! If there are really and truly those among us who are untrustworthy in that they persistently teach heresy, let some of those who suspect or charge such have the courage and manhood to come into the open and say so. Who are they? What article of our faith do they deny? What new doctrine do they teach? I am speaking of those not far away, but here in our Conference, because of whom this organization was effected. Let us have done with suggestions and suspicions and inuendoes and "secret caucuses."

There never was a time in our church when we did not need to cultivate and strengthen the bonds of brotherliness and the spirit of co-operation. But just now, when some of our institutions are sending out the S. O. S. call and are in dire distress, not to mention even higher needs for unity of spirit and action, comes this organization of 100 per cent ministers, with a few laymen tacked on, thus separating the sheep from the goats. Did the brother, and those associated with him, whoever they were, who began this divisive movement, forget the common frailties of even good men, and fail to see what could be but the inevitable result of such an organization in the North Mississippi Conference? Will the men among us who thus, in effect, have been classed as less than 100 per cent true to the spirit of our church, be inspired to co-operate with those who set themselves up as the genuine article? I doubt not they will go on as through the years they have been going and still work unceasingly and unselfishly to save from the rocks those institutions which have drifted, but they will do so in despite of the division thus drawn.

I protest with deep earnestness against such an organization, where I can see no need for it; and where it has so pronounced a divisive spirit.

JUST A FEW FRIENDLY REMARKS.

By Rev. W. T. Bazzel.

The Rev. John W. Ramsey does not seem to be satisfied with my reply to his challenge to meet him in joint debate. His last article charges me with evasion, and he calls for proof, proof, proof, and imperiously demands that I "put up or shut up!"

I could neither accept nor reject his first challenge, because the three propositions on which he challenged me to meet him did not and do not represent my views. My answer was merely an attempt to clearly state my views; but he charges that I used the excuse of replying to his challenge to reiterate my poisonous opinion, and complains that I merely assert my views without producing any proof to support them.

Now what are the questions at issue between us? They are clearly stated as follows: 1. The six days of creation were periods of time involving more than six days of twenty-four hours each. 2. A man can accept the theory of evolution and remain a Christian. I affirm and he denies both propositions. On these he calls for "proof" and demands that I put up or shut up.

Has it ever occurred to him that I have produced just as much proof in these columns in support of my side as he has produced in support of his? Well, I have. I have not tried to prove my case at all; neither has he! Possibly we are both saving our argumentative thunder until we can get together in that public debate! But seriously, I have the same right to demand that he put up or shut up, as he has to demand it of me. But I make no such demand.

Three brethren have turned their big guns upon me; Brother Ramsey, Brother Evans, and Brother Ellis. One against three; so I shall not ask for space to reply to all my opponents have said. But I have been accused of quite a lot of bad things during our controversy. The following is a partial list of the high crimes and misdemeanors alleged against me by the three brethren mentioned:

Insincerity, evasion, violating my ordination vows, being at variance with our Articles of Religion, having a "superiority complex" intolerance. They have classed me as a Modernist, an evolutionist, and a disseminator of poisonus propaganda that may lead folks to hell! My, what a list!

Why am I charged with all these things? So far as I can see I am in perfect accord with all three of these brethren on all except three questions; two of these questions I have mentioned, and the third point is that I do not deem it expedient or wise to call on our legislatures to pass anti-evolution laws.

If I may here arise to a point of personal privilege, let me state that I fully accept the canonical Scriptures as being God's word. (I hereby leave out the word, "contains," as Brother Ramsey dares me to do.) I accept the whole Bible as the one truly inspired written Word of God, and I do so without equivocation, mental reservation or secret evasion of mind in me whatsoever. I believe thoroughly every statement contained in our articles of religion. I reaffirm my adherence to all the ordination vows. I have been a Methodist preacher for nearly thirty years, and I preach the same old gospel I have always tried to preach. I emphasize the virgin birth, the divinity of Jesus Christ, the atonement and the resurrection. I warn my hearers, with all my power, against the dangers of sin, a real personal devil, and a fiery burning hell. And I hereby defy any one to point out a single statement of mine, made either in public or private, which is at variance with the foregoing declaration of faith.

And yet, because I differ with the brethren on the three points mentioned, I must be branded with all the foregoing accusations! Now let me ask, Who is it that is manifesting a spirit of intolerance?

I know I am not a Modernist, as that term is generally understood, and the Fundamentalists have disowned me; so where, and what am I? I also know this: I have tried to stand for truth, charity, and tolerance, and for the right as God has given me to see the right and am willing to go to the judgment with every copy of the Christian Advocate in my hand that contains my name, and face my Lord and be judged by him; for I know he will not misunderstand me there.

My revival campaign is on, and I cannot answer all the criticisms of my former articles now, nor can I leave my charge to go off somewhere to meet any one in joint debate on inconsequential and academic questions at present.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION YEAR BOOK.

The 1927 Year Book of the General Conference Board of Education has been published and distributed. It is the August number of Christian Education Magazine, the Board's official organ.

The Year Book is a 64-page booklet. It contains the annual reports of the staff officers, the condensed minutes of the 1927 Board meeting, the new by-laws of the Board, and educational statistical tables. By order of the Board these statistics are now compiled and published biennially.

Much valuable information about the educational work of our church and the status of our educational institutions is contained in this Year Book. Copies may be secured without cost by applying to the Board of Education, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.

Assessments for Education.

The assessments laid on the Annual Conferences last year for education, both for General Conference and Annual Conference work, was $778,238. The amount paid on these assessments was $529,667. This is equal to the income which would be derived from about $9,000,000. In other words, the 7,000 charges of the Southern Methodist Church have provided the equivalent of a $9,000,000 endowment for our educational work in addition to what individual church members are giving each year directly to our colleges and universities.

The following Conferences have the largest assessments for their own educational institutions: Virginia, $38,000; Central Texas, $36,000; North Texas, $33,100; Texas, $33,060; Western North Carolina, 32,500; Memphis, $30,000; North Alabama, $28,450.

In Terms of Millions.

Whoever think only in terms of millions should be interested in the following figures, taken from the general summary of the educatonal statistics published in the Year Book of the General Conference Board of Education. The seventy-five universities, colleges, and academies of our church have grounds, buildings, and equipment valued at $40,000,000, not including the James B. Duke gift of $19,000,000 for new buildings at Duke University. The endowment of these same institutions amounts to $67,000,000 (including the $40,000,000 Duke Foundation bequest), and their annual income is nearly $6,000,000. The additions to the capital account of these institutions in 1926-27 was nearly $5,000,000. Their combined indebtedness is $3,000,000.

When compared with similar statistics of a decade ago, these figures are encouraging. But when considered in the light of the great benefactions which have come to other educational institutions during the last ten years, we are reminded that we are barely keeping pace with the educational progress of the day. Only through the generous benefactions of our men and women of means can our Methodist colleges be maintained in harmony with present day standards.

Our Ministerial Students.

In 1926-27 there were enrolled in our own educational institutions 1,068 ministerial students. In addition to these a considerable number of our candidates for the ministry were studying last year in Eastern universities and theological schools and in Southern colleges and universities, other than our own. The whole number of college and theological students who were last year studying to prepare themselves to enter the ministry in the Southern Methodist Church cannot, therefore, be determined with accuracy, but was probably fourteen or fifteen hundred.

By action of the last General Conference the new law requiring the completion of two years in college for admission on trial will become operative next year. It will be interesting to observe what effect this will have upon the number of ministerial students of our church in 1927-28.

INTEREST IN SOULS.

By Rev. W. R. Lott.

In the second chapter of Paul's Letter to the Colossians, the first verse, we have this statement about his interest in the welfare of his Christian friends: "For I would that ye knew what great conflict I have for you." The word "conflict" might be "unseasiness," or "anxiety," which would convey the same meaning. Let us look at the meaning in that.

I can see down deep in the heart of the author a living heart hunger for the spiritual welfare of those friends. In that condition he has placed himself in the background and by putting his hands on his friends' back pushed them right out in front and said, "Here are the ones I want to see prosper in spiritual life." He simply longs for that growth to be shown. There is no deeper interest in life than when that hunger takes hold of the life of a Christian. When it is present in the man, be he minister or layman, pupil or teacher, in private or public spheres, his view of life is changed altogether. It brings the "Shepherd's heart" to the front.

How many people all around us need just that kind of attention? Often we starve ourselves to a state of religious poverty unthought of by neglecting to be interested in those about us. Crippled souls are hobbling by; the paralytics are rolling on their beds; the blind bump our fences and the deaf are run down by fleeing mobs of worldliness. It is our duty to interfere with loving heart-bending calls and care.

We will never know what good we can do for the soul by showing our loving interest. Politics, pride, division, clamorings, indolence, meanness—all are deadening our love for men, but we must not let it be done. The mission of the church, with all of its branches of endeavor, is primarily one of soul interest. A man may not express appreciation for one who loves his soul, but in the hour of great extremity he will cling to the memory with undying devotion and appreciation. Let us think how much Christ loved the sin-sick souls of mankind and then take some of his spirit into our own work.

THE MAKING OF A LEADER (MOSES).

Address Delivered by Willard Leggett at the Brookhaven District Epworth League Institute.

The subject that I have for discussion this morning is "The Making of a Leader (Moses)." This is a subject that we should all be interested in; not just the ones that are present; not just the Methodist, but every American. I probably would be justified in going further and saying that the entire world should know more about the making of a leader. The reason that I make a statement of this kind is because I have seen quite a number of organizations that have gone to pieces, and it was due to the fact that the leaders were not what they should have been. Not only that, but looking over our histories, we find where the South has lost a number of battles, and it was due to the fact that the leaders were not what they should have been.

We find some of our Epworth Leagues are going to nothing, if you will excuse me for the slang expression. What is the matter? They haven't got the right kind of leaders. If we American people do not wake up to the fact that our country is in need of better leaders, one day we are going to find our grand country moving backward instead of forward as it has been doing in the past.

I probably could name several things that would cause us to wake up to the fact that our country is in need of better leaders, but time will not permit. The subject that we are going to discuss is "The Making of a Leader."

There are several things that I would like to call your attention to about the making of a leader; therefore, I must get right to my subject, and I am one of the few that do not believe in saving the best until the last, so I am going to open our discussion by calling your attention to one of the most important things about the making of a leader. One of the most important things about the making of a leader is starting with a child in the home. No doubt some of you will disagree with me, but look at the great leaders of to-day: you will find that they were reared in Christian homes, they were reared by parents that believed the little verse in the Bible that says, "Bring up a child in the way that he should go, and when he is old, he will not depart from it." Again, allow me to ask you to look at the great leaders of to-day and you will find that they were reared by parents that believed in prayer and believed in teaching their sons and daughters to always fear and obey God. A home is where the foundation is made. We will all agree that it is useless for us to try to build to a rotten foundation. Suppose that we should go out here this morning to build a house, and we would lay a rotten foundation. What would it profit us to lay good material on top of a rotten foundation? We would be throwing our time and money away. In order to have a good, substantial house, you must have the right kind of foundation. It is just as true in the making of a leader: in order to make a good leader you must have the right kind of foundation, and the only way by which this foundation can be made is in the home. I sometimes believe the reason Moses made such a great leader was due to the fact that he was brought up under the influence of Christian people; his mother taught him to always fear and obey God.

We come now to another factor in the making of a leader, and that is an education; again I fear that I will be criticised, but suppose we stop and reason as we have done before. If you will excuse me, I will use myself as an illustration. I am a stranger here in your city. If I should leave this church this morning to go to a hotel, I would not know whether to go north, south, east, or west; it would be very necessary that I have some one to lead or direct me, and in order for some one to lead or direct me to the nearest and best hotel, he must understand the situation of your city. In other words, be educated along that particular line. It is just as true in the making of a leader; before we can lead some one in a better field of work, we must first understand the work ourselves, in other words, be educated along that particular line. I sometimes believe that another reason that Moses made such a great leader was due to the fact that he was well educated; he had mental powers enough to reason things out. I am proud that we live in a country, and are ruled by a government, that believes in education of her sons and daughters.

We come now to another secret in the making of a leader, and that is, we must do the work that God calls us to do. We have too many people to-day that are trying to lead a group of young people and calling it their profession. Allow me to drop this thought as I pass in this way: If you are doing something as a profession instead of a calling, your life, your work is going to amount to nothing but a miserable failure. I believe in leaders being called of God. Search your Bible over and see how many of the great leaders of olden times were working as a profession instead of a calling. Why this was the secret of their success as a leader—they were men called of God, and not professional men.

This is another factor in the making of a leader, forgetting self is a thing that we will all have to fight, or at least should fight. There have been thousands of men that their leadership has proven to be a failure for the simple reason that they were not willing to forget self. Again while looking over our histories, we find where the South has lost a number of battles because the leaders were not willing to forget self, they were working for honor, and in a number of battles, we find that some of the generals had much rather lose the battles than for the honor to go to some one else; look out and see how many victories have followed where self was put first. Knowing that to be true we find some of our leaders still putting self first. Suppose that Jesus had come to this world seeking popularity, do you think that he would ever have been willing to have died on the cross for us? No, never! I thank God that his Son did not come to this world seeking popularity, but he came here for the good he could do.

If we as leaders would only forget self we would find that we would be much more successful leaders than we are to-day. Suppose that Moses had been seeking popularity, do you think that he would have led the Israelites out of Egypt? What if he had consulted self instead of listening to the call of God, do you think that he would have left Egypt? No. Moses was having a good time, as we Americans call it; yet he was not satisfied, he saw that the Israelites were being imposed upon, and, too, knowing that God had called him to lead the Israelites out of Egypt he was very much troubled, but at last I imagine he remembered that his mother had taught him to fear and obey God. Then Moses turned his back on honor and by the help of God led the Israelites out of Egypt. What if Moses had consulted self alone? What would have been the consequences?

There have been thousands of people that have started out as leaders, and really called of God, but because of trials and temptations that came before them they gave up and turned back. When we know that we are right, we should be as determined to carry out our plan as Mr. Columbus was. When Columbus was sailing across the waters in search of a western land, several weeks had passed but still they were not in sight of land. His companions came to him and said, "Mr. Columbus, there is nothing but starvation for us out this way, why not turn and sail home?" Mr. Columbus said, "No, we are going to sail on." A few days later, they came to him again and said, "Look here, Mr. Columbus, if you do not let us turn back, we are going to throw you overboard and turn our ships facing home again." Mr. Columbus broke down and wept like a babe, but did he turn back? I am proud to say, "No." He said, "We are going to sail on and on, for somewhere not far ahead is land." They continued to sail on, and the next morning as the sun began to peep over the eastern hills, they discovered this grand country we now call, "America."

Suppose that Columbus had become discouraged and turned back. Oh! it is sad to talk about, but let's hurry to another thought, but before we pass on, allow me to say, if you have become discouraged and are thinking of turning back, remember that I say, "Sail on and on, for victory may be waiting for you at the door."

We come now to another factor in the making of a leader. In order to be a good leader, must we be willing to be led ourselves by men? No, but by God, our Father, the one that knows best at all times, and under all circumstances, the one that never leads us in deep water and leaves us there. I know his way is always best, and where he leads me, I am willing to follow.

We have now come to the real secret of the making of a leader, and that is faith in Christ. When you put your life in the hands of the Lord, have faith in him. We find some of our leaders to-day have faith as long as the way is clear, but let the way begin to grow dim, then you will find that doubt begins to rise. We need more men with faith like Abraham had; we need the faith of Job; we need leaders that have faith like that of Moses, while he was leading the Israelites out of Egypt.

When Moses was leading the people out of Egypt, the Egyptians were following them and trying to kill them. Moses and his people continued to run, the Egyptians were drawing nearer and nearer, but Moses and his people continued to run until they came to the Red Sea. When they looked up and saw the sea, they thought that there was no way to cross; then they looked toward their right, but there was a great mountain, over which it was impossible to climb; they then started to the left, but it was impossible to go that way; so they turned, and started back, but when they looked back, they saw the Egyptians coming with their swords in their hands; then it was that the Israelites began to get angry with Moses for leading them in such a place. Yet Moses was not frightened; he still had faith; he turned to his people and said, "Stand still and see the salvation of the Lord." Moses then stretched out his little rod over the Red Sea and the waters parted, and Moses and his people walked across on dry land. When they got across, Moses again stretched out his little rod over the sea, the waters came together and the Egyptians were drowned.

What would have happened if Moses had not had faith? What will happen if we fail to have faith in Christ, and trust him for all our strength?

Allow me to close by saying, have faith in Christ, for without Christ, we can do nothing, but through Christ, who strengthens us, we can do all things.

FROM SMITHVILLE, MISS.

Rev. W. L. Pearson, pastor at Smithville, Miss., sends us the following report of a good meeting on his charge: "The Rev. Dan Kelley evangelistic party, consisting of Rev. Dan Kelley and his singer, Rev. Otis Spinks, conducted a most successful revival meeting at Smithville, Miss., during the first two weeks in July. Brother Kelley is a great power in the evangelistic field and keeps his eye on the cross of Jesus, leading people there to find salvation to their souls. He is a personality unique in this field of labor. Without the materialistic point of view, Brother Kelley forgets self and upholds Christ. He is thoroughly spiritual, and has left the people of Smithville and surrounding communities with a spiritual outlook that is most remarkable. There has been a general revival among church members, and twenty-four additions to the Methodist church on profession of faith. Brother Spinks is a remarkable choir director, and a most excellent worker among the young people. These two men of God have accomplished a wonderful work in our midst, and we love and appreciate them for it. We praise God for sending them our way."

RESTLESS ONES.

Edith Willis Linn.

Dear, restless heart, be still! Don't fret and worry so;
God hath a thousand ways His love and help to show;
Just trust and trust and trust until His will you know.
Dear, restless heart, be still! for peace is God's own smile,
His love can every wrong and sorrow reconcile.
Just love and love and love and calmly wait awhile.
Dear, restless heart, be brave! Don't moan and sorrow so.
Just hope and hope and hope until you braver grow,
He hath a meaning kind in the chilly winds that blow.
Dear, restless heart, repose upon His heart an hour,
His heart is strength and life, His heart is bloom and flower,
Just rest and rest and rest within His tender power.
Dear, restless heart, be still! Don't toil and hurry so;
God is the Silent One, forever calm and slow.
Just wait and wait and wait and work with Him below.
Dear, restless heart, be still! Don't struggle to be free.

THE EMPTY WATER POT.

The precipitate flight of the woman, leaving her water pot there by the well curb at Samaria, has in it many lessons. She who had come to draw water, leaves the jar which was to contain her supply—because she had found the living water. A new enthusiasm born of the discovered Christ sent her to tell the glad story to her people.

For her deserted water jar was the sign of an awakened soul, of a degraded nature thirsting for God. A new-born hope had come to her. This pitcher meant merely animal needs and drudgery, the daily commonplaces of toil, but now she forgets it in a glad discovery of something better.

What did it mean to Jesus?

It was the sight of it that inspired the words: "I have meat to eat that ye know not of." Immediately the twelve thought: "Someone has fed Him." Their conception of meat was bread or fish or figs or wine. Such are our usual measures of the satisfactions of life. Success is for most, money and houses and lands, freedom to eat the best and wear the finest. These make success, these satisfy. So they blindly measured the Master, food for Him must mean things. But Jesus saw the empty water pot and the hastening woman. Photina tradition names her. The realization that He had saved her, that he had awakened in her the desire to be good, this gave Him joy. She was thirsting for God, and through her testimony the whole city would turn from sin to righteousness. It was no wonder that He uttered His enigmatic word: "I have meat to eat that ye know not of." His elated soul visioning the redemption of a multitude, forgot His hunger. Jubilating over His spiritual victory, He fed upon God and was satisfied.

The disciples were thinking of meat, Jesus was meaning God.

"My meat is to do the will of my Father and to finish His work."

Suppose you went in search of the world's happiest soul, where would you find him? Not at Newport or Palm Beach, not in gilded wealth and luxury, not where men follow impulse and indulge appetite. This is not meat, the meat that satisfies. The truly happy man is he who realizes his life is achieving his Father's will.

It is tribute to human nature, to its essential spirituality, that we leave water pots and hasten to evangelize the world with the glory of a discovered God.

Alas! Our drudgeries hold so many of us, and we fail to find Christ at the well. It is great art to find God in the commonplaces.

"The day is long, and the day is hard,
We are tired of the march and of keeping guard;
Tired of the sense of a fight to be won,
Of days to live through and of work to be done;
Tired of ourselves and of being alone;
Yet all the while, did we only see,
We walk in the Lord's own company."

MASIE'S KIND DEED.

By M. Janis Franke, Henrietta, Tex., (Aged 11 Years).

Masie had been to Sunday school, and now was walking home. Masie was troubled. The lesson was about helping others, and her teacher, Miss Malone, had said that the one who did the kindest and most helpful deeds during the coming quarter, should receive a beautiful Bible. She did not know anything to do. It was her disposition to try to help others all she could as all her friends could testify if consulted about the matter. What could she do?

"I simply must do something to get that Bible," she said, "but I don't know anything to do. I help mother all I can, anyway, and I would not call going to see Aunt Mary or grandmother kind deeds, for I just love going there."

"Meow, meow," something cried behind her. Masie was so absorbed in her thoughts, she jumped. Turning, she saw a thin, starved little kitten coming her way. Masie had a tender spot in her heart for all cats, and a poor little cat in the condition as the one she saw behind her, made her heart throb with pity.

"Oh, you poor little dear," said Masie, almost crying, and then she saw further back a poor, ragged boy almost as pitiful as the cat. She just stared. His hair was tangled, his toes were entirely through his shoes. He had no stockings on, his shirt was torn and dirty beyond any description. His trousers were the worst of all; both pockets were torn away, the legs were too long, and were fringed around the bottom with rags. An old pair of suspenders held the ragged trousers up.

"Hello," said the little boy pleasantly. "How do you like me cat?"

"It looks hungry—a little pitiful," stammered Masie, who had not recovered from her astonishment.

"Hungry?" scoffed the boy. "It can't be any hungrier than me an' Ellie."

"Is Ellie your sister?" Masie wanted to know. The boy nodded. There was a pause, as the boy and girl eyed each other uncertainly, while the cat walked over to Masie, and rubbing its nose against her leg, began to purr loudly.

"What is your name?" suddenly asked the boy. "Mine is Dick," said the boy, then whistled through his fingers so loudly that Masie was forced to close her ears. Presently, a small girl appeared who was even more pitiful looking than the boy, if that were possible. She stared at Masie until she was forced to say something.

"Do you want something to eat?" finally asked Masie. At that, the little girl seemed to lose all doubt of her. She put her soiled little hand in Masie's clean one.

"I should say we do. We are always hungry." Both children replied at the same time. Masie knew it without the response given instantly by the pinched faces of the children.

"Well, come with me," invited Masie, even though she was a little doubtful as to how her mother would take it.

The three children made a queer picture walking along together; Masie with a fresh dress of pink and white, Dick with the trousers that were too long and too ragged for the rag-man; and Ellie with a dress of uncertain color much too small for her.

As they were turning in at the gate, Mr. Stone, Masie's father, was coming down the walk looking at the flowers. When he saw Masie and her friends, he smiled quietly to himself, for well he knew Masie never left undone an opportunity to "mother" either humans or dumb animals. A thrill of thankfulness for the unselfish heart of the little girl was felt by the father.

Dick and Ellie shrank from him, for they felt he was coming to send them away, but when Mr. Stone saw the expression on the faces of the children, he hastened to make them at ease, which he soon did by his sunny smile.

"Well, well, whom have we here?" he asked. He was quick to sense the fact that here, indeed, was an instance of the old adage, the way to win the approval of some children is through their appetite. He invited them into the kitchen to see what they could find to eat. Dick and Ellie decided they liked Mr. Stone even as well as they did Masie. While they were eating their fill of what was left from the noon lunch, Masie went to find her mother. She called softly at her mother's door. "Mother?"

"Yes, dear," replied her mother, as she came from her room. "I have seen the children," then she waited for the little girl to speak, noting the glowing face of Masie.

"Your father and I have known about the family for several days. The mother is very ill, and the father is rather shiftless. You may gather up such clothes as you do not need for the little girl. Surely, we can find some one willing to supply clothes for the boy. Two days a week you may go there and do what you see to do. I could do this, but it will be good training for you, so you may have full charge." Masie went away, too happy to speak.

The days flew so swiftly that the quarter was up before Masie realized it. She felt regret that she had no long list of good deeds to report, but somehow, the time had flown by so quickly, she had seemed to have no time for hunting deeds to do.

When at last the Sunday had come for the coveted Bible to be given away, Masie had persuaded Dick and Ellie to go to Sunday school with her. How different they were from the time Masie had found them! Hair was neatly combed, clothes were neat and clean, and both had a happy expression on their faces. They seemed to shrink from the other children, and stay close by Masie.

The entire class seemed restless. They wanted to know who would receive the beautiful book. But at last the time came. Miss Malone held the book in her hand.

"I am going to give this book to a very worthy person," she began. "All or most of you have done good deeds, but one of you has done the best. Will Masie Stone come forward?"

Masie could hardly be persuaded to go forward, so great was her surprise. She had not been conscious of doing any kind deeds, whatever. When she was able to speak, she mumbled her thanks in a choking voice, and slipped crying from the room. But Miss Malone had enough thanks, and as she turned to dismiss the class, she said under her breath, "And a little child shall lead them."—Exchange.

DIRECTIONS.
All checks and money orders should be made payable to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.
Communications pertaining to subscriptions and other business matters should be addressed to the Manager, or to the New Orleans Christian Advocate. The Printed Label on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after four weeks, notify us, and we will make it right.
Communications intended for the Editor should be directed to him at 512 Camp Street. Correspondents will observe the following rules: 1. Write on only one side of the paper. 2. If you have a typewriter, by all means use it; otherwise use a good quality of black ink. 3. Leave a space of at least two inches at the top of the first page; leave a margin of at least one inch on the left-hand side of the page; do not crowd the words and the lines together. 4. Take special pains to write proper names correctly and legibly. 5. Use letter paper if you can get it—not note paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

THEY CAN BE SECURED.

Subcriptions to the Advocate can be secured when the pastor or any other interested person in the church gives any effort at all to the matter. On last Sunday the assistant, preaching at First Methodist Church, this city, devoted five minutes just preceding the sermon to a statement concerning the Advocate and an appeal for subscriptions and sixteen were secured. Not so many, you say, but very good returns for just five minutes and just a little expenditure of energy. Brother Pastor, will you not give just five minutes to the Advocate next Sunday?

"THE CHRIST AND THE CREED."

The first series of the Jarrell lectures at Emory University, founded by the Rev. Charles C. Jarrell, D.D., with some of his friends, to honor the memory of his father, the Rev. Anderson Joseph Jarrell, A.M., were delivered, as indeed fitting, by Bishop Warren A. Candler, and, under the condition of the lectureship, being published, have recently come in book form from the Cokesbury Press, under the title, "The Christ and the Creed."

The book is indeed a timely one in this "age of doubt," with its coat of arms described by one as "an interrogation point rampant, above three bishops dormant, and its motto Query?"

In the first chapter is a fine discussion of "The Obligation of Belief," and of what Professor William James has called "the will to believe." "Determined doubt," the Bishop writes, "in the face of credible testimony disorders the mind, darkens the reason, and debases the soul." Yet who can doubt there is in the present day determined doubt of the saving truths by which men have lived for two thousand years, and efforts, not to explain, but to explain away the cardinal truths of the New Testament?

The Bishop then discusses the nature and the need of a creed and shows that the Apostles' Creed, and that creed amplified in the great councils of the church, is a summary of Christian belief assuredly based on the Scriptures. He shows that the creed is factual, not speculative, and he then discusses the great truths which center in the Person of Jesus Christ.

Every man who is concerned for the church of God should read this book, that he may be the better prepared to "give to every man that asketh" him a "reason of the hope" that is in him (I Peter 3:15), better prepared to meet the insidious errors of the present which come like ravening wolves in sheeps' clothing to deceive, if it were possible, the very elect, and that he may be inspired with a great confidence in the efficacy of saving truth in human life. We do more than commend it; we urge all our preachers and all our people to read the book.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. W. H. Giles, pastor of St. Mark's, this city, is away on vacation.

Rev. R. P. Neblett, Kosciusko, Miss., is enjoying a vacation in the Ozarks.

Rev. J. G. Snelling, Louisiana Conference Secretary of Missions, preached at Carollton Avenue Church, this city, on last Sunday.

Rev. J. B. Peters, pastor of First Church, this city, is spending a part of his vacation attending the School of Evangelism at Junaluska.

Rev. E. C. Gunn, pastor of Carrollton Avenue Church, New Orleans, is enjoying a brief vacation, he and Mrs. Gunn driving to Memphis and other points.

Rev. J. G. Snelling, of this city, Louisiana Conference Secretary of Missions, left yesterday to attend the conference of Nationalism at Lake Junaluska.

Rev. W. W. Woollard, our pastor at Holly Springs, Miss., has been enjoying a visit to his old home at Senatobia, Miss. After leaving there he expected to spend a while in the Ozarks.

Rev. W. H. Saunders, our pastor at Philadelphia, Miss., is enjoying a vacation at Hot Springs, Ark. He writes that Hot Springs is a wonderful place and that one sees there people from all sections of the country.

We were pleased to receive a card from Rev. H. S. Johns, sent from Tacoma, Washington, where he was attending the Prison Congress. Brother Johns is now in his nineteenth year as chaplain of the Louisiana State Penitentiary.

Brother J. M. Ledbetter, of Crawford, Miss., writes that he has been a reader of the Advocate for a great many years, but now that his eyes are bad he will have to forego the pleasure of reading it.

Rev. C. D. Atkinson, Louisiana Conference Secretary of Sunday School Work, wrote us that the Leadership School at the Assembly at Junaluska, closed on last Thursday, and that he expected to reach home about Aug. 21.

The Daily Vacation Bible School which has been in session at Pascagoula, Miss., was closed on Friday night, Aug. 19, with a fine commencement program. This school has been conducted by the Presbyterian and Methodist churches.

Rev. John A. May, one of our general evangelists, and his singer, Rev. John M. Adams, want to get in touch with a pastor desiring to hold a meeting either in his own church or as a union effort. Brother May has held six revivals in his own Conference this year. Address him, Box 185, Montevallo, Ala.

Two visiting pastors were in attendance upon our church services here in New Orleans on last Sunday—Rev. W. C. Scott, pastor Noel Memorial Church, Shreveport, at Rayne Memorial Church at the morning hour, and Rev. J. Hall Bowman, pastor of Herring Avenue Church, Waco, Tex., at First Church in the evening.

A special musical service was held on Sunday evening, Aug. 14, at Felicity Methodist Church of New Orleans, of which Rev. R. L. Armstrong is the pastor. Favorite hymns, anthems by the choir, special numbers, vocal and instrumental, by members of the choir and by visitors, were chief features of the service.

Rev. Carroll Varner, Water Valley, Miss., in sending in the renewal of a subscription, writes that things are going well at the First Church, Water Valley. He has recently assisted in a meeting with Brother Robertson at Pope, Miss. This week he is preaching in the first of two meetings with Rev. W. Y. Cooley, of the Upper South Carolina Conference.

On Tuesday of last week Rev. John Rasmussen, our pastor at Delhi, La., and Miss Elise Leinhardt, were married, Rev. J. G. Snelling officiating. The home of the bride was in McDonoghville, La., where Brother Rasmussen was the pastor during the past year. Mr. and Mrs. Rasmussen have been spending a few days on the Mississippi coast as guests at the Edgewater Hotel.

Rev. R. L. Armstrong, the pastor of Felicity Methodist Church, of this city, has been teaching two courses at Camp Lassa, Forbing, La., which is under the control of the Louisiana Council of Religious Education. He writes: "An old schoolmate of mine is here with me, Guy Hicks. We are having a delightful time together." Rev. Guy M. Hicks is our pastor at Belcher, La.

Mr. Sam Montgomery, of this city, one of the stewards of First Methodist Church, called at the Advocate office last Monday to bring in a subscription which he had secured. Brither Montgomery has been a member of the congregation known now as "First Methodist" since he was 12 years of age. It was then "Old Carondelet." He is one of the most faithful stewards of First Methodist.

The recent third quarterly conference of the Slidell (La.) charge passed a resolution thanking the unknown donor of a beautiful pulpit Bible in the hope that notice of the resolution in these columns might attract the notice of the kindly person who gave the Bible. Slidell seems to be particularly marked for valuable gifts from unknown benefactors, as the church, earlier in the summer, received a gift of several electric fans from an unknown friend.

Rev. H. Mellard, of Centreville, Miss., has recently assisted Rev. E. D. Simpson, pastor of the Lorman charge, in a meeting at Mizpah church. The congregations were large, the people serious and attentive to the preaching of the Word. There were three valuable accessions to the church. Of the pastor at Lorman, Brother Mellard writes: "He has the respect and confidence of his people, being held in high esteem. He has a future as a pastor and a preacher. I am proud of the young men of our Conference."

We regret our failure to announce the laymen's rallies which were scheduled to be held in the Meridian District last week. In some way the notice was mislaid and then found too late to publish in advance of the meetings. We presume the meetings were held at the time and place planned—at DeKalb, Aug. 17, with W. T. Barnes, Rev. Robert Selby, C. H. Poythress, J. H. Miner, Dr. G. L. Morelock, M. P. Johnson and W. D. Hawkins on the program, and at Shubuta, Aug. 18, with J. E. Williams, Rev. Robert Selby, Willis M. Taylor, J. H. Fleming, Dr. G. L. Morelock, C. L. Daniel, and W. D. Hawkins on the program. A meeting was also held on the evening of Aug. 17, at Central Church, Meridian, with Dr. Morelock, General Secretary of the Board of Lay Activities, Nashville, Tenn., as the speaker.

The Rev. J. Galloway Robertson, D.D., of Norfolk, Va., has been elected Superintendent of Adult Work, Sunday School Board, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, it is announced by Dr.

J. W. Shackford, General Secretary of the Board. Dr. Robertson succeeds the Rev. Robert H. Huff, who resigned recently to assume the presidency of Morris-Harvey College at Barboursville, W. Va. He was elected by the Executive Committee of the Board at their recent meeting here, and the election has been confirmed by telegraphic correspondence with individual members of the Sunday School Board. Dr. Robertson is pastor of the Ghent Church in Norfolk, and according to Dr. Shackford is one of the denomination's leading pastors and Sunday school experts. He is a graduate of Randolph Macon College at Ashland, Va., and of Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn. He has had a large experience in dealing with young people and with Sunday school problems generally.

In a spirit of fairness that displayed a desire to co-operate with the Louisana State Highway Commission in their program to restore and extend new State highways to the limit of their resources, George E. Williams, the treasurer of the New Orleans Pontchartrain Bridge Company, on Aug. 12, notified the commission that instead of waiting for a decison in October, they would discontinue the suit pending in the Federal Court, thereby releasing the $2,000,000 bond issue. This should make funds immediately available for the completion of the Hammond Lake Shore road and the improving of the Chef Menteur road. Work on the Pontchartrain bridge is about 70 per cent completed, and the report of the engineer in charge encourages the belief that vehicles will cross to Slidell before the end of the year. We are sure this will be of interest to all our readers dwelling in this section of the country.

SURRENDER OF CREDENTIALS.

Dear Brethren and Friends of the Louisiana Conference: I have surrendered my credentials as a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to Rev. W. L. Doss. Jr., presiding elder of the Lake Charles District, Louisiana Conference. My reason for doing so is that I have felt in my hearts for years that I was occupying the wrong place in the work of the kingdom. I have felt that I could better serve the Lord as a layman for a long while, but meeting with a small degree of success in the work of the ministry I have allowed the same to cause me to continue where I knew in my heart of hearts I never belonged.

I truly hope that the above statement is fully understood and that I shall always find a place to work among you as a layman of the church.

University of Tennessee, English; Pauline Lewis, A.M. Baylor University, history; Mamie Penn., A.B. Whitworth College, librarian and instructor in French; Vallie Allsup, A.B. Whitworth College, physical education and instructor in Bible; Dorothy Warner, B.S. in Home Economics, Hood College, home science; Mrs. David Bolian, B.S. Mississippi State College for Women, secretarial course; Gertrude K. Mutton, B.M. Nebraska Wesleyan Colllege, and two years pupil of Vernon Spencer in Berlin, Germany, piano and conservatory director; Marjorie Benzler, A.B., and Piano Diploma, Whitworth College, piano; Adele McNair, pupil of Mark Kaiser, New Orleans, and of Chicago Musical College, violin; Catherine Jane Jordan, A.B. and voice diploma, Alabama Woman's College, voice; Mrs. Maggie Dunn, matron; Dr. B. F. Jones, treasurer; Mamie Boykin, dean of women; Eugenia V. Sullivan, New York Studios, expression and art; Mrs. O. B. Lewis, housekeeper.

Mrs. Moore is studying at Columbia University this vacation; and Miss Allsup, the new physical education director and a former Whitworth student, is taking a course at Peabody Collelge, as is also Miss Mamie Penn.

Miss Jordan, voice teacher, has directed the voice work in South Georgia College and Andrew College, and has studied voice in conservatories in Boston, Detroit, and Louisville.

Besides the above faculty there will be several student-assistants in the library, office, gymnasium, and conservatories of music and expression.

A METHODIST JUNIOR COLLEGE, SEASHORE CAMP GROUNDS.

By Rev. W. H. Saunders.

It is not a secret that there is a disposition on the part of some of the leaders in the Louisiana and Alabama Conferences to sell this old sacred spot, and invest the proceeds in other institutions. It is also true that a few of the leaders in the Mississippi Conference would be willing to dispose of it and retire from the coast.

They say, "If we could develop it, we would be glad to keep and improve it, but we cannot. The means cannot be had."

It seems clear to my mind to do this we would show ourselves untrue to a sacred trust, and surrender an opportunity to serve the church in this section for which we would reprove ourselves in the very near future.

I shall never forget a statement made to me by the late Bishop Charles B. Galloway. We were discussing the matter of selling a certain property that belonged to the church. "Never did you know our Romanist friends to let a piece of property go."

I do not hesitate to say that if they owned this property it could not be had for love or money.

If the advance of time and change of circumstances have enhanced the value, it has brought into existence conditions that should make us feel it imperative to keep and develop an institution to meet the needs in this section. I will venture to make assertion that if Bishops Keener, Parker, and Galloway, and men like Dr. Walker, Dr. C. G. Andrews were living, and some of the leaders in Alabama of their day we would have voices speaking out in clear and uncertain sounds. If the great Bishop Keener saw and felt the need of a Christian institution on this coast, in his day, when a thin line of straggling villages existed, what would he see and feel to-day? It's only a few more years until the coast line will be one long street—Gulfport, Biloxi and the other towns will merge into each other and be a city.

Families from Mobile and New Orleans have summer homes on the coast, immigration is turning this way, and a tidal wave of wealth is coming, and for us to leave would be blameworthy. It will be said, we have institutions in each Conference, and we need this money to better equip these schools.

I say that we have over a quarter of a million members in these three Conferences, with a corresponding constituency, and these schools cannot, have not and will not meet the demands. It's quite certain that if we had an institution, first-class A grade Junior College, offering the best accommodations and facilities for school life, it would appeal to our people. It is also true that our people in the bounds of these Conferences have the money, are amply able, and some appeal should be made to make them see and feel the obligation to supply the means. In some sections it has been done, and at times, leaner than these days, and it is a pity if it cannot be done now.

Find out the number we have at Shreveport, Birmingham and Jackson, and see how we stand as to meeting the demands. A first-class Junior College here would not compete, could not compete, with either of the colleges we now have. In fact it would be a feeder to these. I believe to sell this property and parcel the money out would be a great mistake, and in the long run turn out to be an improvidential move.

Let me speak definitely of conditions in the Mississippi Conference. I take the Newton District, in the very heart of the north-central section; the most thickly settled and most largely white people in the State of Mississippi. Turn to the minutes of '26, see the membership, note the prosperity of the country, and think. At Newton is located the "Clark Memorial College," founded and run by our Baptist friends.

Last year the catalogue shows an attendance, if I did not miscount, of over four hundred. Seventy-five per cent of the patronage of this school is from the counties of Newton, Scott, Jasper and Neshoba; other counties touching these furnishing the other twenty-five per cent. Now, from this same territory our Methodist boys and girls are not in our schools. Count up these boys and girls in our schools from this section of our Conference and you will not find a half hundred. Twelve miles south of Newton our Conference ran, for years, what was called "The Montrose Training School."

This school did much good in a limited way. Quite a few of our preachers found help here. Now, we are selling the property to the county or town for public school purposes and quitting the field. With the Port Gibson school struggling to exist, Whitworth forced to take the Junior grade, and to sell the Seashore property looks like our business is running low. For location the Camp Ground cannot be equaled; the appeal is irresistible for a junior college, equipped with a strong man at the head, and a summer assembly; nature has done her best.

It is most fortunate that our good, great Bishop Candler is in this move, and with the leadership of our church on the coast, Mobile and New Orleans, there is great hope that something will be accomplished to establish this school. There is a way and the will is next in order.

POSITION WANTED.

A young woman, consecrated member of the church, experienced stenographer and typist, desires a position as church secretary or otherwise, in which her whole time will be employed in the interest of the church. Good reference as to business experience and Christian character. Address this office.

FOR FREE DISTRIBUTION.

A Valuable Booklet on "How to Use "Chilean Nitrate of Soda."

The Chilean Nitrate of Soda Educational Bureau, 57 William Street, New York City, has prepared for free distribution, on request, a valuable booklet which every user of Nitrate of Soda should have in order to enable the intelligent use of that valuable fertilizer to secure maximum results and avoid excessive use. It indicates the quantity to be properly applied in the case of each field crop, garden crop, or in the case of flowers, shrubbery, lawn grass, growth of trees, etc. If you would have vigorous growth, avoiding waste of fertilizer, and avoiding possible injury from excessive use, write at once to Chilean Nitrate of Soda Educational Bureau, R 222, No. 57 William Street, New York City, mentioning the name of this paper, and the booklet will be sent free of charge.

On July 31, 1927, the death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Karl Wimberly, Ringgold, La., and took their darling baby boy. We miss little KARL MAXWELL so much, but we know heaven is brighter by his presence there; he is with little brother. Little Karl was sick three weeks and suffered very much, but God saw best to take him home. All was done that the doctor and nurse and loved ones could do, but we could not keep him. We can only look to Jesus for comfort and strength to bear our sorrow. We shall meet little Karl in heaven, where there will be no parting and sad good-byes.

THAT HOME-COMING.

Mr. Editor: Sunday, Aug. 7, was a great day at the old "Belle Bower" church, near Logansport, La., where the citizens of the community and former members of the church gathered from far and near in their annual home-coming. It was a day of opportunities, gracious privileges and precious memories; it was also an occasion touched with sadness, for many faces of former days were absent, and we realized they were to be seen there no more; the Holmes brothers—John, so long Sunday school superintendent; Robert and William, stewards and trustees, with Holloway Sinclair, the man of every office except that of the pastor, and many others, whose names are intimately associated with the pastors of the years gone by, who together with these have entered upon their reward and rest from their labors, and their works do follow them.

The present pastor, R. S. Walton, of Logansport, kindly invited the writer to come and share in the pleasures of the day. So with Dr. Holmes, the presiding elder, we caught the early morning conveyance and soon found ourselves in the midst of the hand-shaking and happy greetings of the children and grandchildren of the men and women of yesterdays. At the morning hour the presiding elder gave us a great sermon on the tragedy of doing nothing; this was followed by an old-fashion country dinner of fried chicken, with all the other good things. After this had been disposed of, in due time with the organ and voice of song, we were called to participate in a love feast and service of the Sacrament, conducted by the writer at the special request of the pastor, who, with the presiding elder, assisted in the administration. With sweet communion and happy fellowship, the hour passed, then the good-byes and many expressions of joy and sincere wishes for many returns of the happy day, we went on our way rejoicing, thinking of and looking forward to the final home-coming, where congregations ne'er break up, and Sabbaths have no end.

A REPORT FROM SATARTIA CHARGE OF A REVIVAL.

We began our revival meeting at Mount Olivet church the fourth Sunday in July, opening with the third quarterly conference, the presiding elder preaching Sunday and Sunday night, who brought us two great messages and gave us a good start. We who know Rev. Loyd J. Decell know I am not exaggerating when I say he brought us two great messages. My helper who conducted the meeting was Rev. T. O. Prewitt, from Millsaps Memorial Church, who did not arrive until Monday morning, but he came on fire, and his messages were full of fire, and they did not fail to burn into the hearts of the people. Brother Prewitt and his wife are just wonderful. Brother Prewitt is one of our coming young preachers. I don't think I ever listened to greater and more earnest messages in my life, and it had its effect. People were moved by the Holy Ghost; differences between some of the members were made right. We ran the meeting from the fourth Sunday through the fifth Sunday, and the people wanted it to run into the next week. We closed out Sunday night with twenty joining the church. We paid Brother Prewitt $60.10, and also we were due $100 on the church. We took subscriptions and raised $50. So as I see it the Lord blessed us wonderfully.

A. J. LEGGETT, Pastor.

Crystalized Memories

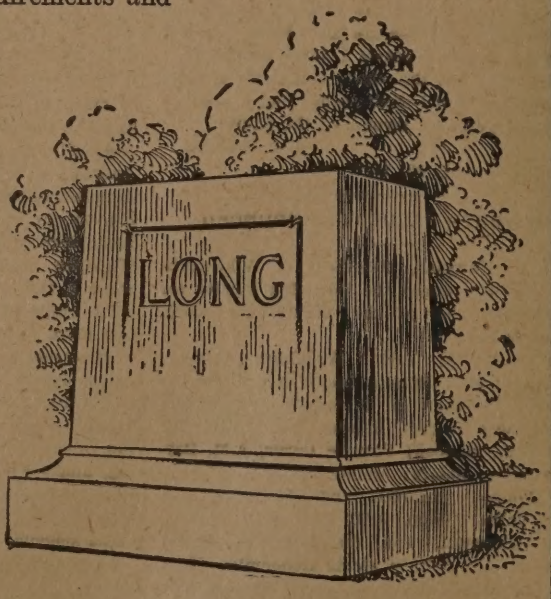
"Man is of few days. He cometh forth as a flower, and is cut down; he fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not."

SUCH quotations constantly remind us of the short duration of life. But the memories of our loved ones who have passed on will continue to live in our hearts.

The monuments we select to maintain these memories, should be cut from a stone which will properly carry to many generations to come the messages entrusted to them. This means stone of durability, beauty, contrast and strength. Granite is the only stone which meets such requirements and many granites fail.

Winnsboro Blue Granite
"The Silk of the Trade"

stands preeminently the most lasting, the most beautiful, and inscriptions on it the most legible.



Be sure that you get the genuine Winnsboro Blue Granite. Like other high quality materials, there are many inferior substitutes that resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty.

Write for Free descriptive literature, also for facsimile reproduction of a polished sample of Winnsboro Blue Granite that you may see its beauty. When you have purchased a monument specifying Winnsboro Blue Granite write us giving name of your Memorial Merchant, and we will send you a polished Winnsboro Blue Granite paper weight.

VICKSBURG DISTRICT MEETING.

The Vicksburg District meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society was held in Port Gibson July 13, with the efficient district secretary, Mrs. Mc Keown, presiding.

There were about one hundred delegates and visitors present, who were welcomed with open arms by the people of Port Gibson.

The meeting was opened by Rev. T. B. Hay, pastor Port Gibson Presbyterian church. Then very graciously Miss Katie Drake assured us that Port Gibson's hearts as well as her doors were warmly open to us. Mrs. Ford voiced the sentiments of the conference as she said we knew we were welcome before we arrived because we had been there before.

Mrs. McKeown gave a glowing account of the district. She reported eight new adult auxiliaries, five of which have already learned how and when to report, one revived Young People's at Centreville and the work of the Juniors going forward nicely. We feel sure that the work of the district will continue to grow under the efficient and consecrated leadership of Mrs. McKeown.

We were delighted to have with us distinguished visitors: Mrs. Alford, Conference President; Mrs. Cottrell, Conference Corresponding Secretary; Mrs. Van Saunders, Conference Superintendent of Young People; Miss Nell Drake, missionary from China; Miss Rosa McNeil, missionary from Africa; Miss Jeannette Head, home mission worker; Mrs. Jones, one of our pioneers, and quite a number of pastors from the district. After these introductions, we were favored with a beautiful solo, "Teach Me to Pray," by Miss Marjorie Allen.

The time had come for Miss Nell Drake, one of our own district women, who has been for twenty years a missionary to China, to speak to us, and we all knew there was a treat in store. Our hearts went up in praise to him as she told of the live Chinese churches and how leadership has developed in recent years. The Chinese are beginning to catch the vision and are wonderful workers. She said you may ask the question, "Do they really belong to Jesus?" and "Can they do the work?" The answer is, "They have what is vital—in hearing them and seeing them live you would know the power of Jesus." The native women are doing work of evangelists. Miss Drake told of three of these who are very successful in their work. Since our missionaries have been called home from China temporarily, the native women have taken over the work and are doing it well. Miss Drake asked that we pray earnestly for these who are beginning to take leadership, and not to cease to send them financial aid, for the church is yet too weak to be self-supporting.

We were very glad indeed to hear Miss Drake tell of the girl in Susan B. Wilson school who has been supported by Crawford Street. She is one of the helpers in a short time school, and is giving splendid service. In closing her address, Miss Drake said: "Love your sisters in China, think of them, help them, pray for them."

Mrs. King, from Gibson Memorial, talked with interest on "Why Hold Executive Meetings;" Mrs. Cottrell, on "Importance of Reporting on Time," and Mrs. Alford presented the "Jubilee"—fifty years of Methodist missions. This celebration begins with Council meeting 1928 and ends with Council meeting 1929.

We accepted with pleasure an invitation to go "below," where delicious plates were served by the ladies of Port Gibson.

After lunch, again assembling in the church, we were led in a worship service by Brother T. B. Cottrell.

Two of the Gloster Juniors, Jose Conerly and Lorraine Anders, sweetly sang a little song, which we greatly enjoyed, and as we listened we felt that we could hear the Master say, "Let the little ones come unto me." Mrs. Cottrell presented, in a very clear manner, the new plan for the children's department.

We were glad to have the work of the Young People brought forward by the superintendent, Mrs. Van Saunders. She showed us that the greatest need now, as it has ever been, is for consecrated women to lead the Young People.

Mrs. Alford, in her afternoon address, defined social service as "An effort put forth to make this world what Christ wants it to be."

We were very much pleased and gratified to hear our splendid girls, Miss Rosa McNeil, who sails in September or Africa, and Miss Jeannette Head, of Scarritt College, tell of the wonderful Christian influence and rare atmosphere of this institution. As we sat in rapt attention, we were made to feel sure that our own Scarritt is playing well her part in the work of the kingdom.

After stirring reports from two zone chairmen and a hearty "Thank you" to our delightful hostesses, we were dismissed by Brother Porter.

MRS. Z. D. CLARK, Secretary.

LAUDERDALE COUNTY ZONE MEETING.

An enthusiastic group of workers of the Woman's Missionary Society met at the Methodist church, Daleville, Miss., on Aug. 4. After devotional exercises, led by Brother Ware, Daleville's new pastor, the address of welcome was given by Miss Bettie Hughes, and graciously accepted by Mrs. O. B. Kerr, of Lauderdale.

Mrs. E. B. Key, the presiding officer, made introduction of visitors to the congregation, afterwards giving a talk on the goal of zone meetings. Among goals desired:

1. An auxiliary in every church, with every woman and child a member.

2. Spiritual resources developed more closely. (a) assisting vice president in establishing family altars; (b) Every auxiliary observing Harvest Day in December; (3) Increased number of subscriptions to the Missionary Voice.

Mrs. Lowry Rush entertained in song. Then a demonstration by Children's Superintendent of Poplar Springs church, Meridian, proved both interesting and inspirational, and an address by Mrs. Stanley Wilson, Conference Superintendent of Children's Work, was full of good things. She has the work much on her heart.

Miss Ella Wayne Ormond, in talking on the Jubilee, stated that the greatest objective is the quickening of the spiritual life of the church.

Benediction by Dr. Rolfe Hunt dismissed the congregation, and a bountiful repast was spread under the great trees nearby, to the enjoyment and complete satisfaction of all present.

In the afternoon the program was resumed, and devotional led by Mrs. Ramsay, of Chunky auxiliary. Brother Selby, presiding elder, Meridian District, by request, discussed the grouping of churches, which he advocates where it is necessary in order to maintain a missionary society—these several groups could work in circles and all meet at stated intervals.

Mrs. C. W. Cochran spoke in behalf of Wesley House, and introduced Miss Bunn, one of the workers there, who vividly presented its opportunities and its needs.

A talk on "Reporting" was made by Mrs. Hearn, followed by Mrs. Stanley Wilson. Mrs. Willis Taylor discussed "Our Pledge" and the 15 per cent increase needed for Miss Rosa McNeil, our new missionary girl to far Africa.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOLS NOTES.

By Rev. C. D. Atkinson.

Your writer is still in the Leadership School at Lake Junaluska.

* * *

Our school closes Thursday of this week. The enrollment this session has been 265.

* * *

There are twenty-odd Conference superintendents in the special seminary course for Conference and General Board staff.

* * *

The superintendents of the Mississippi, North Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences are here.

* * *

Louisiana has several of its Sunday school workers here, Mr. and Mrs. T. W. Holloman, of Alexandria; Rev. A. K. McLellan; Rev. H. N. Brown and his daughter, Miss Helen; Mr. J. C. Foster and family, of Shreveport; Rev. J. B. Peters and family, of New Orleans, and Dr. and Mrs. George S. Sexton.

* * *

We have been able to arrange with the General Board staff for some good instructors for our fall training schools.

* * *

Two of our schools open Aug. 28—the Hammond and Leesville schools. In the Hammond school a special course on "Sunday School Management" will be given by Rev. F. C. Adams, of Dallas. This course is required before one is approved to teach in the Cokesbury schools. The entertainment committee of Hammond will entertain any one out of the district who wishes to take this course. There will be four other courses in this school.

* * *

After the Leesville and Hammond schools comes the Alexandria on Sept. 4-9.

* * *

We received to-day from Rev. H. L. Johns, of Natchitoches, his printed program for the second session of his school, Sept. 18-23. His faculty is: Dean Smith, Dr. W. W. Holmes, Mrs. W. W. Templeton, and Rev. A. K. McLellan. He sets as his goal for credits 100.

* * *

Sept. 25-30 is the date for the Ruston school. Dr. Drake will have five courses in this school. Most of the faculty have been secured.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Miss Tryphena Rogers, one of the teachers in the school at Potts Camp, is the first to order literature to be used in the observance of the enlarged Children's Week. If we would read the articles published in the Sunday School Magazine and Workers' Council we would not confuse Children's Week with Children's Day. The two are quite different.

Promotion Day and Training Day, the last Sunday in September, should be combined. Properly advertised, this will have the effect of Rally Day. Remember, the Sunday school is a live, growing organization, and where there is life there must be a constant change in procedure and in terms describing the manifestations of life. We should be willing to make changes when these changes are for more efficient work. If you need a leaflet on the observance of Promotion Day and Training Day send to me for same.

One of the most helpful pieces of work the Sunday School Board can do for our schools is that of having the schools checked up. We are planning to have as many schools visited and checked up before the sessions of our Annual Conference as possible. We ask those who are to be checked up to receive the person we send cordially. Workers are trained by giving them work to do. All checkers go without a money consideration. Do by them as you would be done by under like conditions. It is our purpose to make as complete exhibit of our work as possible at our ensuing Annual Conference. No man will complain when we publish what he has done. You have the priyilege of kicking yourself for what you have not done. Only a very few schools have refused the help we have offered. None of us are all we ought to be, but your leaders in the Sunday school work are doing about the best they can.

At this writing the Lake Junaluska Leadership Training School is coming to a close. This has been the best school we have held. I have heard nothing said from the platform or in the class room the most orthodox could justly criticise. Jesus Christ, as the all sufficient Saviour, has been exalted, the work of the Holy Spirit has been magnified. The spirit of the kingdom has overshadowed and permeated the entire group. The Sunday school workers attending this school have one supreme passion, that to see the kingdom of God come in our own land and extend to the uttermost parts of the earth.

MINDEN DISTRICT LEAGUE MEETING.

The Ever-Ready Union of the Minden District Epworth League had its August meeting Sunday, Aug. 14, at Haughton, La. Mr. George Nelson, president of Haughton Chapter, had charge of the devotional program, and the following numbers were given: Scripture reading, by George Nelson; song, participated in by everybody; prayer, by Rev. S. D. Howard, of Haughton; piano solo, by a young lady from Haughton; vocal duet, by two young men from Bethel; piano solo, by a young lady from Sibley; chorus, "Sinner and Song," by Minden Leaguers; saxophone solo, by Mr. Lawrence, from Haughton; talk, by Rev. S. D. Howard.

Immediately after the devotional the meeting went into business session. The following officers were elected for the year: President, Paul Cassels; vice president, Dick Keoun; secretary, George Nelson; treasurer, Lavon Hofmeister.

Reports were received on the field work, the district award discussed, and other matters of business were discussed. Delicious refreshments were served, and, after a brief intermission, the crowd adjourned to the outdoors for vespers, Miss Mary Searles leading.

The next meeting will be at Sibley. Sibley had 9 present; Doyline, 1; Springhill, 3; Haughton, 18; Bethel, 6; Minden, 20.

MARY SEARLES,
District Secretary.

A LETTER FROM MISS PRESTON.

Dear Mississippi Conference Leaguers: I have wanted to write you before and tell you how very much I appreciated the kindness shown me by those who were at the Assembly—to thank you for having the minutes sent me each day, for the loving greeting sent by the Assembly as a whole, and by individuals. You spoiled me completely, so that I was disconsolate when the day came when the mailman left no letters with the Brookhaven postmark.

The reports of the various officers were wonderful, and I rejoice with your president in the good work that they are doing.

Miss Ulmer has told you about my appointment as Life Service Superintendent for the Arizona Conference Leagues. As I wrote Mr. Hawkins, I wish that the work I'm doing could be for my beloved Mississippi Conference, yet the young people here have endeared themselves to me, and the letters I am receiving from the volunteers are very sweet and inspiring. The work there might prove too hard, here there are only two districts in the Arizona Conference, so that the number of volunteers is not large, and it does not tax my strength to keep in personal touch with each of them. October 15, during the Annual Conference, the Leaguers will meet for a banquet, and Mr. Cheek is making plans for a big time. A number of the volunteers will be here, and will come out to see me, and I am anxious to meet them all. Our Life Service Department will have posters for the exhibit room, and I wish you all might see the one I'm making. A kind new friend at Whipple Barracks, Arizona (the government hopital), gave me the idea and sent me most of the materials, so that if it's good, the credit will be due to him.

Sunday afternoon the Senior Leaguers came for a song service, and I had the pleasure of meeting Miss Cannon, the new Wesley Foundation worker for the University church. Her work is to be largely with the University of Arizona girl students; Mr. Cheek's with the boys. These are the two workers supported by the new Epworth League special, which the League Board decided to take up at its meeting in Kansas City. I know Mr. Hawkins told you about it. It is a wonderful work you Leaguers are helping to carry on, and I can assure you that Miss Cannon and Mr. Cheek are surely doing worth while work here, and are just the right workers for the place.

I recently received a lovely letter from Mr. Garfield Evans, in League work in Cuba. All Leaguers love Mr. and Mrs. Evans.

You who were at Assembly had the pleasure (?) of meeting the Arizona horned toad and diamond-back rattler. I wish you might have seen the big brown tarantula, the scorpion, and the foot-long centipede (it had thirty-nine legs) which Mr. Maye brought in, which he had caught around his house, out near the edge of the desert. We had a sand storm last Sunday that lasted about thirty minutes. Coming up, it looked like a great cyclone cloud, and even with the house shut up, the sand was thick over everything, much to Lucille's dismay. They are to build two houses just across the street, which will obstruct my view of the mountains from one window, and though the view from the other window is not as beautiful, I won't fuss.

Our "Happy Day" folks (the T. B's. of Tucson), who are able to be up and about, continue to make us "shut-ins" happy by their cheering visits. A dear 70-year-old man who has been blind twenty-one years, is furnishing lollypops (in "Uncle Church's" name) for all the children of Tucson whom the Happies can reach, and I am one of the distributors. It's a princely job, and I have both fun and difficulty in limiting the sixteen children on this block, of all ages and sizes, to one lolly-pop a day. At first the smaller ones cried and thought I was "hard-boiled" because I wouldn't give them out as fast as they could eat them. The larger children do the distributing, I only boss the job. They have christened the old gentleman "King David of the Lollypop Kingdom."

Speaking of children, the Conference grand-twins send you cooing greetings, and beg leave to report that they now weigh 18 and 13 pounds, respectively, and are learning to crawl. Jules Kay is trying to cut his teeth on Jane Claire's tiny little hands. They are very sweet babies.

I was very glad to note your editor's plea to you Leaguers for help in securing subscriptions to the Advocate in view of the fact that it has always been so faithful a friend to the Leaguers of the three Conferences served by it. I would that each of you felt its helpfulness as I do, without having to leave home to realize it so fully.

I want to urge each League Chapter ot give heed to Mr. Weem's plea for a deeper spiritual attitude and a more devotional spirit in the chapter devotional meetings. I have felt the lack of this proper atttude, too, and the great need for it. I hope that each League has made plans for holding their Young People's revival during October. This will do more toward spirtualizing your chapter work than any other means, I believe.

My prayers have been, and are, with the delegates and others in attendance at Junaluska, that they may be quickened to receive with understanding hearts the messages given there, and be enabled to present these messages to the Leaguers on their return, not only by word of mouth, but by lives more closely lived and more fully given to him who is the source of all our inspiration and strength.

Being a Life Service Superintendent, and feeling as tenderly toward you as toward the young people whom I am serving here, I join Mr. Weems in most earnestly urging you to "make a personal application of our motto, 'All for Christ,' presenting yourselves as living sacrifices unto him—which is your reasonable service."

With loving wishes to each of you,
LOUISE PRESTON.

FIRST LAMBUTH MEMORIAL DAY SERVICE.

At old Pearl River Church, on the Madison charge, in the Jackson District, stands the monument the Conference erected in honor of the Lambuths. In that old cemetery are buried many of the close relatives of Dr. J. W. and Bishop W. R. Lambuth. The old Lambuth house in which Dr. J. W. lived still stands near the church.

Tuesday, Aug. 30, at 10:30 a. m., Dr. W. G. Gram, General Missionary Secretary, will address the people of the Jackson District, and we cordially invite friends out in the Conference and State to be with us on this eventful occasion.

The old community is sparsely settled, and we are all going to carry our own basket of dinner and turn it over to Mr. C. L. Ray and his committee, to be spread in old-fashioned style.

After dinner others will speak, and the formal organization of "The Lambuth Memorial Association" will be entered upon. We hope to make this old church an annual shrine for Methodist missioners for years and years to come. You are invited.

J. L. DECELL,
Presiding Elder.

ORGANIZATIONS AND MOTHERS BOTH AGREE

Health of School Girls Important

The Girl Scouts and Camp Fire Girls are two national organizations, working side by side in the cause of healthy, happy, intelligent womanhood; training the minds of eager girls for greater service, training their bodies for the destiny that shall be theirs.

All honor to them! Wise mothers like Mrs. Alice Louthan urge their daughters in their early teens to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Mrs. Louthan says—"I gave my fifteen-year old girl Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it did her a wonderful lot of good. She was out of school for four months. I read the advertisements of the Vegetable Compound, and since she has taken it she has improved and has gone back to school. I recommend the Vegetable Compound to other mothers with girls who are not as strong as they should be."—Mrs. Alice Louthan, Route 2, Charleston, Illinois.

Some girls in the fourth generation are now relying on Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Read This: If You Have Varicose Veins

If you or any relative or friend are worried or suffer because of varicose veins, or bunches, the best advice that anyone in this world can give is to get a prescription that literally hundreds of people all over the country are using with complete satisfaction.

Simply ask your druggist for an original two-ounce bottle of Emerald Oil and apply night and morning to the swollen, enlarged veins, rubbing gently upward and towards the heart as the blood in the veins flows that way. Soon you will notice that they are growing smaller and the treatment should be continued until the veins are of normal size. Emerald Oil is a powerful yet harmless germicide and results are guaranteed by all good druggists.

FROM BROTHER SAUNDERS.

Dear Brother Editor: It has been quite a while since anything from this part of the country came out in print.

I do not want you to think that I am vainglorious enough to read a whole newspaper to see if my name is in print. No, that is not so. The first two weeks in June Dr. W. H. Shannon, pastor of the Presbyterian church, and I held a joint meeting in our churches. To help us in this meeting we had Brother Charles Weiand, of Aurora, Ill. He is the best organizer and leader of the singing forces of a community, especially the young people, I have had to help me in my life. This meeting resulted in much good to the life of the town, and increased the spirit and brotherly love and fellowship to a greater degree than ever existed since the new Philadelphia began to be a town. The splendid preacher, delightful gentleman and Christian brother, Dr. Davis, of the Baptist church, was with us most of the time and contributed much to the meeting.

The whole town, that is, the leaders, expressed great pleasure at the effect this meeting had on the community life. As many as fifty conversions resulted, and they united with the different churches.

From the 15th of June I spent at the Divinity School at Biloxi and enjoyed the fellowship and lectures of Bishop Candler and Dr. Sloan, with the other brethren who were there, to the end of the month.

In July came the Howard Williams meeting at Neshoba County Fair Grounds, twelve miles west of Philadelphia, which gave the people an opportunity to hear and enjoy his preaching. This meeting contributed to the moral uplift and spiritual life of many. Then came the fair, for five days, and Thursday of the fair was the big day. The three who were running for governor spoke and the grounds were packed and jammed all day till late at night. Brother Jones and Brother Oakley have been holding meetings all the month in the bounds of their charges. One meeting especially worthy of mention is the one at Mars Hill. Brother M. L. Burton did the preaching, and the people were delighted, edified and led into a deeper realization of the Spirit. This week, our energetic, working, pushing and preaching presiding elder is holding a meeting at one point on Oakley's work, Brother Henry Miller and myself are holding one at another place on his work, and he is helping Brother Jones at a place east of the city, Sand Town.

Starting this next Sunday, the 14th inst., we have a Cokesbury Training School to begin at our church in the city. Associated with us in this school will be the charges of Philadelphia and Burnsides circuits. Brothers Jones and Oakley, Miss Marshall and Brother I. H. Sells will teach this course, and we look forward for much good to come of it.

Thursday evening, 18th inst., Brother G. L. Morelock, of Nashville, will speak to our folks in the interest of the laymen's work.

Last Sunday my good folks voted to let me off for a rest. It's my purpose to go to Hot Springs and lay in for some days and rest and recuperate some. Physically I look all right and am, except just a little, and that is that my talker needs rest.

Now, in conclusion, let me request Brother John Ramsey to let me know when he gets into that big debate he is itching to get into. I want to hear a man that knows he knows. Understand me, I am not taking up with the new fangled notions of these days, but I do know a few things, and I do not know many things. As to length of time it took God to create this old world, I do not know. He could have done it at a flash. He could have done it in as long a time as he wanted. As to evolution, I want to know what you mean by the term. I also want to know who started it—evolution. If he can tell me these two things he will turn on lots of light. That is, to those who are in the dark. Come forward, John, and let us have the light. I can tell you of a subject that I think will do more good than that. Repent, bring forth fruits meet for repentace, etc. Better to repent of our sins than to fuss over something we do not know much about.

W. H. SAUNDERS.

FROM LOGANSPORT, LA.

Since Logansport is the farthest west of any town in the State, we fear that in the minds of many it holds a very small place on the map of the Louisiana Conference. But in the judgment of the writer the Logansport church is destined to become one of the strong churches of the Conference.

The town, by reason of its favorable location and natural resources, is growing gradually, and the church is keeping pace with the town.

Since our last letter several events of importance have taken place. In May, Rev. A. K. McLellan was here and taught a Cokesbury class. As a result, twenty-one certificates were issued to those attending. Another class will be taught in the fall by the pastor, and we have set our goal to lead the Conference in the largest number of Cokesbury certificates for 1927. Brother McLellan is the right man in the right place.

During the month of June our Sunday school averaged 161 in attendance. During the month of July 158. The reported membership of the church last year was 224.

Another point of interest was the Clegg-Phillips revival, July 17 to Aug. 2. Rev. Leland Clegg came to us as a former pastor; therefore he was well known and loved by many. Our people were in a spirit of unity when the meeting began. After two nights the church building was filled, so we secured the high school auditorium. Great congregations came. Mansfield, Grand Cane, Stonewall, Haslam, and Joaquin, Tex., had parties in attendance, and the nightly attendance from the town and adjacent community was all that we could have hoped for. Brother Clegg's strong gospel sermons and passion for souls, accompanied by the Holy Spirit, stirred the hearts of his audience, and many people responded to the invitations. Forty-seven names were given for membership in the Methodist church, three for the Baptist and one for the Christian church. Ninety came forward to reconsecrate themselves to the service of the Lord. Brother Clegg is a born preacher, and no doubt will have a wonderful career as a minister. Rev. E. G. Phillips sings well and is an efficient choir director.

Since the Annual Conference we have received fifty-six members at Logansport. We hope to report 100 accessions to the various churches of the charge by Conference. Pray for us.

IF I WERE A MILLIONAIRE.

"If I were a millionaire" (I seem to hear you say), "I'd live on but a modest sum and give the rest away. I'd found a home for aged folks where they could spend in ease the twilight of their fading lives, as happy as you please. I'd make a fund for widows, too, to save their homes from wreck, and see that every month that passed each one received a check. A home for homeless animals I'd heavily endow and make a happy hunting-ground for every lorn bow-wow. I'd scatter seeds of kindness with a free and generous hand, but as I am not a millionaire, I can't. "

"But though you're not a millionaire, and never can be one, you still can practice giving and you'll find it lots of fun. The happiness of helping needs no Rockefeller's pile. It doesn't take a million to win an orphan's smile; it doesn't take a million to make a garret bright; it doesn't take a million to do a lot of things that brings a happiness beyond the happiness of kings. So when the chance of giving comes, remember every time—if you haven't got a dollar, do your best to give a dime."—Exchange.

FROM HAUGHTON, LA.

Dear Brother Harper: Just a few words. On the second Sunday in July our revival meeting opened at Doyline, the pastor doing the preaching until Monday night, when Rev. K. W. Dodson, presiding elder of the Meridian District, came to our rescue, and continued to preach both day and night until the following Sunday night, when the meeting closed. We had a good meeting. Brother Dodson did good preaching, and much good was accomplished, with several accessions to the church.

The people of Doyline were mighty nice to Brother Dodon and the pastor, wife and his daughter, in that we were entertained in the different homes for dinner and supper—for the whole week. Bountiful meals of good things were served from day to day, and night to night. The fellowship was delightful also.

On the fifth Sunday in July, at 11 a. m., our revival meeting opened here at Haughton, the pastor preaching the first sermon, and Brother Dodson preaching at night, and continuing day and night until the first Sunday night, when we closed one of the greatest meetings ever held in Haughton, so the people say. The preaching was fine; music excellent; the attendance day and night was large. The church was revived greatly. Twenty-two united with the church, some by certificate, and others upon profession of faith.

The people were just as nice to us here as at Doyline, in that we were entertained the same way. The stewards tendered the pastor a two weeks' vacation and a nice purse.

Both at Doyline and at Haughton the people remembered Brother Dodson with a nice contribution. The music at Doyline was fine.

All things considered, the Haughton and Doyline charge has been greatly revived and blessed.

S. D. HOWARD, Pastor.

NOTES FROM GRENADA DISTRICT.

Rev. E. G. Mohler, Sunday School Extension Secretary of the North Mississippi Conference, is spending three weeks at Junaluska, taking some work in the subjects he is teaching in the Cokesbury schools of the Conference. His family is spending the summer in Columbus, Ga.

* * *

Rev. E. S. Lewis, presiding elder of the Grenada District, preached the opening sermon in the new church, Raper's Chapel, Aug. 6. This is a beautiful little church and the people of the community deserve great praise for the way they have rallied to the leadership of the pastor, Rev. J. A. Brody, of the Paris circuit. The house will be finished and painted right away, and there is no debt on it.

* * *

Revival fires are burning all over the Grenada District. The pastors are helping each other, and at some places meetings of great power are being held. Political excitement is interfering to some degree, but that will soon be gone.

* * *

Rev. Mellville Johnson and his wife are at Junaluska. They report a delightful stay among the mountains. They will return to Winona at an early date and will be ready for the fall campaign.

* * *

Great crowds attended the Oxford camp meeting which was held last week. Rev. A. T. McIlwain, of First Church, Corinth, did the preaching, and Rev. Jeff Cunningham, of Corinth, led the singing. These brethren made a most profound impression upon the community. This was the fifty-sixth meeting held on this camp ground.

* * *

Interest is rising high in the new church project at Grenada. Before many months it is expected that the building will be under way. Rev. J. H. Holder, the popular pastor, is headed toward the end of his first year, and is in great favor with his people.

* * *

A brand new parsonage is being planned at First Church, Water Valley. Rev. Carroll Varner has things well in hand and is helping a number of the brethren in their meetings this summer.

* * *

Quite a lot of painting and other work is being done at Grenada College preparatory to the coming of the girls in September. The faculty has been strengthened and the college is better prepared than ever before to render the highest kind of service to the young women of this section who desire to fit themselves for life's high ministry.

Hot Weather Dries Out Your Kidneys, Liver and Bowels

Perspiration carries off body moisture and the liver and bowels become dry and constipated. Then—biliousness, headaches, sour stomach; the heat makes you drowsy and lazy, and your skin breaks out with pimples and boils.

Don't take calomel. That's wrong—calomel is mercury—a dangerous drug. It jars the liver and cleans the bowels, that's true. But the damage it does to them, ugh! It crashes into your system like a charge of dynamite and makes it numb. It stifles the muscles of the stomach and bowels, takes YOU a day to recuperate and no telling how long for your bowels.

All you need is Dodson's Liver Tone. Take a spoonful at night and you wake up feeling great. It doesn't upset you, but cleans you out good. You don't lose a day from your work and you can eat anything you want.

Get the big bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone from your nearest store. They all have it. Keep it in the house so you will have it handy to take nights before going to bed.

Principal and interest payable at the Whitney-Central Trust and Savings Bank, New Orleans, Louisiana. Interest payable semi-annually on April 1st and October 1st, of each year (the coupon due April 1, 1928, covering interest for a period of eight months). Coupon Bonds in denominations of $1,000, redeemable in whole or in part on any interest payment due, upon not less than thirty days' published notice; the bonds maturing up to and including October 1, 1932, at 101 and accrued interest, all others at 102 and accrued interest.

WHITNEY-CENTRAL TRUST AND SAVINGS BANK, TRUSTEE

This Church

organized in 1848, is one of the oldest Protestant churches in this section. From a small beginning it has grown steadily to a membership of 1,416 and is the largest Protestant church in Central Louisiana. Among its membership in the past and now are many who are prominent in buisness, professional, financial and political circles in this city. The membership also includes some who are well and favorably known throughout the whole of Southern Methodism and represents an unusually large amount of wealth.

These Bonds

are the direct obligation of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of Alexandria, Louisiana (a Louisiana corporation), and are secured, in the opinion of counsel, by a closed first mortage on the real estate and improvements of said church, located in the City of Alexandria, La., on the square bounded by Jackson, Sixth, Seventh and Beauregard Streets.

The property has been appraised by expert local authorities as follows:

Real Estate	$ 56,152.00
Church Building (present value)	57,600.00
Religious Education Building	116,666.98
Total	$230,418.98

making the amount of this issue approximately 43 per cent of the appraised value.

The Property

consists of one-half square of ground facing Jackson Street (the main thoroughfare between the business and residential sections of Alexandria), between Sixth and Seventh Streets, and an additional lot, adjoining the above, facing 47 feet on Seventh Street by 135 feet deep. It is located on the edge of the business section. The church building was constructed some years past and has been well maintained. Its present value has been conservatively estimated. The religious education building is now under construction and will adjoin the church building, making use of the whole block of Jackson Street frontage. Its value as given includes contract price, plus architect's fee, only.

The Purpose of this issue is to assist in paying the cost of construction of the religious education building, an essential addition to the equipment of this church. It will be a steel and concrete fireproof building, with brick and stone exterior of Modified Tudor Gothic design. The proceeds of this issue, with other funds, have been deposited in banks, to be withdrawn only for the purpose of completing this building, and upon architect's estimates, approved by a competent engineer employed to protect the interest of the bond holders. The contractor has furnished surety bond (guaranteeing the satisfactory completion of the work) in form and with surety approved by the trustee.

Pledges

aggregating $53,678.00, maturing within the next three years, made by various members and friends for this purpose have been transferred to the undersigned, the proceeds of same being dedicated to assist in the payment of principal and interest on this indebtedness. In addition the Quarterly Conference, Church Conference and Board of Trustees acting for the church in sessions held in conformity with the laws of Louisiana, and the Discipline of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, have unanimously approved the incurring of this indebtedness and the entire arrangement.

Insurance

against loss to the buildings by fire and tornado in the amount of $100,000.00 against each class of risk will be carried. The policies are to be in companies approved by the trustee, and are to be endorsed so that any amounts paid covering loss will be payable to the trustee and the policies will be deposited with the trustee.

Legality

of all proceedings incident to this issue has been approved by Messrs. Thornton, Gist & Richey, Attorneys, and Messrs. White, Holloman & White, Attorneys, of Alexandria. Title to this property has also been approved by above counsel.

MATURITIES:

October 1, 1928	$10,000.00	October 1, 1933	$ 6,000.00
October 1, 1929	10,000.00	October 1, 1934	6,000.00

EDITORIAL COMMENT

OUR ORPHANAGE AT RUSTON.

Professor Andrews, of Rice University, did work in the recent summer school of the Louisiana Polytechnic Institute at Ruston, and while there became a staunch advocate of the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage, also located at Ruston. It came about in this wise—Professor Andrews noted among the papers of the first examination that he gave four papers that surpassed all the rest. The next day in class he called the names of those who had handed in the papers, and they all proved to be inmates of our Orphanage. Mr. Andrews visited the Orphanage several times, and later asked Mrs. Andrews to accompany him, as he was anxious that she should see the institution. After observing everything connected with the Orphanage, he told Rev. R. W. Vaughan, our faithful superintendent, that he (Professor Andrews) had done a good deal of social work and had shared the opinion of many social workers that the best work with children could not be done in an orphanage, but that the success attained and the fine work done at our Orphanage at Ruston would force him to revise his opinions.

The Orphanage is now giving a home to 190 children and is in the best financial condition in its history. We have reason to be proud of this great work which our church in Louisiana is doing. Let us begin now to think about the observance of Work Day on the Saturday preceding the second Sunday in October—to pray and to plan for it that the returns may be large on Harvest Day. H.

THE KING JAMES VERSION.

Beautiful indeed was the tribute paid by Dr. F. W. Faber, after he had become a Romanist, to the English Bible. "It lives on the ear," he writes, "like a music that can never be forgotten, like the sound of church bells, which the convert hardly knows how to forego. Its felicities often seem to be almost things rather than mere words. It is part of the national mind, and the anchor of national seriousness. The memory of the dead passes into it. The potent traditions of childhood are stereotyped in its verses. The power of all the griefs and trials of a man is hiddden beneath its words. It is the representative of his best moments, and all that there has been about him of soft, and gentle, and pure, and penitent, and good, speaks to him for ever out of his English Bible." No doubt the term, "English Bible," would now be made generally to refer to the King James Version. And agreeing with the beautiful tribute above, we wonder why some men seem to prefer anything else they can get to the King James Version. Having been taught all their lives that "the Lord is my shepherd," they prefer, "The Eternal." Having been brought up in the stately language of the King James Version, which has done more for the English speech than any other agency, stately language which in itself gives sanctity and impressiveness to the Book, they prefer to hear the voice of the "Eternal" speaking in the common language of the street. Why not put the Psalm of Life into the common prose of a hod carrier? Why not reduce all the poets to prose? We have actually known good people to be offended because some brother persisted in carrying some little volume of some new translation of some one man of the present into the pulpit instead of the King James Version, to which they have been accustomed all their lives and many beautiful passages of which they have committed, and a time-honored version which required the labor of forty-seven scholars for four years to make. The few little changes gained by a new translation, which could be found in a commentary or in foot notes, will be overshadowed by the loss of the sacred, beautiful, stately and impressive language of the King James Version. H.

NEW YORK ADVOCATE SUGGESTS A REASON.

Not so long ago the New York Christian Advocate, in regard to the action of the majority of our Bishops in changing the custom of providing a president of their body, had the following to say:

"A semi-revolution in the College of Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has taken place—if the zephyrs are to be credited that drift up from below what Irvin Cobb once called 'the Smith and Wesson Line.' From time immemorial, seniority has been associated with authority in that body, the senior effective Bishop exercising many of the functions of a president. For several quadrenniums Bishop Candler, an ecclesiastic of great popularity and conspicuous gifts, has held that office, an asset which must be given its proper value in casting up the debits and credits of the recent campaign for and against Unification. For this, or some other reason, the College of Bishops at its recent session adopted a new plan in accordance with which the bishops will occupy the presidency in rotation."

We do not like the implications of this article, both in the insinuation that our honored Bishop Warren A. Candler abused his high office as Senior Bishop in his opposition to Unification, and that the majority of our bishops, those who favored Unification—the Plan recently before the church, should thus play for position when our General Conference decreed that there should be no agitation of the question of Unification during the present quadrennium, for the New York Christian Advocate speaks of the "semi-revolution" in our College of Bishops, and declares that the position of our Senior Bishop was an "asset which must be given its proper value in casting up the debits and credits of the recent campaign for and against Unification. For this or some other reason the College of Bishops at its recent session adopted a new plan."

We take it that those of our bishops who voted for the change were not swayed by personal ambition when they set aside a custom that had been in force since Asbury's time, and we should dislike to believe that they were playing for position. Yet it cannot be denied that no effort was made to relieve Bishop Candler of the presidency (with which he was honored by the custom descending from Asbury) until he became the chief opponent of the Plan of Unification recently defeated.

AN ALLURING BOOK.

When William Hamilton Nelson was a student in old Centenary College at Jackson, La., he enjoyed the royal nickname of Rameses because of some fancied resemblance he bore to one of Egypt's most illustrious kings; perhaps, also, because of a vague prescience on the part of those who bestowed the name that their comrade was destined to become the engagingly brilliant author of a book about the oldest section of America, so far as inhabitants are concerned, the Egypt of America, with its monuments and ruins rivaling in antiquity those of the Nile—"Alluring Arizona," the very title of Dr. Nelson's recently published alluring book.

When at old Centenary, Mr. Nelson won the classic of the year; as the chief representative of the Franklin Institute he triumphed in debate over the Union Literary Society, as the assistant editor, who was a member of that society, bitterly recalls. Mr. Nelson, on that occasion, showed a great fondness for facts and a facility and accuracy in gathering them together and a literary gift which have been developed more largely through the years, as is seen in his wonderfully interesting volume upon the antiquities and the natural marvels and beauties of Arizona. To a wealth of facts gathered in careful research through many books and through many visits to the things of which he writes, Dr. Nelson has added the gift of a poetic imagination to write one of the most interesting and informing books published recently. He has imagined the ancient life of the strange tribes who left their monuments and their ruins in a land which is perchance older than the land of the Pharaohs; to the glorious colors of the Painted Desert and other gorgeous places of the West he has added the rich colors of his own fancy. Like Kipling, he at times startles you with his original and bold figures of speech. One great proof of the excellence of the book is that it gives you an intense desire to go and see the things which he so charmingly describes.

THE SEASHORE CAMP GROUND THE SITE OF A JUNIOR COLLEGE AND THE CENTER OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

By Rev. Charles W. Crisler, D.D.

There is no more vital point in Southern Methodism than that which borders on the Gulf Coast. It is the gateway to the South and is at this time claiming the attention of investors from every part of the Unied States. At no point, possibly, are we as a church so poorly prepared to take care of the interests of the kingdom of God. If this line breaks the whole strength and cause of Methodism will be tremendously affected. To retreat from this strategic position would be a calamity. But defeat is inevitable unless we increase the number and efficiency of our forces and refuse to make available our great resources so as to hold and develop this territory. Failure here means failure all along the line.

The Seashore Camp Ground, owned by the church, is a valuable property. It is ideally located and offers the opportunity of the centuries. Any church would covet such an advantage as is in our hands. It is valuable not so much at this time in material worth as in moral and spiritual possibilities. It holds the key to this section and to the future. In the years of its usefulness and sacred history it has contributed much to the spiritual experience and inspiration of our people. It has enriched the religious life not only of the Christians of these Gulf States, but throughout the whole connection. From these altars have come some of the choicest spirits of the church in three generations. They have justified the faith, heroism, prayers and sacrifices of our forefathers who wrested these beautiful grounds from an inhospitable forest and consecrated them to God and for religious purposes.

Bishop Keener, wiser than his generation, with a prophet's eye, said, in dedicating Wesley Hall: "Methodism has a great future and a gracious opportunity down here. This is the beginning of larger things for our church. It is like 'a handful of corn in the earth,' or 'the leaven a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole mass was leavened.' Our great church so securely planted by the sea will get hold of and redeem the multitudes attracted to this coast country to exploit its wonderful resources. The time will come when we are going to be needed here. You and I may not live to see that day, but it is sure to come. This camp ground is going to be the center of the moral and religious influence in these Gulf and Southern States."

We have reached the time for action. We have been talking to no effect too long about what we ought to do. We must begin our building program at once and utilize these grounds to greatest advantage. We cannot think of abandoning our post of duty by selling out and retiring from the field. Conference resolutions have gotten us nowhere. They are, at best, but poor, temporizing. They furnish excuses behind which we have too long taken refuge to evade the doing of a plain duty. We are not meeting our plain responsibilities as stewards of the "manifold grace of God." We have not made available the rich resources which God has put into our hands to use for his people. We are failing in a sacred trust. The hour has struck when we must quit quibbling over trifles and get together and put over this common task. We can and must make these grounds a great religious and educational center for our church by means of the wealth entrusted to us.

The old camp meeting has done its work in its day well. It has bequeathed to us a sacred heritage which we must conserve and use for a yet greater work in this bigger day. There is a bigger and a divinely-appointed work ahead which demands added preparation and more adequate equipment. The necessity is upon us to change our methods of campaign. Of course, evangelism is still the big thing with us, but we must be wise enough to call to the "sacred task" all the approved and finer forces of a new Christian day. We must build and equip our schools so as to train our leadership. We must, as a church, give to our boys and girls the best Christian ideals and a world vision. We are preparing, through our schools and religious education, to make evangelism more real and effective in the practical living of our people. So we are now putting in motion forces by means of which we propose to make these grounds a force for culture and religion. We are planning to build there by the Gulf a first class Junior college and to otherwise expand the work done there so as to touch vitally the whole church connection. "The field is white" and we have the men and the money.

The coming of the Illinois Central Railroad to Gulfport means untold possibilities for the coast country. That system is proposing to dig a thirty-five-foot channel—standard port depth—and make Gulfport the Southern terminal of that vast, rich system. This means that within a few years this is going to rival New Orleans as a deep water port. Then, Gulfport will rank among the leading ports of America, attracting vast populations of people for business and home-making. Our church must act wisely and hold this vital base of operation. This means we are going to build a great Junior college for those boys and girls and expand the old camp ground site into a practical training center for Christian citizenship. The moral support, the prayers, the money of our Methodist people are needed now to make real these dreams of a greater work.

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

A cottage by the street in a city—a bit of lawn, rose bushes and shrubbery bordering the parterres about the house, a porch, the living room, sleeping apartments, dining room and kitchen, etc., all on a lot forty by one hundred and forty feet. A tiny back yard and garden. Within some rugs, curtain hangings, furniture, books, and all the numberless addenda that years of working and living have brought. No wealth, no luxury, no vain show, but oh, the rest, the comfort, the peace! Home—"the hunter from the hill, the sailor from the sea," sings that masterful creator of beautiful thought and style, Robert Louis Stephenson, and had it engraved on his tomb in far off Asia. A refuge, a haven around which cluster associations and memories that are as precious to its inmates as the lullabies mother sang over us when cradled beneath her smile. And you know, at such time, all the authorities say, the angels were on duty, because they had little business elsewhere. Man, have you a home? If not, sell your shirt and scarf pin and buy one. Apartments, boarding houses and hotels are not home. They will do for food and shelter for a season, but one never gets over feeling a stranger in them. At least I never did. Possibly you are different, more modern perhaps, but I am content to be even ancient on the home question. I have had a home all my life. For years it was a parsonage and belonged to the church. So did I, and when living in my partner's house, I planted a garden and flowers, and, maybe I am old enough to boast somewhat, when I left a parsonage it was more homelike than when I entered it. And so when the time came to retire I knew something about home building. Some men and women know but little of this art. They are to be pitied, for a true home, a real home, is an altar, a shrine wherein dwell spirits that do not belong to the market place. When America loses her homes she is losing more than her right arm, she is losing her heart. I once heard George Stuart picture the old home, and the father as a patriarch ministering at an altar, taking from the shelf Bible and hymn book, reading and singing—"A charge to keep I have," then a prayer "and heaven came down their souls to greet." I thought of Burns' "Cotters Saturday night" as a rich full tide of emotion swept over me and memory unfolded other scenes I had envisioned in the bygone years. Well, I got home, with the wife and two daughters after two weeks of wandering among the Ozarks, and right glad we are. There's no place like home.

Ishmael's tribe still lives in the world. His hand against every man, every man's hand against him. These try to disguise their lawless wickedness under the guise of "advanced thought," fine spun theories of government, or rather non-government, but the trail of the serpent is over them all, and by the markings of this trail no one knows whether they are coming in or going out. It seems from recent news that this tribe are making a lot of noise in the world, but the true tribe of Abraham are just looking on and wondering if these modern Ishmaelites will ever learn any common sense. If these fellows are so everlastingly brotherly and are apostles of this wonderful humanity which is, bless the old earth by destroying law and wrecking all existent forms of government and religion, they are undoubtedly pursuing a course of violence and disregard of righteous principles that inevitably bear the seeds of its own destruction. All of this is envisioned to savagery and barbarism. The travesty of such teaching is that some of these sons of Ishmael claim they are following Christ, who undoubtedly recognized law and obedience thereto, and some of his parables carry a clear recognition of property rights and ownership, else they are meaningless. It is true our blessed Lord taught that his disciples must share one with another of the goods of this world, but the sharing is voluntary and not taken by violence or even claimed as a right, and this kind of sharing bore in its ministrant hands a blessing alike to him that gave and to him that received. And to my mind the meddlesome spirit of this lawlessness is hard to reconcile to their claim of such altruistic humanity. If I want to live under law and order and thereby am convinced that greater happiness and freedom come to me, shall I not, by any argument ever conjured up in the brain of man, have the privilege of doing so unmolested? But Ishmael will still live, and like the wild ass snuff the air of his own barren desert, and fondly imagine it is a garden. I suppose we will have to tolerate him so long as he shows some little glimmering of ordinary reason.

LOVE ENVIETH NOT.

By W. Y. Millican, M.D.

II.

Has not envy rifled the richest treasures, thwarted the shrewdest policies, conquered the mightiest warriors, and subverted the proudest thrones? Naboth may deem himself secure in the possession of his vineyard, but envy shall never want a Jezebel to alter the title and take it away; and Mordecai may sit daily at the king's gate quite unsuspicious of evil, but there is a wicked Haman in every court ready to slaughter a whole race in order to get rid of a rival. If there is any exemption from the inflictions of envy, it is only in the case of those who have nothing for which they can be envied, whose obscurity is their fortress, whose poverty is their panoply. The tornado may spare the willow in the valley, but woe to the oaks on the mountain. The very beggar pines for the gains of his brother beggar, and dies of envy on his own dunghill; and he who imagines himself by any elevation of greatness or goodness beyond the reach of the fiend, is "like him that lieth down to sleep upon the top of a mast." Never pitying, never relenting, envy follows its victim to the very grave, and tramples upon his ashes, and desecrates his memory, and persecutes his posterity, making his children to inherit all the vengeance which death—more merciful—would not allow it to inflict upon the father. Love is free from dissimulation and deceit; envy is hypocritical as it is mischievous. Pride, anger, gluttony, drunkenness, cupidity, prodigality, all other vices, are ordinarily frank and open; boldly avowing their names, abodes, qualities, purposes, borrowing no mask, assuming no disguise, speaking no language but their own. But envy, conscious that it is an unnatural disposition, having more the rancor of a fiend than the temper of a man, and branded by common consent with a stigma deep and foul, disclaims its name, denies its nature, conceals its habitation, calls itself a lover of truth, a sense of equity, a power of discrimination, a concern for the public welfare, a regard for the good of the church, a zeal for the glory of the gospel, and in one form or another the very love it would destroy. To borrow the sarcasm of a writer already quoted, "It is indeed a most reputable and orthodox vice, a regular church-going sin, dressing like virtue and talking like piety. It has a great zeal for religion, a keen sense of public justice, and is much shocked at the inconsistencies of good people. It exalts when the hypocrite is unmasked, and exclaims, 'Ah, I told you so, I always suspected him.' It is also most benevolent, and when adversity overtakes a brother, prays devoutly that it may be the means of promoting his humility and other Christian graces." What is this but the hypocrisy of envy, concealing its malice under a mask of friendship, disguising its devilishness with the robe of an angel, and stabbing its victim through the very mantle of love. This despicable spirit professes to know how rich you are in the treasures of which it would rob you, and then tries to sicken your enjoyment of them by telling you, how full they are of snares and dangers. It hates flattery, it loves you too well to flatter you; and its constant warning is, "beware of pride, beware of vanity, beware of popular applause, beware of unholy ambitions, suffer yourself not to be puffed up by your prosperity." Ah, but it is the cant of the traitor, it is the song of the siren, it is the decoy of the fowler, it is the false flag of the pirate, it is the murderous subtility of that old serpent the devil. Of all the mental vices, of all the evil passions that rule the hearts of men, no other is so deceitful as envy, no other so despicable in the measures that it adopts to secure its wicked ends.

It will hire servants to betray their masters, and inveigle one friend to supplant another; it will creep about under the cover of the night. Whenever it can do so without defeating its own purposes, it will lie and calumniate with the audacity of the devil. But generally finding such measures impolitic, it coils adder-like by the footpath and snaps at the heel of the passer-by. Under the veil of seeming respect and affection, it hides a thousand malicious devices. It hears you commended, and joins with apparent cordiality in the commendation, and heightens it by additional instances of excellent qualities and virtuous deeds; but immediately expresses a profound regret, that so fine a character should be marred by such and such faults, and infirmities—faults and infirmities of which all present are utterly irgnorant, and ignorant would still have remained, had not its malicious compassion made the reluctant disclosure, or its well concealed wickedness invented the contemptible slander. Oh, its love is that of the father of lies, its sanctimonious sighs are blasts from hell, and its message from God is a dagger. Love is fraught with divine peace and contentment; envy is as miserable as it is hypocritical. Miserable it must be, for guilt is always miserable, and no other misery is so much like that of Satan, as the misery of an envious spirit. Hating and hated, can it know anything of a good conscience and a cheerful mind? Deceitful, treacherous, must it not be like the troubled sea that cannot rest? Baffled and chagrined, will it not become desperate, and turn its fangs upon itself, and devour its own vitals? "There is no peace," saith my God, "to the wicked."

The envious man makes himself wretched because another is happy, casts himself down because another is lifted up. He is a hopeless Saul falling upon his own sword, because he cannot thrust it through a Philistine; an ill-natured dog, loosing his own portion by snapping at that of another. His neighbor's rest breaks his repose, and the sight of his neighbor's paradise makes his own home a hell. He consumes himself, and delights in pining, till he seems no more a man, but a lean and hungry carcass quickened by a fiend. The wine of your cup is the wormwood of his, and the songs of love and joy that ring out from his rival's dwelling jars the chords of his uncongenial nature like hoarse dissonances of the damned. "Envy," writes Bishop Hall, "is a source of endless vexation, an instrument of self-torture, a rottenness in the bones, a burning ulcer of the soul, a crime which partaking of the guilt, partakes as largely of the misery of hell." And it is more wretched because it is incapable of reconciliation. Its object has committed no offense, and can offer no satisfaction; has inflicted no injury, and can make no reparation. The evil is all in the breast of the envious person himself, therefore beyond the reach of any of the ordinary remedies of society. The wound bleeds on forever because there is no balm for its healing. It is the gnawing of a worm that can never die, the raging of a fire that can never be quenched, the revel of a fiend in the human heart whom no power but love can expel. Were I required to construct a hell, of absolute and most exquisite suffering, for the punishment of lawless passion, I would sink no bottomless pit, forge no everlasting chain, make no instruments of physical torture, but would fill the guilty soul with unmingled and unmitigated envy, and take away all means, and opportunity of wreaking its satanic hate upon any human victim, and remove all counteractive agencies, all alleviating influences, all hope of reversion or remedy, and leave the reprobate spirit alone with its baffled lust forever. Were not this a sufficient hell even for the devil and his angels? Oh, who can but pity the man that is under the despotism of this cruel and accursed spirit—a spirit that is essential enmity to the God of love, hating holiness, quarreling with providence, warring against human welfare and striving to defeat the glorious issues of redemption. Such a one carries a living hell in his heart, and the tyranny of this foul tormenter, confirmed by invincible habit, must be the immortal sting of the second death, more terrible than outer darkness, or external torture, or surging lake of fire, or taunt and fury of triumphant fiends. Love envieth not, love and envy are as much opposed to each other as light and darkness. Love is from above, envy is from beneath. Love is the fruit of the Spirit, envy is the work of the flesh. Love is the outgrowth of the new heart, envy is the product of the carnal mind. Love is as pure as the mountain stream, envy is as foul as the city sewer. Love is as harmless as the gentle dove, envy is as deadly as the viper's fang. Love is as tranquil as the summer evening; envy is as restless as the troubled sea. Love is as tender as an angel, envy is as heartless and as cruel as a demon. Love is the spirit of Christ and the temper of heaven, envy is the rankling selfishness which makes the woes of the lost, the wormwood and gall transfused through all the faculties and feelings, of a reprobate immortality. No two principles could be more antagonistic and irreconcilable. Where love resides, envy must be a stranger. Love cannot grudge the beloved object anything that he enjoyes. The charitable man cannot be grieved at another's good, nor entertain toward him any ill-will on account of it. Sooner might life wed death, or noonday embrace midnight. Content with his own lot and thankful for his own comforts, such a one is pleased with the disposition which Divine Providence has made of its bounty and blessings to all. He rejoices in his neighbor's welfare as if it were his own. Joy and gladness flow into his heart from all the happy objects around him, and every blessed thing within the range of his observation becomes to him a benediction. Like the bread and fish in the hands of the chosen twelve, the good is multiplied by distribution, and the more there are to share, the larger the supply. If I possess this heavenly principle, my interest is identified with that of my brother, and the more brightly his lamp burns, the more easily mine is lighted. By the light of love we see the evil of envy. How hideous a thing it is, how hateful to holy eyes, how unworthy of a rational and redeemed nature, how inconsistent in those who profess a religion of love and look for their reward in heaven. Ah, with what unseemly rancor does it not fire the hearts of warring sectaries and schismatics, with what deceit of unrighteousness, what bitterness of controversy, what fierceness of revenge? How deplorable is this spirit in the church of Christ, when the tide of partisan feeling runs high, and the contention of noisy factions is like the roar of conflicting waves! Oh, but this is the sin that dispossessed the seraphim and fired the flaming gulf. Born in heaven, but soon cast down to hell, to heaven it still aspires, making the vaults of hell ring with the doleful clamor of its discontent. The vilest offspring of Satan, it inherits the ambition; and while it spurns not the lowest place nor scorns the meanest breast, it would storm the celestial temple, and inflame the second seraph at the altar with ill-will toward the first, and make the happy millions hate the God of love because they are not higher than the Highest. And what plea can the culprit make for its audacity? How will it vindicate its invasion of Jehovah's rights and its war upon the welfare of his creatures? Other vices have their palliations, but what provocation has envy, except another's prosperity? Intemperance pleads an imperious appetite; but what appetite has envy, except for mischief and for misery? Sensuality pleads the frequency of powerful temptation; but what temptation has envy, except the malevolence of unmitigated selfishness? Even robbery, burglary, forgery, perjury, and murder, may plead their necessity, and their profits; but what necessity has envy, except the prompting of its own depravity? And what profit, except the wages of unrighteousness? Nay, it is a sin without a defense, excuse, or reason—speechless as the unrobed intruder at the marriage feast; and its portion must be the outer darkness, with the weeping and wailing, and gnashing of teeth.

"LEAGUE OF FAITH AND ORDER."

A Reply to Rev. J. T. Lewis.

By Rev. V. C. Curtis.

While assisting one of our pastors in a revival meeting on a circuit, a brother handed me a copy of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, issue of Aug. 11, 1927, and called my attention to an article in the same entitled, "League of Faith and Order," by Rev. J. Tillery Lewis, our pastor at Tupelo, Miss. In this article, Brother Lewis gives me the honor, though it seems that he did not intend it as an honor, of connecting my name with the organization of the "League of Faith and Order" of the North Mississippi Conference.

It is not my custom to engage in newspaper controversies, but since this article has so many personal thrusts, charges, misrepresentations and ugly insinuations, I feel that it is incumbent upon me to reply. However, I will say to Brother Lewis and to the readers of the Advocate that this will end the controversy, which seems to be personal, as far as I am concerned, unless it is to correct any misstatement of facts that might be made in the future or answer any additional charges. I reserve the right of self-defense.

We will now notice some of the chrages that he makes. He claims to have "suffered" at my hands. He says: "I understand that others of my honest and faithful brethren have suffered a like fate at the hands of Brother Curtis." He seems to think this injury was very grave, for he refers to me as "friend or foe." It has never been my intention to injure any brother, whether he was a minister or layman, and if he had not gone into detail into describing his supposed injury, I would be very much perturbed. It seems that the burden of his grievance is that we did not advise with him before taking any steps to organize a League of Faith and Order in the North Mississippi Conference. He does not find any objection to the League except that such an organization in the North Mississippi Conference is unnecessary. But we wonder why he should take umbrage and consider it a personal injury that amounts to "suffering" because he was not the first to be asked to join a useless organization? It did not occur to us that it was necessary to get his consent before making some inquiries and deciding whether or not we would organize. Of course we may learn better later.

But he asks: "Am I suspected of being a heretic?" and in the last lines of his article he refers to "the questionable method especially when that method prejudges a brother to be a heretic without a hearing." The argument that a man is prejudged to be a heretic because he is left off the mailing list is so fallacious that I will not take the space to answer it further than to say there are thousands of true Methodists in the North Mississippi Conference who have not yet been asked to join, and who have not thought of being even suspected of heresy. We wonder why Brother Lewis is so sensitive on this point?

But the most remarkable feature of this letter is the postscript in which he says: "After the above article was in the hands of the publishers, I received an invitation from Mrs. D. P. Wright, secretary of the League, to join the League." It will be noted that there was no effort to recall the letter, but he wrote the editor and asked him to attach this to the article, "The League of Faith and Order." This reminds me of the story of the farmer who bought a sausage grinder from a mail-order house. When the machine came, he failed to find the handle. He was of a suspicious nature and at once wrote the house that if they did not send the handle, they were not honest; but as the sense of injury increased he called them frauds and he grew more excited, and before he had finished the screed, he denounced them as thieves, and said if they did not send that handle at once, he would have them put in jail. The letter was signed and ready for mail, when he added this very significant postscript: "You need not send the handle; I found the thing wrapped in the bottom of the box." Brother Lewis found his invitation in the mail, but he wrote the postscript to the letter and sent it on to press.

He complains further that he did not get the invitation from me but from Mrs. D. P. Wright, the secretary. We do not understand why he should object to receiving the invitation from her, since she is the proper officer to send it. She is one of our most prominent and capable women. She is the daughter of a Methodist preacher and has been active in the work of the church all of her life. She was organist of her church for many years, and has been serving on the board of stewards. She has been generous with her means. She has been educating a number of boys and girls who were not able to educate themselves, and has been very liberal to the institutions of the church. She has given a thousand dollars at a time to the Superannuate Endowment Fund, and has been the largest contributor to the running expenses of her church. When a new building was to be erected in her home town, Greenwood, Miss., she headed the list of subscriptions with $10,000 on an enteprise that was to cost less than $50,000 when the church had more than a thousand members. She built a chapel in East Greenwood with her own money which is known as Price Memorial. We do not see why Brother Lewis should object to receiving the invitation from her when she is the secretary and I am in the private ranks of the League.

But Brother Lewis objects further, that some of the preachers have received at least two letters urging them to join the League. If any preacher has ever received one letter urging him to join the League it did not come from my office and was not done with my knowledge or consent. Brother Lewis seems to be very careless in his statements, for he says in the first paragraph of his article that I sent a pamphlet, which pamphlet the preacher was requested to sign. Now Brother Lewis evidently had a copy of the leaflet before him when he wrote that and there is no such request on it. There is an invitation printed in parenthesis in these words: "If you will become a member of this League, sign the pledge and return." There is quite a difference between giving an opportunity to join and requesting them to sign a pledge. There is no request there, unless they decide themselves that they wanted to become members.

In response to numerous requests from both preachers and laymen, I sent out the leaflet that he refers to, the contents of which he finds no fault except he thinks it not necessary. We were reliably informed that two of our bishops had joined a similar League, and we thought there must be some good reason for it. Later a letter was sent to a few asking them what they thought of the need of an organization of that kind, and in that letter it was specifically stated that they were not urged to join. The response was so generous and favorable that we proceeded at once with the preliminary organization. Only one letter was received, saying that the author did not think the organization necessary, and that letter came from the same district in which Brother Lewis is located. As good and true men, and one lady, as are to be found in the church were selected as officers to serve till the permanent organization is made. Brother Lewis claims that it was already organized before he got the invitation. It so happened that we had so many to select from that it was not possible to give all an office, but if Brother Lewis joins now, I am sure that when the permanent officers are elected the members will give his candidacy due consideration.

Brother Lewis calls attention to the note that says: "This is not a secret organization, but we do not care to have any special publicity given to our proceedings." That was our judgment then, and we have no reason to change it now. We do not think it best to have any great parade over what we are doing and distract the attention of the church, by holding rallies, public speakings, etc. The League has a specific purpose, and that purpose is clearly stated in the copy of the constitution that Brother Lewis received. If people who claim to be orthodox will stop putting into office with their votes, either directly or indirectly, those who acknowledge that they are out of harmony with the doctrines of our church, our troubles with Modernism will cease. If the Modernists are reduced to private ranks, there are not a sufficient number to give the church much trouble. The Modernists have been administering and some of them have been manipulating, while the conservatives have been defending the faith with argument and voting for Modernists.

But Brother Lewis indirectly accuses me of ulterior and sinister motives. He says: "If the purpose of the League is what it appears to be on its face, why was I left off the mailing list?" But this accusation does not involve me only, but all those who are members of the League. In reply will say that its purpose is plainly expressed, and it seems that it is this expressed purpose to which Brother Lewis objects.

He accuses me of conduct not becoming to a Christian. He says: "If Brother Curtis will openly and above board as becometh a Christian show the need of such an organization in the North Mississippi Conference, I will gladly join him and others in the League." I will ask the reader to weigh these charges and decide for himself whether or not there is anything in them that would put me out of line with Christian conduct. If it is a crime, if it is or is not consistent, to try to stand by my ordination vows, I will have to plead guilty. This, I admit, I have been trying to do.

But Brother Lewis uses the ugly word "surreptitious" more times than one. We cannot help but wonder if Brother Lewis knows the meaning and import of that word? I would rather think he did not know its meaning than to think he deliberately charged a brother with what it implies, especially when we are hearing so much prattle about the brotherly spirit.

He objects to the League because he says there is no heresy in the North Mississippi Conference. But Brother Lewis is strong against the heretic, for he says: "No enemy is a greater menace to our faith than the heretic." If Brother Lewis thinks that way about it, it seems he would not object to taking due precautions. And since all are agreed, what possible harm could come of such an organization? Is it not better to lock the stable door before the horse is stolen? Why should the League cause any friction or division whatever, since all are of one mind, according to Brother Lewis?

But Brother Lewis can read and he knows that there is not a word in that constitution about the North Mississippi Conference, unless there are heretics in it. He knows further that there is a general movement on in different parts of the church to form organizations to preserve the faith of our fathers, and this is a part of that general movement.

We wonder if Brother Lewis will take the stand that there is none in official position in our church who are not in accord with the fundamental principles of the Christian religion as expressed in the creedal statement in the constitution of the League? If he should he will do more for them than they will do for themselves. It has been published by some of these that the Old Testament is folk lore and fables. A presiding elder announced in a recent sermon, according to press dispatches, that it was unnecessary to believe the Bible. Others in official position have said that what Jesus knew about God he learned from the Old Testament. But it seems that Brother Lewis "scented" something not long since that had the odor of heresy, judging by what he had to say through the columns of this Advocate, in the issue of March 17, 1927, concerning the action of the Methodist Educational Association in Memphis last February in regard to the anti-evolution legislation in tax-supported schools. This involves members of the North Mississippi Conference. After passing some other caustic criticism, here is what he says: "I submit that since the legislatures of Tennessee and Mississippi passed laws against teaching in the State schools the Darwinian, or brute origin, theory of evolution, and since the Arkansas legislature then in session was thought to be preparing to pass laws against the brute origin of man similar to those passed in Tennessee and Mississippi, therefore it behooved the Southern Educational Association assembled in Memphis, Feb. 8-10, to make plain to all parties concerned that they did not endorse the Darwinian theory of evolution. This, the framers of the resolution refused to do. * * * On the other hand, if there be a disposition of our educators, either in church or State, to teach as a fact an alleged theory of atheistic science which is but a hypothesis, I am in favor of taking any fair and constitutional means to prohibit said agnostic and atheistic teaching. * * * Unless the framers of the said resolutions desired an atheistic interpretation of the resolution, it strikes me that their boasted scholarship showed but little judgment either in their selecting words to express their thoughts, or of the disposition of human nature to make whatever merchandise possible of what men say." Then to make it more impressive the article was signed officially thus: "Signed: J. Tillery Lewis, President Board of Education, North Mississippi Conference." (See New Orleans Advocate, March 17, Page 4.)

His article raises a number of questions that we will not attempt to discuss, but merely mention them: If Brother Lewis is orthodox himself, and we are not making the charge that he is not, why should he object so vigorously to the organization of the League? If he felt grieved that he had not been invited to join, why did he not withdraw the article after he received the invitation? If he was opposed to the League on any ground, why should he make a personal attack on me through the columns of the Conference organ?

In spite of all that he has said, I do not think he meant anything serious when he said, "My kingdom for a Solomon to tell me just what to do." Some may have an idea that the kingdom is their private property, but we do not think that Brother Lewis meant this. We are inclined to think that he had been reading one of Shakespeare's plays and remembered something about "A horse, a horse! my kingdom for a horse," and he thought that would be classical and sound well. Anyway, we give him the benefit of the doubt.

Yours for the preservation of the faith of our fathers,

"JESUS WEPT."

By H. Walter Featherstun, D.D.

On the eastern slope of Olivet, two miles from Jerusalem, was the village of Bethany, the home of Martha and Mary and Lazarus, the family so loved by Jesus. To this quiet village home he often went to rest from the toils of his awful mission, or to lodge while attending the sacred feasts and other religious gatherings at Jerusalem. Many beautiful events of the highest social life passed with him in this Bethany home, when he turned aside from the overburdening labors of his mission, to rest his weary soul and body, and to be soothed by "that angel of comfort to the burdened soul," the ministry of lovely womanhood. Two such events are detailed by the evangelists; others are suggested.

The time came when in that Bethany home occurred that which finds a response in almost every human heart and a counterpart in almost every human home:

"There is no flock however watched and tended
But one dead lamb is there—
There is no fireside howsoe'er defended,
But has one vacant chair."

The Bethany home was broken; and its melody was stilled.

"The dead was Lazarus—
The burial was over, and the night
Fell upon Bethany—and morn and noon
And comforters and mourners went their way,
But death staid on."

It stays when it comes, and no sunburst, save that out of heaven, can lift its shadows from the homes and the hearts over which they have settled. Jesus was teaching at Bethabara, away eastward beyond the Jordan, when this grief fell on the Bethany home. Four days later, he came. He met Martha, with her mild reproaches and arguments—then he met Mary, tender and tearful; and with them the hollow-hearted professional mourners. He and they turned toward the burial cave where the dead Lazarus lay. "Jesus wept."

There is something supremely sweet in the fact that Jesus left his great work at Bethabara and hastened to Martha and Mary in this time of need and gloom. The calling of Lazarus from the grave a little later was a great display of divine power within his grasp; but sweeter than the one and greater than the other, stands enshrined

"The imperishable record: Jesus wept.
He wept beside the grave of Lazarus;
He wept lamenting doomed Jerusalem;
He wept with agonizing groans beneath
The olives of Gethsemane."

The tears of Jesus are the fullest and highest and truest expression of his humanity that history records. The fact of his humanity is an all-important fact. That he, by suffering in human stead, expiated human guilt must be put so clearly, so simply, so strongly before men that all may be able to apprehend it; for men are moral agents, and must continue to be such so long as they are intelligences; and their salvation of necessity depends upon their free choice to accept and trust the redemption thus wrought for them. This great fact of expiation of human sin by Jesus could not have been made so plainly and forcibly known to men had there been no incarnation of the Christ for his redeeming work and passion. That Christ is man as well as he is God is made indispensable to the Plan of Salvation.

There was danger, especially among his earlier followers that they would lose sight of his humanity altogether. They who saw him, like an imponderable ghost, tread Gennesaret, touch or speak the dead to life and the lame and the blind, and the deaf and the sick to wholesomeness or health, command a storm to a calm, transform water to wine, and feed five thousand on the rations of five, were in danger of supposing him to be some apparition of pure deity in human disguise, utterly disconnected with everything human and earthly. Hence we find him, and the evangelists who have written his story, constantly stressing the fact that he was man as well as God. He spoke of himself as "the Son of man." Every fact of his birth, and earthly relationships and dependencies, and his man-like characteristics was carefully recorded—and stressed evidently that all the world might know that this world-redeeming Son of God was also a veritable man. The weeping Christ stands out most clearly and emphatically the human Christ. Pliny, the old Roman historian and naturalist, said: "Man is the weeping animal." Schiller, the German poet, said: "Tears are the ever-enduring proof of humanity: whose eye is dry was never born of woman." Jesus, the Christ, the very Son of God—as none other, is exactly—standing a weeping mourner at Lazarus' grave, and brooding tearful over Israel's impending doom, presents to angelhood, as well as to us, the startling mystery of the Incarnation in all its realness—to us men and women the thrice blessed truth that ours is a Divine human Christ, touched with the feeling of our infirmities"—a Savior with a human side to his nature. We needed this lesson, and we have it. As we wonder at this mysterious union of God and man, we catch a glimpse of the meaning of that creation written so long ago: "God created man in his own image" (Gen. 1:26); and we read with new light the dictum of David: "Thou hast made him but a little lower than God" (Psalm 8:5, Revised Version).

The tears of Jesus are not only an expression of the humanity of Christ, but also of the humaneness of God. Dean Trench has said: "A God of tears was a higher conception than the heathen world could reach." With all their man-like gods and woman-like goddesses the old paganisms never dreamed a picture analagous to this. Olympus was peopled by Grecian myth with gods that loved goddesses and women, gods that hated and wreaked vengance, ate, slept, got drunk and quarreled with all the foolish ardor and reckless abandon of weakest humanity; but there were none that wept as "Jesus wept." Euripides relates that the wretched Hippolitus thus implored the goddess, Diana:

"Behold me, mistress!
I have such misery."

She replied: "I see: but my eyes shed no tears over justice."

Christ on Olivet "wept over justice" coming to doomed Jerusalem. What a contrast! One was a cold and stately conception of deity produced by Greek poetry and myth; the other is the real incarnation of the real God, who is our God, all athrob and aglow with a warm matchless love, unmeasured and unknown and undreamed of by the imbruted pagan and the groveling infidel. A God and Father of us all—a God of infinite humaneness.

Out of this infinite and most blessed humaneness we understand how there comes such sympathy, so akin to love, that presents to us Jesus at Bethany weeping just as he was about to call the dead Lazarus back to life. It was not mere sorrow over the death of a friend that made him weep. He had come from Bethabara to raise the dead man back to life. The hearts of Martha and Mary, who knew not his purpose, the fact of "death and all our woe," the result of our fall, the ruin of man—all of this came before him in its awful realness. There were millions of others who would not until the Judgment Day hear his call to life eternal; and his heart was stirred over the awful facts of sin and death and all the results of them. He saw beyond this lone case millions of other broken homes that he would not mend as he would this one, and millions of breaking hearts that he could not heal, but would break on under the tread of death. The human Christ was so moved by the vision of it all that he wept. These tears at Behany, and again on Olivet, and again in Gethsemane, give a touch to the picture of Redemption that can mean nothing else than a great unfathomable depth of love for fallen men—

"Christ's tears, the awful language eloquent
Of infinite love, far, far too big for words!"

Oh! how the grandeur of the God-man grows in the strong sweet light of his tears!

"The bright and spotless heir of endless glory
Wept o'er the woes of those he came to save:
And angels wondered when they heard the story
That he, who conquered death wept o'er the grave."

Is it true that thirty-three years of self-imposed exile from his home and throne of celestial beauty and splendor to this low world of weariness and want and woes and wickedness were not enough to tell how much he loved us? He healed every sufferer he met, comforted every mourner he found—was all of this not enough to picture the love he bore for us? Calvary with its sacrifice of suffering and death was not quite enough to body forth a full vision of his love, vast, strong and tender—a softer, sweeter, surer, story of his love was to be told: and so the Christ, Savior of men and women, the God-man, Jesus, wept.

"SECRET PRAYER."

How I did enjoy the article in last week's Advocate by Rev. W. R. Lott, of Amory, Miss., on "Secret Prayer."

One of the brightest memories of the recent meetings I have been in was at Shiloh camp meeting, after Brother Will Griffin, who had been preaching with me, left on Saturday morning before the meeting was to close the following Sunday night, and feeling the burden much more after he left, I took a long walk away from the camp grounds and got alone with nature and nature's God, and had time to think; and then had time, and felt free to get down on my knees, speak freely to God, in secret, about the closing of the camp, and also, I was drawn out to pray for my own charge. What a wonderful and blessed time the Lord and I did have there in that secluded and secret spot! "Pray through?" Yes, blessed be God! It was a transfiguration experience. I thought of the day of prayer that Finney had on the ocean that he so often referred to as the day when God gave him the assurance of the great revivals he would have before they came! "Prayer changes things!" It will turn the tide and swing Methodism back into her God-given mission! It will aid more than any other one thing in successfully winding up a good Conference year. My own faith is much stronger for a good wind-up since that heavenly experience with my Heavenly Friend. Oh! "that men would pray everywhere, lifting up holy hands, without wrath and doubting!"

THE THINGS NEEDFUL.

By Rev. W. B. Hollingsworth.

"Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life and we believe thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God" (John 6:68-69).

If I mistake not the above was uttered at a time when many had left Jesus and gone their own selfish way. The testing time for many had come, and most of the people refused to pay the price. Not only was that true then, but throughout the Old Testament we find again and again cases where people would not pay the price, and always out of the heat of controversy and argument there emerged a few who carried on and kept the great cause from going to a lasting death. So it is to-day. Many there are who are strong in argument and much learned in logic and controversy, who lose sight of the big thing we are to do.

Jesus Christ, in just a few words, summed up the whole thing for us when he said: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul and with all thy mind; this is the first and great commandmnt, and the second is like unto it. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets. As I see it, these things are basic, and I am persuaded that they count for much in the life of our home, our State and our nation.

If there is needed to-day one thing more than another in this America of ours, it is not dissension, it is not strife, it is not discord, but it is the need of a large size dose of old-time religion in the hearts and lives of folks so that they will come to realize, as did Simon Peter, that there is none other than God who can remove the doubts and fears and misunderstandings of mankind.

As I look back over the years that have gone, and think of the twilight time that followed the day, when the family gathered about to talk to God before the hour for retiring, I seem to see my good old mother on her knees with a something round about her head not made with hands, as she poured out her soul to that wonderful Christ in petitions for us children, that he would guide us and keep all along the way. There was no controversy there. Just simple faith, that's all. Never a doubt what he had done before he would do again, and so I have come to the conclusion long since that if the home does its part in the shaping of the young life entrusted to its care that all through life, even to the grave, we will realize that there is none other to whom we can go except the Lord Jesus Christ, for we will know indeed that he has the words of eternal life. We will know that he is the Son of the living God.

2. Then, too, not only do I feel that the homes of America must be grounded in this great conception of Jesus Christ, but also we must come to know Jesus Christ in the revelation of himself in us, when we put to the test the things taught us. Oh, when he reaches out to us when we are in trouble and doubt and tribulation and speaks, "Peace be with you," or "Fear not," how our hearts do glow and the cross is lifted, and there we stand face to face with him, and again we come to know that he is indeed the Christ.

3. Then, too, in the Book of books, I find him. Long ago in the quiet of the old home, as I cuddled at my mother's knee, she taught me, as my understandiing would permit, some of the great truths that he gave to us. She tried to mould me after the pattern given to her by Christ, and while it is true that the years have moved and tossed me much, still I thank God that I can go to the Book, that wonderful Book, and there find the words of eternal life.

4. Then again I am sure he is not concerned about the bickerings of the world. He gave off the personality of God, and likewise we are to reflect his personality, and when the men of the world see us living this Jesus life and realize what it does for a man they are much more apt to accept the Lord Jesus Christ as a personal Lord and Saviour than when they see us bickering back and forth about such things as teedle-de-dee and teedle-de-dum.

I am reminded of a story I read one time: "It seems that a ship was caught in a severe storm at sea. The lightning flashed, the thunder rolled, the rain came down in torrents and the wind blew a hurricane. At last the captain ordered all hands below and battened down the hatches. After a time one of the passengers became concerned, and stealing up the ladder he worked at a hatch until it gave way. He went up on deck. Grasping the life line he worked himself towards the stern of the ship. The storm had increased in fury, and it was all he could do to hold to the line. The ship staggered about like a crazy thing. Then came a flash of lightning and the passenger beheld the pilot lashed to the tiller post, and there on the face of the pilot was a smile even in the fury of the storm. Slowly the passenger worked his way back to the hatch, and then he literally fell down the ladder, so great was his hurry. Into the presence of the crew and passengers he dashed and yelled as loud as he could, 'Don't worry, it's all right; don't worry, it's all right. I've seen the face of our pilot and he smiled at me.'"

Oh, may it come about that when the eventide of life draws round about us and the heart is stilled in chilly death, we may look on the face of our Pilot and there see a smile for us. Then we will know even as we are known. The clouds will break away. The light will shine in. We will be like him in glory. We will abide forever in that mansion in the Lord's house.

THE LEAGUE OF FAITH AND ORDER—AN APPEAL.

The constitution of the League of Faith and Order of the North Mississippi Conference has just come to my attention. Surprise is a very feeble word with which to express my reaction. I doubt whether a more un-Methodistic, and, judging by Methodist standards, a more unscriptural document was ever presented for the endorsement of Methodist preachers and laymen. Are we to have an Ecclesiastical Ku Klux Klan? Has the Southern Methodist Church turned to Calvin? Is Methodism to be slain in the house of her friends?

Brethren, before you sign the pledge attached to this constitution study very carefully the Creedal Statement embodied therein. Is that Methodist doctrine? Read in your 1926 Discipline, paragraphs 653 and 656, the fifth Article of Religion, and the following passages in your Bibles: Matt. 18:1-5; 19:13-16; Mark 10:13-16; Luke 18:15-17; Eph. 6:4; II Tim. 3:15; Romans 5:17-19. Do these teach "Plenary Inspiration?" Do we believe God makes men holy? Does the Methodist church stand for "The universal necessity of regeneration?"

"The universal necessity of regeneration" is the revival of the old Augustinian doctrine of "Total Depravity," with its damnation of infants and all the rest, as taught by John Calvin, of which Wesley said, "Calvin's God is my devil." Of course, if our children are born "little devils" they must be regenerated, but Methodism teaches that, "All men are brought into this world in Christ the Redeemer, heirs of life eternal and subjects of the saving grace of the Holy Spirit."

If God could make the first man "holy," he can make any man holy, he can make all men holy. With all reverence, we Methodists say God cannot make any one holy. He can and did, we believe, make man pure and innocent, but innocence is not holiness. The Calvinist or other who says God can make men holy, has no answer for the atheistic challenge, "If God can make men holy why does he not do so? It is either that he cannot or will not. If he cannot, he is not infinite in power. If he will not, he is not infinite in goodness." The Methodists' answer is that God does not make men holy. When he created man a free moral agent, God limited his own power. His power is limited, but self-limited. He gives us the capacity to achieve holiness, but the achievement is ours. "Holiness is not a work but a working."

Albert Taylor Bledsoe was, without doubt, the greatest expounder of Methodist doctrines, especially our Arminian position, which our country has produced. He wrote before this Fundamental-Modernist controversy was born. There has never been a question as to his ability, sincerity, or devotion to either Methodism or the Bible. Read Bledsoe's Theodicy and his articles in the Southern Review on "Original Sin, the Condition of Infants," and "The Nature of Sin and Holiness." When you have read all these, then sign the pledge if you want to, but do not say you are a Methodist. "Good morals demand nothing less."

MONROE DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Monroe District Conference will convene at Delhi, La., Sept. 19 and 20. The evening of the 19th, at 8 o'clock, Rev. Ellis Smith, of Tallulah, will preach the opening sermon. Wednesday, the 20th, the business of the conference will be transacted. At 11 o'clock, Wednesday, Rev. M. S. Monk, of Monroe, will occupy the pulpit. The conference will close Wednesday evening with a sermon by Rev. J. E. Selfe, of Lake Providence.

N. E. JOYNER, P. E.

We are the stewards, not the owners, of our property, be it money, brains, or that greatest of all personal wealth, the love of God. This love of God is more valuable than all our other property, and we must share that, too. The ignorant, the evildoers, the wandering, all those who have not been able to know Jesus, must be given some of our love and knowledge of God. The church cannot keep this great treasure unless it shares it.—Bishop William F. Oldham.

The Home Circle

MY PETS.

By Edna Smith Derean.

I've six small creamy balls of fluff
And each one says, "Cheep, cheep."
My daddy brought 'em from the farm
And says they're mine to keep.

Their eyes are just as black and bright
As two wee beads cut round.
And, Oh, I'm sure a sweeter gift
My dad could not have found.

My mother cooks an egg real hard
And mashes it with bread
And lets me feed 'em every day,
For chickens must be fed.

And when our sour milk gets thick
I put some in a pan
And my! they gobble it right up.
They eat just all they can.

I know I will not want to kill
My pets when they grow old.
If giants killed me when I'm big
I bet my dad would scold.

And yet he says my pets will be
An awful nuisance then,
And there's no place to keep 'em when
Each chick becomes a hen.

To-night I just will pray real hard
For God to show me where
To put my pets when they get big.
I'll say the longest prayer.

And if there isn't room enough
I'll pray: "God, keep them small."
I know I cannot really have
My chickens killed at all.

THE PRINCESS' GARDEN.

By Edith M. Larrabee.

Once upon a time there was a little princess named Viola who wanted a garden all her own, and because she wanted it very much she ran expectantly to the head gardener to ask if he would give her one. He listened kindly, but replied: "I am so busy caring for the great grounds that I have not time to tend a little garden, so I can't give you one."

"My father, the king, will give it to me," declared the princess, haughtily, but when she asked him he only echoed the gardener's words.

"Go to the little man in the forest," sang a bird from a tree top.

"Oh!" exclaimed Viola, "will he give me a garden?"

"Try and see," was the reply.

The princess ran into the forest until she came to the cave where the little man lived. She told him how much she wanted just a little garden of her very own.

"You shall have one," he promised, "but you must make it yourself."

"How?" asked the princess, in surprise.

"You shall learn. Now come with me."

Viola followed to an open space in the woods. The little man marked off a small plot.

"This is your garden," he told Viola. "Come every day and see what you find in it."

The little princess ran wonderingly back to the palace. On the way she spied the little lame son of the butler sitting under a tree. His face was sorrowful and his eyes red as if he had been crying.

"What is the matter, Fritz?" asked the princess.

"My kitten is dead," answered the boy, "It was the only pet I had."

"Oh! I'm sorry," sympathized Viola.

She thought very hard on her way home, and decided how she could make the poor little boy happy again. Taking two of her young rabbits, she carried them to the cottage where Fritz lived.

"I've brought you some more pets," she said to him.

The lame boy was delighted. He caught the little creatures in his arms and pressed them close to him as he said tremulously, "It is more than kind of Your Highness."

The next day, on going to her garden, Viola found that one corner was filled with lovely velvety pansies. "Something has grown already," she cried. "How beautiful they are!"

That afternoon she played in the big garden while her nurse wrote letters under the shade of some trees. She enjoyed this for a time, but when she grew tired of it she asked, "May I go over there by the pond?"

"No," repiled the nurse. "You must not go there alone. You might fall in."

Princess Viola was much displeased with the refusal. Presently the nurse rose, saying, "I must leave you for a few moments. I want you to stay right here until I return."

"I will," promised the princess, but as soon as the nurse was gone she looked longingly toward the pond.

"I'll just run down and back before she comes back," she thought. "She won't know."

When Viola reached the pond she stopped to throw into it several stones. These splashed the water splendidly, but alas the sparkling drops wet her dress.

"Oh! I must go back," she exclaimed in alarm, and ran to her place beneath the trees, where she was once more at play when the nurse returned.

"You have been a good girl," was the nurse's comment. Then noticing the wet dress she asked, "How did it happen?"

Vioa did not know what to answer.

"Have you been to the pond?" was the next stern question, and the princess was obliged to confess that she had.

The following morning, when Viola looked at her garden, she saw an unsightly toadstool beside the pansies.

"I don't want that," she declared, and tried to pull it up, but it remained firm. She pulled and pulled, but it was of no use, and she ran back to the palace in tears.

Later in the day she wanted to take a long ride.

"No," answered her mother, the queen, when she made her request. "You are to be allowed to attend the musicale this evening, and I do not want you to be tired. You must rest now."

Princess Viola began to pout and cry, but she soon determined to make the best of her disappointment, and settled down to quiet game, happily singing.

The next morning, when she ran again to the garden, she found to her delight one side aglow with brilliant poppies. She clapped her hands and jumped up and down, crying, "Oh! oh! They are so cheerful, I love to look at them."

The next day it stormed, and the next and the next, until a week had gone by. Every morning the princess went to the window, only to find clouds and drizzling rain.

"I can't see my flowers to-day," she sighed, "but the sun will shine to-morrow, I am sure."

Throughout all this time Viola made no complaint, but waited patiently for the return of pleasant weather. At last one morning when she awoke the sunlight was streaming into her room. She could hardly wait to be out of doors. Running to her garden she saw with delight that one end was filled with a large plant of blue heliotrope. "This is the sweetest of all," she exclaimed, smelling the fragrant blossoms.

It was too bad her happiness could not have helped her to do right all day. When she reached home she found that her brother, the baby prince, had left his own toys and was playing with her favorite doll. Viola was so angry that she sruck him and made him cry. When she next visited her garden she saw a tall weed among the flowers. Like the toadstool, it would not come up.

Then Viola made a discovery. "When I do something good I have flowers, and when I do wrong I find weeds and mushrooms."

After this she tried very hard to do always the right things and was greatly pleased as her little plot became covered with bright spots of bloom. At length one day, when she saw it was filled, she ran to tell the little man about it.

"Did I not say that you must make it yourself?" he asked. "Keep on doing good deeds and everywhere there will spring up for you beautiful and fragrant flowers, but every wrong act will bring forth a worthless weed."

Years after Viola became queen of a great country, and was dearly loved by her people because she was so thoughtful and kind to every one. She had planted so many fragrant seeds in her heart that there was no room for the weeds of unkindness.—Story-tellers Magazine.

A MAINE DOG WHO EARNS HIS "KEEP."

This is the story of "Peggy," a beautiful collie dog who receives an annual salary as herd dog, earns extra bits by catching woodchucks on the side, and out of her earnings pays her board and other expenses.

Peggy lives at "The Willows," the farm owned by E. C. Patten in Topsham, Maine. She pays her way every year and has a small balance left. She gets 20 cents a week for driving the cows to pasture twice a day, and twenty cents for each woodchuck she brings in. In the fall of each year she gets an extra fifty cents for driving the farm cattle to Topsham fair.

Against Peggy's income a charge of $5 per year is made for board, and she is also debited with the cost of her annual license. She is able to buy herself a new collar every year and frequently spends some of her money for candy, of which she is very fond.

She is a busy dog, as most useful dogs are. Besides looking after the cows and sheep, she watches the Patten house against intruders, and any tough looking individual who tries getting into the house while the men are away had best beware.

Peggy frequently goes with the men to work on the roads or in the woods, Then she has her dinner put up in a pail just as the men do. Her sandwiches are every bit as good as theirs, and her frosted cake is cut from the same loaf. There have been times when some of the men in the crew have thought Peggy got a little better usage than they did in this respect.

The Patten farm also has a knowing cat, "Joe" by name, who is very fond of clams. A neighbor who knew of his fondness for them was at the farm one day and said: "Joe, we are going to have clams to-night at our house. Better come up and have some."

Sure enough, when the family were at supper, they heard a scratching noise at the door and there stood Joe. He had accepted the invitation and he got the clams.—Our Dumb Animals.

"TIME OUT."

The Man Shopper.

It is said that a very large man in Mississippi who is easily embarrassed in the presence of women was commissioned by his wife to buy her a shirt waist. Very reluctantly he entered a dry goods store and presently found himself before a saleslady whose hauteur almost took his breath away.

"I—I my wife— wants me to—buy her a—a shirt waist!" he stammered out.

The clerk looked him over from head to heels as she demanded sharply:

"What bust?"

The customer gave a little jump.

"Why—I don't know," he gasped. "I didn't hear anything!"—Exchange.

DIRECTIONS.

All checks and money orders should be made payable to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Communications pertaining to subscriptions and other business matters should be addressed to the Manager, or to the New Orleans Christian Advocate. The Printed Label on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after four weeks, notify us, and we will make it right.

Communications intended for the Editor should be directed to him at 512 Camp Street. Correspondents will observe the following rules: 1. Write on only one side of the paper. 2. If you have a typewriter, by all means use it; otherwise use a good quality of black ink. 3. Leave a space of at least two inches at the top of the first page; leave a margin of at least one inch on the left-hand side of the page; do not crowd the words and the lines together. 4. Take special pains to write proper names correctly and legibly. 5. Use letter paper if you can get it—not note paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

CONCERNING THE APPEAL FOR NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS.

On June 25 we made an appeal to the pastors and people of the Louisiana, Mississippi and North Mississippi Conferences for 1,200 new subscriptions at the regular rate of $2 to bring the Advocate through a period of financial stress, or until Sept. 1. No merchant wants charity, he wants business. The New Orleans Christian Advocate wants business, wants subscribers; it is not asking for charity from any of you. So we made the appeal. The 1,200 subscribers have not come, but in one respect the assistant is well satisfied. The appeal has demonstrated that subscriptions can be secured with just a little effort. Wherever any one has given any attention at all to the matter, subscriptions have been secured. The New Orleans District has its fifty new subscribers. Strangely enough the two Mississippi Conferences, which have been using the most of our space of late, and have been submitting articles the last week or two that required more space than we were able to give, have altogether sent in not more than a handful of subscriptions. Comparisons are always odious, but the above is rather strange, isn't it? Better get busy, brethren, and help us to give the products of your own pens a wider reading. We can do the best possible to give all of you space, but we cannot manufacture subscribers. We have to depend upon those who are in intimate touch with the people on the field to secure the most of our subscriptions. H.

SCHOOL AND ASSEMBLY AT CAMP GROUNDS.

Last week Rev. W. H. Saunders, and this week Dr. C. W. Crisler, have given potent reasons why we should have a good school and an assembly on the Camp Grounds at Biloxi. There seem to be almost insuperable difficulties in the way of selling this property. It would therefore seem wise to get to work at developing the property as a great seashore assembly and as the place of a Junior college. Like Mount Zion, it is beautiful for situation, and would make an ideal place for a great seashore assembly. We have now two mountain assemblies in favored sections of the church. Why not have an assembly for the whole church on the coast? Such an assembly would be easy of access to the people of Alabama, Florida, Louisiana and Mississippi, and should be able to draw people from all parts of the church. The coast is drawing people from the north who come in pursuit of pleasure and recreation. Why should not the coast draw our people as a place to enjoy both pleasure and profit? We have always felt that the loss of this magnificent property by our church would be a veritable tragedy. H.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Mr. R. P. Neblett, Jr., son of our pastor at Kosciusko, Miss., will be a freshman at Millsaps this fall.

Rev. R. G. Lord, of Coahoma, Miss., recently assisted Rev. W. W. Milligan, pastor of the Kosciusko circuit in a meeting at Williamsville.

Rev. E. M. Morgan, of the Memphis Conference, held services on last Sunday morning in the tabernacle on the Seashore Camp Grounds.

Rev. W. Winans Drake, D.D., our pastor at Ruston, La., has just returned from a pleasant vacation, the greater part of which he spent with his brother in Georgia.

The editor is in recept of a card sent from Paris by Rev. Julian S. Duncan, a member of the North Mississippi Conference, stationed as a missionary in Rio de Janeiro.

President D. B. Raulins, of Mansfield College, preached at First Methodist Church, Shreveport, on last Sunday morning and evening, in the absence of the pastor, Dr. Goodrich, at Junaluska.

Rev. Alonzo Monk, Jr., one of our general evangelists, will assist Rev. R. P. Neblett, pastor of First Methodist Church, Kosciusko, Miss., in a series of meetings, beginning on Sunday, Oct. 18.

Rev. R. W. Vaughan, superintendent of the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage, called at the Advocate office last Monday. Brother Vaughan preached in Pineville last Sunday morning and at Alexandria at night.

Brother Howard Williams, celebrated lay evangelist, began a union meeting at Ruston, La., the past Sunday. All the churches of the town are co-operating in this meeting. The "John Brown Tabernacle" is being used for the meeting.

Rev. W. W. Graves, of Columbia, Miss., who superannuated two years ago on account of broken health, recently came to New Orleans to go under the treatment of a specialist, and our last report was that his complete recovery would require some time.

Rev. T. M. Bradley, presiding elder of the Sardis District, of the North Mississippi Conference, in sending in his fourth round, writes that everything moves on well on the district, the pastors are working hard and expect to make a good report at Conference.

The Advocate acknowledges receipt of the announcement by Mrs. Rena Owen Westbrook of the marriage of her daughter, Lurene, to Mr. Wiley Clifford Newman on Friday, Aug. 12, at Buena Vista, Miss. The happy pair are now at home at Houlka, Miss. Congratulations and good wishes!

All during the summer a Sunday school has been conducted in the tabernacle on the Seashore Camp Grounds, Mrs. George S. Brown, of New Orleans, a member of Rayne Memorial Church, being the superintendent. The attendance on last Sunday was more than 130 and the collection for missions amounted to $18.

Rev. D. W. Babb, a superannuate of the North Mississippi Conference, has been assisting Rev. J. S. Maxey, pastor on the Corinth circuit, in a revival meeting. Brother Maxey writes that Brother Babb, though 86 years of age, has the activity of a much younger man, and that his sermons are inspiring to all.

Our Orphanage at Ruston, La., is at the present time providing a home for 190 children, the largest number ever cared for by this fine institution. The finances of the institution have been very good to date, and with the generous response expected on the annual Harvest Day, Oct. 9, the superintendent, Rev. R. W. Vaughan, expects to close the year with ample funds. A recent valuable improvement to the property is a modern and sanitary forty-stall dairy barn.

Mrs. J. O. Hendrick, a member of the church at Keithville, La., writes us as follows: "Beginning on Aug. 7, and running through Aug. 17, our pastor, Rev. James B. Grambling, of the Keithville church, held a revival meeting. Rev. S. L. Green led the singing. There were ten received into the church, five upon profession of faith. We feel that we have never had a more gracious series of services, and that real good has been done for our community. That God may richly bless our pastor's future service is our prayer."

Rev. J. A. George, pastor at Ripley, Miss., has recently assisted Rev. R. C. Nanney in a tent meeting at Blackland church, on the Booneville charge, North Mississippi Conference, in which there were 200 reclamations and thirty-eight conversions, thirty-one of them uniting with the Methodist church upon profession of faith. Brother Nanney informs us that Brother George has been holding meetings in a number of places in Louisiana and Mississippi during the summer, and that these meetings have resulted in 3,000 reclamations, 467 conversions and the accession of 325 to our church.

The Moody Bible institute of Chicago is this fall adding to its foreign missionary course instruction in Medicine and Elemental Surgery. These subjects will be taught by Dr. H. L. Canright, who was for years an effective medical missionary of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Chentu, West China. Dr. Canright is a graduate in Medicine of the University of Michigan, and took post-graduate work in the School of Medicine, New York City. During the last five years of Dr. Canright's missionary work in China, he served as Dean of the Faculty of Medicine and Professor of Anatomy in the West China Union University.

Five new churches have been built in the Corinth District, North Mississippi Conference—at New Albany, Baldwin, Potts Camp, Chalybeate and Camp Ground. On Aug. 26 the ground was put in order for a new building at Wheeler, and material has been purchased for a new building at Snow Down, on the Iuka circuit. The pastors of the above charges are Rev. T. H. Dorsey, Rev. R. W. Evans, Rev. W. H. Rogers, Rev. W. T. Phillips (two churches on the same charge), Rev. W. C. McKay, and Rev. E. P. Craddock. Great meetings have been held throughout the Corinth District, and others are now being held. Rev. E. H. Cunningham is the presiding elder of this flourishing district.

From the Lake Charles, La., American-Press of one day last week we take the following: "A special service will be held at the Broad Street Methodist Church to-night in farewell to Miss Julia Reid, who will leave in a few days for Matanzas, Cuba, where she will serve as a missionary for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, teaching in the Irene Toland school for girls. To-night the regular mid-week service will be devoted to expressions of appreciation for Miss Reid and best wishes from her hosts of Lake Charles friends. It will be the last service in this country which Miss Reid will attend for some time, after an extensive series of speaking engagements in Lake Charles and the vicinity which has kept her busily occupied since her homecoming from the Scarritt Training College for Christian Workers, in Nashville, where she graduated in June."

The George Tucker Evangelistic Party having just closed a most successful revival at Sunflower, Miss., are now holding a tabernacle meeting for Inglenook Methodist church at Birmingham, Ala. The meeting at Sunflower was a joint meeting of the Methodist and Presbyterian churches, and was held in the Methodist church at that place. It had been planned to hold an outdoor meeting, but owing to conditions it was decided to hold the meeting in the church building, as it was completely screened and equipped with fans. The meeting was said to have been the best ever held in Sunflower. Some fifty people came to the altar the first night an invitation was extended, and the last night of the revival it was impossible to accommodate the people that came to attend the service. The Tucker party is well known in the North Mississippi Conference, they having held meetings in practically every part of it in the last few years. The Tucker party is planning to use their own tent next year and to hold city and county-wide meetings, and they are already making up their slate. Any one desiring the services of this party should communicate with Rev. George Tucker at 2014 Nelson Avenue, Memphis, Tenn.

CONCERNING THE DISAPPEARANCE OF MR. CUNNINGHAM.

Dear Brother Carley: Of course you have read the sensational stuff that the Picayune and the Herald have had to say about my son who disappeared about a week ago.

Biloxians are mad about it. They have not published much, because they want to catch the criminals. Mayor Kennedy, however, issued the enclosed statement, in justice to his family.

No one believes anything but that the boy was murdered. It is a shame to slander his good name. He was simply murdered and robbed and his body disposed of. Special officers have been assigned to the case. Arrests are expected to follow soon.

You will do me a great kindness to publish this note and the enclosed statement from the mayor of Biloxi—caption and all. It was wired to the Picayune. That paper with all of its boasted fairness, only garbled the message and wrote a piece of filth as a "news item."

Our boy never drank or gambled. He was doing well in business. He didn't owe any money. He had never spent a night away from his family.

J. E. CUNNINGHAM.

Aug. 28, 1927.

The message of Mayor Kennedy to the Times-Picayune follows:

THE CUNNINGHAM MYSTERY.

Biloxi, Miss., Aug. 25, 1927.

To The Times-Picayune, New Orleans:

Your Gulport correspondent, working on a mere rumor as to the disappearance of Jim Cunningham, does both the D'Aquin and Cunningham families, than whom there are no better in the State, an injustice, as well as the reputation of one of the finest young men in our city, or anybody's city.

Of course, there was no intention of wrong upon the part of your correspondent, but only a desire to give the news.

The report that Cunningham was seen at Lyman enroute to New Orleans is only one of a dozen others that have been run down and found to amount to nothing. The young man was reported as having been seen in several different places Sunday afternoon. All of them were investigated by citizens of Biloxi who knew Cunningham well. Some man, dressed something like Cunningham was dressed when last seen, took a train at Lyman for Hattiesburg, according to the agent. It may have been Cunningham, but others report that they saw him elsewhere at the time the train was due at Lyman. He was reported at five different places between five and six o'clock Sunday afternoon.

The officers and citizens, white and black, are doing all they can to find the young man. All theories, except that he was murdered and robbed, have been abandoned.

He was happy with his lovely young wife and beautiful boy and girl in the home to which they had just moved. His business was prosperous. His books show all accounts paid that were due, except one item of some eight dollars.

On the day he disappeared (Sunday), he had his Saturday's sales in his pocket and was on his way to the D'Aquin home for dinner with his family. The route he took, while a little further, is over a good road; it is the way all go who know the way.

He did not drink or gamble, never was a society man, but a hard and ambitious worker, thoroughly reliable, an elegant gentleman and popular with all classes. His name and character are beyond suspicion.

(Signed)
JOHN J. KENNEDY,
Mayor of Biloxi, Mississippi.

MISS WASSON AT HOME.

Miss Julia Wasson, who for more than fifteen years has been a missionary in China, has returned to the States, and arrived at her home town of Kosciusko Wednesday afternoon, Aug. 24. Her family and many friends are rejoiced to see her and welcome her home again. She looks well and happy. She reports a safe and pleasant trip over.

Miss Wasson is the daughter of Mrs. Mary Jane Wasson, whose home for more than forty years has been in the Shady Grove neighborhood, fifteen miles north of Kosciusko, in Attala county, Mississippi. Her mother is the widow of the Rev. N. C. Wasson, who died in 1886. She has brought to manhood and womanhood a large family of boys and girls. Three of the boys are preachers —Rev. L. P. Wasson, presiding elder of the Aberdeen District, North Mississippi Conference; Rev. J. C. Wasson, pastor of the Drew Circuit, North Mississippi Conference, and Rev. Dave Wasson, pastor of the Methodist church at Thyer, Mo., a member of the St. Louis Conference.

Miss Wasson arrived a few days after her mother had celebrated her eighty-second birthday. All of the children were at home except Miss Julia for the special event which occurred August 4.

Miss Julia brought with her a native Chinese girl that she is educating, and when she is ready her purpose is to send her back as a teacher, leader and worker among her own people.

The days between now and school time, for the young lady to enter college, will be spent at the Wasson home near Kosciusko.

A LETTER FROM JUNALUSKA.

Dear Dr. Carley: The friends of the Southern Assembly throughout the church will be glad to learn that we are having one of the most successful seasons in the history of the assembly. Storms, floods, and other calamities have affected the attendance at resorts elsewhere, but not at Junaluska.

The Leadership Training School, under the direction of the General Sunday School Board, closed to-day what is probably the most successful session in its history. Hard work, the finest of spirit, and genuine fellowship characterized this and the other schools held here this summer. The fine spirit of co-operation between the Sunday School Board's schools and those held by the Mission Board and the Epworth League Board, and the Summer School of Duke University, was subject of favorable comment by observers. Many of our wisest leaders see in this but an indication of the growing spirit of brotherhood and co-operation now pervading our church in most sections.

A notable feature of the closing exercises of the Leadership School to-day was the introduction to the school of Misses Frances Potts and Gladys Snavely, who drove by themselves from Edinberg, Tex., to Junaluska to attend the sessions of the school. Edinberg is twenty-seven hundred miles from Junaluska the way they had to come—in the Rio Grande Valley in the West Texas Conference.

Probably one of the most significant pieces of work in Religious Education in the world has been carried on here at Junaluska for four summers. This has been its most successful year. It is what is called "The Experimental School." It is under the immediate direction of the Elementary Department of the General Board. Outstanding workers in the Elementary field are asked to teach in this Experiment. The children of the Beginners, Primary and Junior ages in the vicinity are enrolled in this school, where they have three periods a week, including the Sunday period. This year the materials for the new Graded lessons in these departments which are ot be given to the various denominations in October of next year, were tried out here. A number of the writers of these lessons came to see how they met the needs of these groups. The criticisms of these experienced workers will be invaluable in remedying any defects in the materials.

Dr. Weigle, of Yale, visited this Experiment last year and pronounced it one of the finest pieces of Religious Education being done anywhere. Dr. Bower, chairman of the Committee on Curriculum for the International Sunday School Council, has observed this work and commended it most highly.

Rev. Ralph G. Nollner, the new Superintendent of the Southern Assembly, is fast winning his way to the confidence of leading Methodists throughout the church, and it is now confidently believed that he will be able to pay off the indebtedness of the Assembly and turn it over to the church free of debt by August, 1928. That will be a great achievement, giving to the church a property worth at a conservative estimate a million and a half dollars.

JOHN A. RANDOLPH.

THE HARVEST OF SWEETNESS.

It is in these acts called trivialities that the seeds of joy are forever wasted until men and women look round with haggard faces at the devastation their own waste has made and say the earth bears no harvest of sweetness, calling the denial knowledge.—G. Eliot.

Kindness is like the sun. Its absence means a frost, a killing frost; it means blight and gloom; it means a world of pain that need not be imposed upon a world of pain that must be. It means day labor, light denied—the light of human sympathy and brotherhood. Everything that Midas touched became gold. Everything that the kind man touches become bright with tender and shining humanity.—George A. Gordon.

JAMES A. SEWELL was born at Jackson, La., July 11, 1883, and died at Hot Springs, Ark., July 7, 1927. He was the son of Rev. B. W. and Angelina Sewell, both of precious memory. He attended Centenary College at Jackson and Tulane University, graduating from the medical department in May, 1905, and began the practice of his profession at Boyce, La., where his entire professional career was passed. He is remembered and loved by hundreds in all walks of life whom he so faithfully and efficiently served. In February, 1910, Dr. Sewell was happily married to Miss Inez Wells. This union was blessed with three children—Janice in 1911, Jack in 1913, and Logan in 1921, all of which children are of bright promise. It was the great privilege and joy of the writer to lead him to Christ and receive him into the church before his death. As a husband, he was tender and affectionate; as a father he was gentle yet firm; as a friend, he was generous and true; as a citizen, he was manly and upright. He was gentle and forgiving to all. I have never know him to speak a word of evil against any human being. For years before he joined the church he was one of its most liberal supporters. He abounded in helpfulness to the preacher and his family. He fully trusted Christ, and died in the triumph of a living faith. Truly, a good man has gone to his rich reward.

His pastor,
H. B. THOMASON.

On Monday, Aug. 15, the death angel visited the home of Brother and Sister Cecil Heart and quietly took their little three-months-old baby out of the arms of mother and bore it to heaven and laid it in the bosom of God. And we were called as pastor to conduct the burial services, and as we stood over the little lifeless form to pay the last tribute of respect I could only think of the words of Jesus saying, "Except ye be converted and become as this little child ye cannot enter the kingdom of heaven." So then I knew I was standing over one of the greatest of God's kingdom. So let me say now,

Mother, don't cry,
God has taken your doll, I know
And its teaset blue and its playhouse, too,
Will soon be things of long ago,
But, mother, your grief will soon pass by,
So let me say, don't cry.

Oh, please mother, don't cry,
The Lord has taken your daily company, I know,
And the glad thought of your future days
Will soon be things of long ago.

But new life and love will soon come by,
So let me say, please mother, don't cry, don't cry.
Oh, mother, don't cry,
This has broken your heart I know,
And the rainbow gleams of its youth-dreams
Are things of long ago;
But heaven heeds all for which you sigh,
Therefore, mother, father and little sisters, please don't cry.

For we are promised all who are true that God will come one day and wipe all tears from our eyes and turn our sorrow into joy. So let me say to one and all, Let's live so that will be true.

Written by the pastor,
A. J. LEGGETT.

As all must hearken sooner or later, to the summons of our loving Heavenly Father, so did our friend, MRS. WASH FERGUSON, on April 27, 1927, in her home in Vicksburg, Miss. She was born in Carroll County, March 10, 1850, and lived there until she was married, Dec. 3, 1874, to Wash Ferguson. She moved with her young husband to Warren County, Miss., where she lived until her death, on the 27th of April, 1927. There are four children left to mourn her going, besides a host of friends loyal and true. The children are: Mrs. Lou Martin, Miss Beulah, of Vicksburg, Miss.; Mrs. Van Allen, of Summer, Nebr., and one son, Lawrence, of Crowley, La. She united with the Methodist church when she was a child, and afterwards at Porter's Chapel, in Warren County, by certificate, where she lived a faithful and loyal member until her death. Her influence will be lasting because of the purity of her character. Her life was filled with unselfish thoughts and deeds. The memory of Sister Ferguson shall long remain as a benediction to all who knew and loved her. The writer is glad to be one of that number. He came into the life of this good family as a young minister, on his first charge. He has through the years greatly appreciated this family, and in a very religious way loved all of them. A faithful worker was she. No loud profession, but a quiet, unassuming possession of the gentleness of her Master, at home and abroad. With sorrowing loved ones, and loving friends, Rev. A. S. Byrd and the writer assembled at Porter's Chapel church, April 28, 1927, to lay the body down to rest, awaiting the resurrection morn. Dear children, your mother has gone where there will be no more sorrow, sin and death. With love and sympathy for each dear one, I am,

Your friend,
J. R. JONES.

All communications for this department should be addressed to Mrs. J. E. Brown, Gloster, Miss.

"Four things a man must learn to do
If he would make his record true!
To think without confusion clearly;
To love his fellow-man sincerely;
To act from honest motives purely;
To trust in God and heaven securely."

ZONE MEETING.

The third zone meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society met with the Muddy Springs church on July 19, and though we came in the very midst of their protracted meeting we were greeted most cordially. Our service opened at 10 o'clock with the words of that grand old hymn, "Greenland's Icy Mountains;" Brother Ainsworth, pastor-host, conducting the devotional period, used Acts 16:4-15, that very appropriate subject, "Lydia's Missionary Work;" and Mrs. M. M. Lyell, of Kokomo, favored us with a solo, "Just When I Need Him Most."

Our zone leader, Mrs. E. W. Reid, being absent, the chair was filled in a very efficient manner by Mrs. C. L. Lampton. Delegates were in attendance from Magnolia, Osyka, Kokomo, and Muddy Springs. We were very fortunate indeed to have present, besides Brother Cottrell, Magnolia's pastor, and Brother Baggett, of Foxworth, leader in the revival services, two Conference officers, Mrs. T. B. Cottrell and Mrs. L. W. Alford.

We all feel that we understand more fully the program that is being prepared for "Jubilee year" after hearing the uplifting talk by Mrs. Alford. A season of prayer is the most essential feature of the Jubilee program, and each member should seek spiritual cultivation in order that our souls be refreshed by a deepening of the spiritual life of the church and its missionary efforts. She stressed family prayer in the home. Please pardon personal reference—but there is nothing that does me the good spiritually as our "altar," when, gathering at our place of worship each night, we thank our Heavenly Father for the many blessings bestowed upon us and ask for his continued help and guidance.

A paper of much interest was read by Mrs. Lacey, of Magnolia, presenting Scarritt in all its beauty and helpfulness, then "Aunt Tena" Saudell, now 72 years old, but still an active member and always an inspiration, gave us a heart-to-heart talk on missionary work.

Mrs. Cottrell led in an instructive discussion of "Junior Work," asking potent questions and being answered by the different auxiliaries.

Tylertown was selected as the next place of meeting in October, and we were dismissed by Brother Cottrell.

ZONE MEETING AT GEORGETOWN.

The third quarterly meeting of the auxiliaries in the northern zone, the Brookhaven District, was held in the Methodist church at Georgetown on Aug. 11, 1927. The meeting was called to order at 10 a. m., Mrs. J. E. J. Ferguson, zone leader, presiding.

The devotional service was conducted by Mrs. J. G. Galloway, of Crystal Sprngs. This consisted of the reading of St. John, fifth chapter, and a brief sketch of the early missionary work of the Methodist church leading up to the preparations for the Golden Jubilee. Mr. Word brought a beautiful message in song, "The White City."

Mrs. Catchings, representing the hostesses, welcomed the visitors, and Mrs. J. H. Garth, Hazlehurst, responded. The following visitors were introduced to the body: Mis Julia Reed, Lake Charles, La.; Mr. Frank Decelle; Dr. C. W. Crisler; Revs. J. E. J. Ferguson and E. W. Westbrook.

The auxiliaries were represented as follows: Crystal Springs, 13; Georgetown, 18; Hazlehurst, 7; Hazlehurst Y. W., 5. A new organization from Rockport was reported with four representatives present. The Crystal Springs auxiliary presented the following program:

Miss Julia Reed, a '27 graduate of Scarritt College, who will leave about Sept. 1 as a missionary to Cuba, dscribed the Belle Bennett Memorial and the life at Scarritt College. The Memorial is a building of which all Methodists should be proud. Its architecture is such that it inspires one with a feeling of reverence for spiritual things. Miss Reed gave an intimate insight into the life and influence of Scarritt by relating personal experiences. "Scarritt, first of all, endeavors to make Christ real, then to make fellowship world-wide. It also stands for family life and scholarship." All those who heard Miss Reed feel a deeper and a keener interest in the work of this college.

Dr. Crisler, in thanking Miss Reed for her inspiring talk, expressed the sentiment of the assembly who afterwards, in a body, expressed its wishes for God's richest blessings in her undertaking.

A round table discussion, "Why I Am a Member of the Missionary Society," followed a solo by Miss Christine Ferguson. Because an organization is the most effective way of accomplishing a great work; to learn more of the missionary work being done, also the need; in order to serve the Master, and because of a love for the Lord's work, were the chief answers.

Miss Ferguson again brought a beautiful message by giving the reading, "The Angelus."

Mrs. W. H. Sims discussed the "Relation of Mission Study and Christian Stewardship." She says that all life is a stewardship, since all personal endowment and material wealth are gifts of the Father. An account of all must be rendered to him. The first lesson in giving begins with the tithe. St. Paul reveals higher conceptions when he writes, "Let every one of you lay by him in store on the first day of the week as God hath prospered him." Then of the Macedonians he wrote, "They not only gave of their meager possessions bountifully, but gave of their own selves first unto the Lord." Unless one knows the need one cannot feel a personal obligation. Thus mission study creates the personal responsibility. The conquest of the world depends upon the consecration of our means to the service of Christ, which is stewardship.

Mrs. Frank Decelle distributed the annual reports of the Woman's Missionary Society Conference and the Woman's Missionary Council. She did not discuss the Standard of Excellence as it is found in the report, but answered questions concerning the quarterly reports of the auxiliaries. She stated that all reports in the Brookhaven District were in on time with the exception of one.

After a song and prayer the guests were asked to be seated, and a most delightful luncheon was served.

The habit of using ardent spirits by men in office has occasioned more injury to the public and more trouble to me than all other sources. LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

By Rev. C. D. Atkinson.

Our last notes were sent from Lake Junaluska, where the writer was attending the Leadership School. We left Junaluska on Thursday evening, the 18th instant, arriving in Atlanta the next morning, where we were joined by the family for the return trip home. Due to the delightful change in the temperature the motor trip from Atlanta proved very pleasant, and as it was devoid of any car trouble, was an uneventful one. The first night out was spent in Greenville, Ala., the second night at Covington, La., and we reached Alexandria in fine time.

The first thing claiming our attention on arrival here was the Leesville Standard Training School, scheduled to begin on next Sunday, and Brother McLellan is now in the field working toward a school that promises to be a fine one.

There are nine Standard Training Schools scheduled for Louisiana Conference during the remaining days of August, and in September and October. The Leesville school runs from Aug. 28 to Sept. 2, this being a six-day school with four courses. The Hammond School will convene simultaneously with the Leesville School, and will carry five courses. Sept. 4-9 will find Alexandria School in session, running the six-day course with units offered, to be followed by a six-day school at Natchitoches with four units, then Ruston, Lake Charles, Monroe, Shreveport and New Orleans, each running six days, and each offering from four to five units. In June Louisiana led Southern Methodism in training credits, and in July we made a splendid showing, leading all adjoining Conferences. We are proud of our training record, and hope that each of the above listed schools will be the very best in every way, and will issue full quotas of credits.

* * *

We are greatly pleased with the way the district and sub-district work is developing. The Minden District is putting on its second rally, to be held at Pine Grove on Wednesday, the 24th instant. A splendid program has been arranged, and everybody is anticipating a good time and an interesting and informative program. There will be news of this meeting in our next week's notes.

* * *

During the absence of the writer at Lake Junaluska an invitation was received from Brother W. W. Lantrip to meet with his Sunday school workers at Pollock for the purpose of organizing a Workers' Council. We regret that it was not possible to attend this organization, and trust that it was completed and put into action. We congratulate Pollock upon this step.

* * *

Word comes from Natchitoches that they will celebrate Sunday School Day on Oct. 23 in the evening, using the dramatization written by Dr. Crawford and published in "The Workers' Council.". This will come after the Standard Training School and revival in Natchitoches, and there should be a great and lasting result from these activities.

* * *

Gueydan is inquiring about literature explaining the observance of "Enlarged Children's Week." The office is now receiving samples of this literature and we trust that all of our schools will get in touch with the matter and make a great observance of this particular week in Louisiana.

* * *

We are interested to note that Intermediate-Senior and Young People's Wesley Bible classes of First Church, Alexandria, have renewed their charters, as have also classes from Lake Arthur, Coushatta, and New Orleans. This is fine, and we trust that all Wesley classes will keep their charters up to date.

* * *

We notice many fine things in the "Monthly Bulletin" issued by Brother P. O. Lowrey, of Campti, and we wish to call attention to his note of commendation to the State Normal authorities in putting extra milk in canteens where it can be purchased by the students in the place of so many carbonated drinks. This would be well followed by other canteens, such as those conducted in high schools, Boy and Girl Scout camps, and other places where bottled drinks are sold to our boys and girls. Milk, either plain or with cocoa added, can now be bought in half pint bottles, that is altogether clean and wholesome.

* * *

Notice has been received from Nashville office that the "Council" meeting has been set for Dec. 12-16, and that the various committees will probably be in session on the 12th.

* * *

A nice check for Sunday School Day offering has been received from Brother Claude Mayo, pastor of New Prospect Church at Clay, and he calls attention to the fact that this comes from the writer's boyhood school, where he started off as assistant superintendent.

* * *

The most recent Sunday School Day offering comes from Ethel, where Brother McLellan recently held a successful Cokesbury Training School.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

By Rev. J. C. Chambers.

We are just back from the second term of the Leadership Training School at Lake Junaluska. This was the most successful term for several years. As many credits were issued as both terms last year. The work of the school was the best in many years that has ever been done. The courses were rich and the instructors were very fine and sympathetic.

Mrs. James Cavett, J. C. Chambers, Rev. J. L. Ferguson, Mr. O. C. Hull, Miss Maggie May Jones, Mrs. J. E. Oakey and Mrs. W. H. Watkins received credit at this term of the school.

Rev. W. W. Nelson was on the grounds convalescent from serious sickness. We are glad to report to his many friends that he is constantly improving and hopes to be able to come home in the very near future.

We are glad to see the improvement in the offering from Sunday School Day in the last two weeks, and in missionary offerings also. We are trusting that we will be getting larger and better offerings from now on until Conference.

Our Board is putting on a better piece of work than it ever has been able to do, and we are trusting the friends of the Board to help us with these various offerings. It will be a matter of interest to the friends of the Sunday School Board to know that the attitude of the General Board and the Conference leaders was very optimistic, and even under the pressure of going forward with smaller funds we feel that God will lead us and has led us to greater victories than ever before.

It is time to begin preparation for Children's Week. We are hoping that there will be a fine observance of Children's Week throughout the Conference. The pageant for Children's Week was put on at Lake Junaluska, and the message of the pageant is very fine indeed. Most any community with twelve people who are willing can put this pageant on. Write to the Conference Board for material.

Pray for the work and workers.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

I crave the privilege of helping fifty schools observe Children's Week before the session of our Annual Conference. "The greatest thing in the world is a human life. The greatest work in the world is the helpful touch upon that life." The meaning of Children's Week is to touch young life when it is easily influenced. It will require some work, but the results of the work will be entirely satisfactory. Last October twenty-eight schools did this with more or less success; we urge the schools to repeat their effort and then beg twenty-two others to do likewise. The hard thing is to make up your mind and then start at it and keep at it until the last day. Many schools ordered Sunday School Day programs, and for one excuse, then another, the time has gone by and the day has not been observed. One way to partially make up for this lost opporunity is to observe Children's Week and take an offering at this time for the work the Sunday School Board is doing in the Conference. Below is a list of schools that have observed Sunday School Day up to Aug. 25:

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE EPWORTH LEAGUE NOTES.

We are this week printing a list of the Mission Special pledges of our Conference, listing them by districts. A number of Leagues in each district had no delegates present at the Assembly and made no pledges. We urge these charters to decide upon their pledge as soon as possible and notify the Conference treasurer, Rev. L. F. Alford, of Raleigh, Miss. Only two additional pledges have been made. They are: Vancleave, $10, and Central Church Hi League, Meridian, $30.

Raleigh League Gives Program for League at Burns.

On Aug. 14 the League from Raleigh went to the League at Burns and presented a splendid program. The League at Burns has only recently been organized under the supervision of Rev. L. F. Alford. We appreciate the help that the Raleigh League has given to this new League, and wish for them a great year for League work.

The Epworth Hi League Camp at Camp Dantzler, Near Hattiesburg.

When this shall appear quite a number of enthusiastic Leaguers will be at Camp Dantzler for the Epworth League camp. This camp is a new enterprise for our Conference, being the first attempt that our Conference has ever made to hold a camp exculsively for Leaguers of the Epworth Hi League, formery designated as the Intermediate League. It is to our efficient Hi League Superintendent that we must give the credit for whatever degree of success is attained in this camp. Under the leadership of Mr. B. Frank Pim, whom most of us have known in past assemblies, we are expecting the Young People's revival to begin in this camp. We shall attend this camp in order to write more fully about it. Look for this report in the Sept. 15 issue of this paper.

THE PRAYER HE NEEDED.

The following amusing incident was witnessed the other day at a London railway terminus. A Salvation Army lassie was selling the War Cry at the windows of the trains. In one of the compartments were a number of "knuts," and one of them, thinking to have some fun at the expense of the sister, asked her if she would offer up a word of prayer for him.

Rising to the occasion, the sister put her hand on his head, and to the amusement of those within hearing distance, replied:

"O Lord, make this young man's heart as soft as his head."—Tit-Bits.

Poverty is the discoverer of all the arts.—Apallonius.

TWO WOMEN FOUND HELP

By Reading Experiences of Other Women

Mrs. Nina Matteson, Box 206, Oxford, N. Y., writes—"If it had not been for your medicine, I could not have done my work as it should have been done. Mother told me of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I had read in different papers what it had done for different women. She wanted me to try it, so my husband got me one bottle at first; then I took two others. Now I am feeling quite strong again."

Mrs. Ernest Tanguay of Adams, Mass., says she was ill for four years and could not sleep nights or go out on the street. She read about the Vegetable Compound and decided to try it. After taking eight bottles she was able to do all her work and go anywhere and is quite herself again.

This dependable Vegetable Compound is a household word in thousands of homes. The fourth generation is now learning the merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

For more than half a century, this reliable medicine has been used by women with very satisfactory results. If the Vegetable Compound has helped other women, why shouldn't it help you?

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 83

A Child's Laxative which Mothers Can Rely On

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated infants and children had to be kept "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all children's little ills, he constantly advised mothers to give only a harmless laxative which would help to establish natural bowel "regularity."

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin mothers have a regulating laxative which they can depend upon whenever a child is constipated, bilious, feverish or sick from a cold, indigestion or sour stomach. All children love its pleasant taste.

Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine or write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, for a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE and just see for yourself how perfectly it cleanses and regulates the bowels of infants and children.

Brother Mohler and I visited Calhoun City and Duck Hill to check up and help these schools make further progress. The pastors in both places were absent in meetings. We had a sympathetic hearing. Both schools agreed to observe Children's Week. We shall devote much of our time in checking up schools and scoring them that they may see the progress they have made during the year. Speaking of Children's Week, I have mailed one hundred letters to the different pastors asking them to read the literature and let me know their plans as to the observance of this week. Just drop me a card and I shall not write on this subject again if you mean to leave this work out. If I do not get a reply other letters must follow until I know whether to work upon some one else or not. A man's report comes out at Conference. It is not so embarrassing to get by there, but another report is to be made at the last great day. No escape from that, no dodging, no covering up.

Aching, Swollen Feet

Money Back if Moone's Emerald Oil Doesn't Do Away With All Soreness Swelling and Distress in 24 Hours.

Two or three applications of Moone's Emerald Oil and in fifteen minutes the pain and soreness disappears. A few more applications at regular intervals and the swelling reduces.

And best of all any offensive odor is gone for good—it's a wonderful formula—this combination of essential oils with camphor and other antiseptics so marvelous that thousands of bottles are sold annually for reducing varicose or swollen veins.

Every good druggist guarantees the very first bottle of Moone's Emerald Oil to end your foot troubles or money back.

NEW ORLEANS

CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

Vol. 73—No. 36. Official Organ of the Louisiana, Mississippi, and North Mississippi Conferences, Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Whole No. 3665.

HENRY T. CARLEY, D.D., Editor. NEW ORLEANS, LA., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1927. CHAS. O. CHALMERS, Manager.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

BACK.

After a very delightful and, to him, a most profitable summer at Emory University as acting professor of homiletics in the Candler School of Theology during the summer quarter, the editor of the Advocate is back at his office in New Orleans and at work as usual. He is deeply grateful to Dr. R. H. Harper, presiding elder of the New Orleans District and a member of the Publishing Committee of the Advocate, for his kindness in performing editorial duties during the editor's absence.

The church may well be proud of its great institution of learning at Atlanta. Emory University, under the presidency of Dr. Harvey W. Cox, easily takes rank as one of the great universities of the South; its work is equal to that of any in the nation; and as its resources are enlarged and its equipment increased, it will be named with the comparatively small group of institutions that represent the best in American religious and educational ideals.

The church is especially interested, though, in the Candler School of Theology, since it is from this source it must draw a large part of its supply of trained ministers for the work of the pastorate. The dean of the School of Theology, Dr. Franklin N. Parker, is too well known throughout the connection to need any introduction or commendation. The training of our young preachers is thoroughly safe under his direction. He is surrounded by an able faculty who are consecrated to their task, and a body of students is in attendance that would cheer the heart of the most fearful as to the future ministry of the church. With the group being trained at Southern Methodist University and at other institutions, the church may well look forward to a ministry that will meet all the requirements of the trying times in which we live.

The return trip from Atlanta was made by way of Birmingham, Tuscaloosa, Meridian, Laurel, and Hattiesburg. Sunday night was spent in Birmingham, which gave us an opportunity to worship at the First Methodist Church, made famous by the ministry of the late Dr. George R. Stuart, and increased in prestige by the ministry of Dr. Arthur Moore. The pastor was away on vacation; but we had the pleasure of hearing a fine sermon by Dr. W. A. Smart, of Emory University, to a congregation that must have consisted of a thousand or twelve hundred people. We do not know of a greater church in Southern Methodism than the First Methodist Church of Birmingham.

The trip home was without special incident except the pleasure of spending two nights and a day with the editor's brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Bradford, at Laurel, Miss., and the privilege of delightful association with Rev. B. L. Sutherland, pastor of the First Methodist Church at Laurel. In passing through Purvis, Miss., we had the pleasure of running across a cousin, Charley Carley; our oldest brother, George L. Carley; the pastor of the Methodist church, Rev. Charles W. Wesley, and other friends; at Poplarville, where we stopped for dinner, we had also the pleasure of seeing Rev. T. J. O'Neil, pastor of the Methodist church, who had just finished participating in the lunch and the program of the Rotary Club.

The summer climate of Atlanta is delightfully cool, while that of New Orleans is—well, rather warm. However, "there's no place like home," and the editor, with his family, is happy to be back and "on the job" to the best of his ability.

BISHOP CANDLER'S BIRTHDAY.

Bishop Warren A. Candler, in charge of the patronizing Conferences of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, reached his seventieth birthday on Aug. 23. The day was a notable event to the citizens generally and the Methodists in particular of Atlanta, the Bishop's home city, and it was appropriately celebrated by the presentation of a Franklin automobile to the Bishop in the afternoon and by a reception at the Druids Hill Methodist Church in the evening. It was the privilege of the editor of the Advocate to be present on both occasions, and he feels sure the many friends and admirers of Bishop Candler in Louisiana and Mississippi will be interested in some account of the event. We are indebted for this account to Dr. A. M. Pierce, editor of the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, who graciously gave us permission to use his write-up. With some omissions, made necessary by lack of space, we quote from the Wesleyan:

"Knowing that Bishop Candler was approaching his seventieth birthday, the stewards of Druids Hill Church, Atlanta, where Mrs. Candler is a useful member, determined to give him a reception on the evening of that day, to which Atlanta, Ga., and Southern Methodism were to be invited. This announcement was carried in the Wesleyan some weeks ago.

"The first notable reaction of this approaching event was in the Christian Index, the official organ of the Baptists of Georgia. In the issue of Aug. 18, his likeness covered the first page. On the second page occurred appreciations from Dr. John D. Mell, president of the Georgia Baptist Convention; Dr. L. G. Hardman, governor of Georgia; I. N. Ragsdale, mayor of Atlanta; Mrs. W. J. Neel, president of the Baptist Woman's Missionary Union of Georgia; T. W. Tippett, president, Georgia Baptist Sunday School Convention; Walter P. Binns, president, Baptist Young People's Union of Georgia; Dr. Charles W. Daniel, pastor, First Baptist Church, Atlanta, and president, Atlanta Baptist Ministers' Conference; George W. Andrews, secretary, Georgia Baptist Sunday School Work, and Dr. F. C. McConnell, pastor, Druids Hill Baptist Church. On the editorial pages appeared a tribute from the pen of the editor, Louie D. Newton. * * * This recognition of this great leader was a most gracious act on the part of Editor Newton, and Georgia Methodism greatly appreciates it. * * *

"A second reaction to the approaching day was the determination of some of his lay friends to give him a concrete expression of their high esteem. This took the form of a Franklin car. No one was asked to contribute. When the intention was made known to individuals, answers like this followed: 'Put me down for $100—I will make it $500 if you need it.' This car represents the admiration of laymen of five denominations—Baptist, Christian, Episcopal, Methodist, and Presbyterian.

"On the afternoon of his birthday, the magnificent car, elegant and luxurious, was driven on the lawn in front of his home, and a company of friends gathered for the presentation. Mr. Norman H. Miller, a steward of First Methodist Church, Atlanta, presided, and in a happy speech presented Senator Hoke Smith as spokesman for the donors. * * *

"In reply, Bishop Candler said (in part) as reported in the Atlanta Journal: 'Whatever else I may have done or failed to do, I may honestly claim to-day I have never preached anything else but the gospel of Christ, and have never in my preaching weakened the faith of any soul. This gospel is the power of God unto salvation, and I would see its power manifested in great movements of grace that would cleanse our land of all evils and glorify the lives of our people in the beauty of holiness. * * * The last years of one's life ought to be the best. With the ripened experiences of age and the revision of the unwise judgments of youth, a man's efforts should be most fruitful. * * * Amid the lengthening shadows of later years I pray I may still be about my Master's business; and when I fall asleep I trust I may fall asleep in him, and with the morning meet my Lord face to face and find again those whom I have "loved long since and lost awhile." At last may we all meet in a good home-coming in our Father's house.'

"Dr. Harvey W. Cox was then introduced. In a speech about a minute in length, Dr. Cox informed Bishop Candler that the faculty of Emory University, 'your poorer friends,' had sent a package of books to his study. Bishop Candler made appreciative response.

"At the appointed time a great throng gathered at Druids Hill Church, a crowd that overflowed the first floor of the auditorium even when chairs were added, and that well filled the spacious gallery. Around seven hundred people were pres-

IN THE HIGHER ALTITUDES.

By William C. Allen.

Some of the most beautiful scenery in the United States is discovered in Estes Park, Colorado. Long's Peak, with its altitude of 14,255 feet, every snow-crowned mountain, every silvery meadow, every gigantic canyon, every raving torrent, every sweet-scented pine tree, every quivering aspen tree, every dizzy precipice, every shimmering lake, every bewitching flowerlet, offers thankfulness to God. In the clear, blue-black evening sky the great suns burn and glow.

But our immediate surroundings allure us. "Speak to the earth and it shall teach thee!" exclaimed the inspired writer of the book of Job. Everywhere the magic of the Creator's touch is beneath our feet. Every blade of grass reminds us of the mystery of life. But when we ascend the loftier altitudes we catch fresh glimpses of the miracles of God.

At Estes Park we leave that inn of happy guests, "The Crags," and in two hours are at the summit of the Fall River Pass, which penetrates the continental divide. Our motor car has climbed a rock-hewn, sinuous roadway, the fragrant mountain air has become rarer and purer every mile. Finally above timberline, amid great boulders and huge sheets of summer snowdrifts, we halt to contemplate the massive scene.

Here at an altitude of 11,797 feet, we may learn deeper lessons than in the rock-walled valleys far below. The lovely little wild flowers most intrigue me. At that elevation the plants are dwarfed after they have had the courage to sow their seeds or extend their roots above the clouds. Thus the sunflower eight feet tall in Kansas, is here a few inches high. Many tiny blossoms, unknown to the lowlands, spread their modest glory beneath our feet—these blossoms are of delicate texture and rejoice in many forms and colors. How brave these mites of wild flowers are! How insistently they push their way through the narrow clefts in the hard cruel rocks! How intrepidly they disclose their little forms—their exquisite charm—to the sight of God and men!

Here I learn another lesson. I am reminded of how the painful, unrelenting circumstances of life so frequently seem to dwarf our longed-for successes, our material satisfactions, our spiritual understandings. The more earnestly we climb to the higher levels of the soul, the greater are the difficulties to be overcome; our better intentions seem thwarted, our aspirations too often dwindled because of conditions beyond our control. The world may prove cold and unresponsive to our efforts to extend joy and beauty on its behalf. We at times are tempted to be discouraged, our purpose may almost fail. The age-old, passionate cry, "Why is it so?" rings in our ears. But God knows all. Even as the earth proclaims his glory, so can we in some way—as the gay, wind-tossed flowerlets on the mountain pass—fulfill his great will. Our nearly benumbed faculties do not always rightly estimate our own potency to help and cheer. Like the sturdy, fearless little wild flowers in the higher altitudes we—as men and women—may reveal to those around us a splendid courage, our Creator's richest beauty, his transcendent praise!

San Jose, Calif.

THAT "LEAGUE OF FAITH AND ORDER."

By Rev. T. H. Lipscomb.

The alarm of Brothers J. T. Lewis, J. H. Felts, and E. S. Lewis over the organization in the North Mississippi Conference of a "League of Faith and Order," the outstanding purpose of which is to consistently uphold and defend the faith of our fathers, is amazing and surprising. For their comfort in their distress and perplexity we quote the lines of an old hymn:

"Ye faithful saints, fresh courage take;
The clouds ye so much dread
Are big with promise, and shall break
In blessings on your head."

For their information (not one of them even intimates that he ever heard of such a League before) let me assure them that North Mississippi is not the first Conference in Southern Methodism to organize such a League, and that a nation-wide movement in Methodism, led by Harold Paul Sloane, of Haddenfield, N. J., a "Methodist League for Faith and Life," to defend the orthodox faith against Modernism, is now assuming large proportions to the comfort and joy of true believers everywhere, and that our own Bishops Denny and DuBose have already joined this "Methodist League of Faith and Life."

Before me as I write lie the leaflets of both these organizations, and their Constitution, Declaration of Principles, etc., are so similar that frankly, though I intended at first to join the larger and older organization and to encourage others to join, when our similar League was proposed I consented to unite with it, agreeing with others that later we might merge into the larger movement.

Surely our brethren do not need to be informed that this Dr. Sloane, who committed a like sin with us in the New Jersey Conference by organizing first a little band of congenial souls into a "League of Faith and Life" (now expanded into thousands), was invited to be the chief speaker, along with Bishop Candler, at the Seashore Divinity School this summer. The literature of his League was freely distributed among the preachers and laymen, with invitations to join; but not one syllable, much less outcry, against the organization of such a League did I hear, or did I hear of elsewhere, until North Mississippi brethren began to protest.

In private conversation with Dr. Sloane (we are both alumni of Drew) he urged me to organize in North Mississippi, and gave me literature for distribution. I was on the point of joining, when the folder from Brother V. C. Curtis arrived. I showed it to him, saying, "Well, here's the same thing in a slightly different form." He read it eagerly and was pleased, asked to keep it, and I stated that I would defer action until learning more of the North Mississippi movement. So able, spiritual, and convincing were Dr. Sloane's lectures that the young men made a proverb: "Sloane's Liniment: Sure Cure for Modernism." He informed me that his "League for Faith and Life" now includes 115 members of the New Jersey Conference and every prominent layman in the Conference, and that the victory has already been won there over Modernism, and he prophesies confidently that it will be won everywhere in Methodism by the organization of similar Leagues of the faithful; for orthodox believers are in the majority everywhere. Do not our brethren know also that Bishop Berry, of the Northern Church, has frankly admitted that the Modernists in the Northern Church (and they are the same everywhere) have for years been seeing to it that no man should be put in a position of prominence and power, as college president, general secrtary, or pastor of large city church, who was not at least in sympathy with or tolerant of their views?

The position taken by all of these brethren that there is no need of such a League indicates on their part, we regret to say, either ignorance of existing conditions or indifference as to the spread of Modernism; accepting their assertions of their own personal absolute orthodoxy of faith. In evidence of the seriousness of the situation, the greatest living church historian in Methodism has recently said: "We face the gravest crisis in the history of Christendom since the days of Athanasius and the adoption of the Nicene Creed in 325 A D." When that statement was quoted at the Seashore Divinity School, Dr. Harper, now editing this Advocate, said: "I believe that statement to be true." To cite the evidence would be to write a volume, and should members of our own Conference be involved what outcry would be made and what maledictions poured forth. Members of the League still believe that "By their fruits ye shall know them," and that a man must be judged not by his words only, but by his deeds and his votes more surely. Suppose, for instance, that a brother should affirm his orthodoxy, and yet be found using Barton's blasphemous book, "The Man Nobody Knows," in a series of prayer meeting talks (Barton ridicules Christ as "the Lamb of God"), or discussing the first chapter of Matthew containing the genealogy of Jesus under caption, "A Bad Egg in a Bad Nest," should we expect to find him joining a "League of Faith and Order?" Or suppose another vehemently orthodox brother, while opposing evolution strongly, should be found endorsing and perchance voting for men who have publicly opposed the wise and wholesome anti-evolution laws, passed by our State for protection of our youth against unconstitutional anti-Christian teaching, could we expect him to be numbered among the organizers of a "League of Faith and Order?" Surely a blind man can see the need of courageous, consecrated, self-sacrificing men rising up in defense of the faith to-day. Only last week I was holding a revival, and a circuit preacher, on my quoting in a sermon the dear little prayer, "Now I lay me down to sleep," said to me, "Brother ——— says that prayer is the worst thing you can teach a child, scaring the poor thing, etc." Well, the evidence is all too plentiful that we are not only not all agreed, but that our differences range from repudiating the prayers taught us at our mother's knees to changing our cosmogony and eschatology from the Biblical to the modern scientific views.

The objection that they were not consulted in the organization of the League is of course too ludicrous for serious discussion. As well might the students of Oxford in Wesley's day object that the Holy Club was organized without their knowledge or consent. It is always of course a small group of men who see the need of something, and want the need met, who start any movement, afterwards inviting all others of like spirit to join. Article III, of the Constitution, "All preachers and laymen who are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and who are in accord with the principles and purposes set forth in this constitution are eligible for membership in the League," indicates clearly that it is desired to make the League a Conference-wide organization of men and women in agreement in principles and purposes. The tragedy of the situation is that already it is revealed that no such agreement is possible among all the members even of the Conference.

The objection by Brother J. T. Lewis, seconded by Brother Felts, that "The Creedal Statement of the pamphlet is a rehash (note the word) of the solemn ordination vows of every Methodist preacher," and that any intimation that any preacher might have changed his view in line with modern thought since taking the vows is a reflection upon our ministry (despite the fact that our Advocate editor recently characterized all such rigidly orthodox believers as "men of closed mind and crystallized intellect"), will no more stand in the light of reasoned argument than will his other protests.

The argument of Brothers Lewis and Felts proves too much. If the ministry must have imputed to them full loyalty to their solemn vows, why not the laity also? They, too, have taken most solemn vows to "renounce the vain pomp and glory of the world," and to believe the whole range of Christian doctrine: Shall they in self-righteous pride reply to any call to renounce, to consecrate: "Did we not promise that long ago? It is a work of supererogation to promise again. You reflect upon my sincerity and integrity!" We don't suppose any brother would like to preach to such a body of laymen. If we would have them to be humble we must be humble ourselves. As for me, I love to sing,

"High heaven, that heard the solemn vow,
That vow renewed shall daily hear,
Till in life's latest hour I bow,
And bless in death a bond so dear."

I rejoice even in reciting the Apostles' Creed every Sunday, and gladly tell all, Yes, I heartily believe, after fifty years of thought and study, every word in the Bible from Genesis to Revelation.

Well, the final point of assault is the reference to voting in harmony with our convictions. When I was a boy and the prohibition fight was on, I remember one of the banners carried in the parades, Vote as you pray! You would think from the outcry that the League proposed to corral the votes and dictate to the voters, but there is not the remotest suggestion of promise or obligation on the part of members to vote as dictated by the League. I for one would not join any organization proposing to assume the place of God in my conscience; and they suspiciouly read into the provision a meaning it does not contain. On my word of honor as a gentleman and a Christian, should any coercion of votes or dictation be attempted, I will immediately publicly withdraw from membership; but I do not object to now publicly affirming all that is contained in the pledge: "I will not knowingly vote for any one for office in our church who does not stand for and uphold these principles without any reservation or equivocation whatever." That says simply I will vote for men who believe as I do, and no sane or sincere man can object to that.

But, in conclusion, you would think from this amazing protest that the League is a finished product of sinister design; whereas, it is but a baby; it is not "still born," as Brother Felts suggests. The organization is declared to be "temporary," "to serve until first meeting—during Conference." The "Constitution" has not even been adopted as yet. It is "tentative," as was the "tentative" church constitution at Memphis which fared so ill. Who even wrote the literature sent out I for one do not know. It is remarkably well done, I think, though none claim for it infallibility. So such detailed arraignment of the whole movements seems out of place as yet. Wait at least until the organization is permanently effected and a constitution adopted by vote of the members, still subject to amendment if found faulty.

The only men who can consistently as yet fight such a League are men who do not want the old faith upheld, who want the flood of modern unbelief to creep upward while they cry: "No danger. No need of lifting a barrier, don't top the levees." Our League will give no heed to such outcries from Modernistic friends and sympathizers. It asks the hearty co-operation of all, including Brothers J. T. Lewis, J. H. Felts, and E. S. Lewis, who affirm their agreement with us. If we are in error let them meet with us face to face and show us our error, but let them not slaughter the innocent child or pray that it may be "still-born," for some David is surely needed to conquer the blatant Goliath of error in our day, and "To preserve and promote faith in the Triune God, and in the Incarnation of His Eternal Son, Jesus Christ our Lord," is surely a purpose worthy of our best endeavors.

DR. CARLEY'S ALIBI.

By Rev. H. M. Ellis.

Dr. Carley's alibi is a medley. His "surprise and grief" all arise out of the inability of "some of the brethren" to "understand," and the "construction" these have put on his "Orthodoxy" editorial. So he laments, graciously conceding that anybody can be mistaken but he. But he proceeds to explain what he "had in mind," though his explanation but raises more questions.

His situation recalls an incident that went the rounds some years ago. Just following the fourth quarterly conference of a certain pastor's first year the presiding elder asked a loyal leader on the charge what he thought about returning the preacher for another year. "By all means send him back," was the prompt and emphatic reply. The presiding elder's face brightened, and he said heartily, "Well, I am glad to know he has such a hold on his people." His companion laughed aloud and then responded: "But I didn't say that. I mean, it will take him another year to tell us what he has been talking about this year." And Dr. Carley has taken nearly two columns to tell us what he thought he meant to say before in one.

Now, if Dr. Carley really intended his "Orthodoxy" editorial to be addressed to the point "that it is practically a psychological impossibility for two men to think exactly alike about anything, but this difference of opinion is not to be taken as invalidating the moral character or religious experience of the other," he must have a most obstinate and perverse typewriter.

In this new light three facts become conspicuous, namely:

1. The first editorial never once mentioned "moral character" or morals.

2. No more does it mention "religious experience," or religion.

The comparison in the article needing explanation is not that of individual opinion and Christian life, but of "orthodoxy" (which, when "rigidly" held, "implies a closed mind and a crystallized intellect"), and the "open mind," with its "constant seeking after truth." "Orthodoxy" is arrayed over against truth.

3. The assertions are made as the editor's own opinions and declarations." The article nowhere represents the party of "rigid orthodoxy" as passing judgment on persons of the "open mind." There are judgments enough in the article, but these are always Dr. Carley's judgments.

Was the Doctor's settled opposition to "orthodoxy" too regnant and virile for his temporary editorial intention to bear fruit? Some accident befell that intention en route, for it never arrived.

True the article asserts: 'By so much as one man differs in opinion from another man, by so much is he unorthodox according to the standards accepted by the first." But this is stated as the editor's decision in the case. He also declares, "To discuss them (such matter as have placed beyond the pale of study or investigation) with an open mind is to become unorthodox. It must be so, or orthodoxy means nothing." The editor here certainly speaks for himself.

Hear him again: "To assume that any one man has thus stated a truth for all time to come, or any group of men" (however filled and inspired by the Holy Spirit) "has done so, in a form that can never be properly changed, is to attribute to the human mind a degree of infallibility that cannot be sustained by an appeal to history." Please note (1) that he begs the whole question by taking for granted that it must some time become "proper" to change every statement of truth, no matter how simple and clear it is; and (2) this sentence is again the editor's own personal judgment. There is no reference to the "orthodox" man's ill judgment of his brother yet.

In view of this "timely" article, injected into the controversy between orthodox faith and Modernism, which we are now told was intended as a sort of rebuke, or correction, of those persons who make their own individual religious opinions the standard by which to test the "moral character and religious experience" of others, two oustanding facts deserve considreation, namely:

1. The men who are guilty of the fault intended to fall under censure are not claiming to be "orthodox," but are boasting of their "open-mindedness" and their "constant seeking after truth"—the very parties the editorial impliedly approves and commends.

2. Those who are contending most earnestly for "orthodoxy," are not fighting for their unique individual opinions, but for the basic doctrines of evangelical Christianity as inherited by the church, and for the thoroughly established and well known interpretations of their denominations. Dr. Carley has made the blunder of setting the dogs on the sheep and lambs, while at the same time he handed out a fat feed to the ravening wolves. Yet he is "surprised and grieved" that "some of the brethren" could not "correctly understand." Certainly somebody's understanding is grievously at fault. According to Dr. Carley's announced purpose, his article was upside down.

It is amusing to see Dr. Carley, after scouting the idea that John Wesley's (not Mr. then) opinion settled anything, so precipitately skee-daddle to the cover of "the words of Mr. Wesley, * * * the great and good founder of Methodism," for protection. "Circumstances alter cases!" They certainly do when they get personal!

But the quotation from Mr. Wesley is utterly incongruous with the argument of the first "Orthodoxy" editorial. Mr. Wesley was not dealing with the "closed" versus the "open" mind, or with "orthodoxy" versus "truth." He referred to mistakes in minor details of doctrine, or Scripture interpretation as possible in the genuinely Christian character. Here is what he says: "Hence we cannot but infer that there are ten thousand mistakes which may consist with real religion; with regard to which every candid, considerate man will think and let think."

It is especially ludicrous to find the Doctor, who so scorns the thought of getting some religious truths "beyond the pale of study and investigation," quoting the remainder of Mr. Wesley's paragraph, as he so clearly proceeds, thus: "But there are some truths more important than others. Surely there are some which it nearly concerns us to know, as having a close connection with vital religion." As Mr. Wesley wrote no subsequent alibi for these statements, we may take it that he meant what he said. If so, he undoubtedly believed in "rigid orthodoxy" concerning "some truths."

It is related that in a certain Southern city a Negro who had been often in court was haled once more before the judge. At once the judge recognized the darkey and said sharply: "So you are here again, Zeke." "Yas, sir, Jedge; I cou'dn't he'p it. Dey fotched me," was Zeke's reply. The judge hid his smile, but his voice was less severe as he asked, "Have you a lawyer?" "Nar, sir, Jedge. I ain't got no money," was the reply. "Well, Zeke, the court is going to be fair with you. I shall give you two lawyers." He then assigned two young attorneys, just out of college, to defend the prisoner, and sent them all to the rear of the courtroom for consultation. For some minutes questions were asked by attorneys and answered by their client, heads were scratched and brows puckered, and the words "alibi" and "witness" were conspicuous in the conversation. Presently the darkey walked down the aisle and addressed the judge thus: "Jedge, I ain't nothin' but er 'onery Nigger, an' I don't want ter pester yer. But ef you'll please, Sir, swamp one ov dese here lawyers fer er good witness, you'll shore do me er powerful good turn."

I WAS JUST THINKING.

Dear Advocate: I am tired, worn out, sick. Politics, bickering, strife, confusion, unbrotherliness. Rotten—all of it. I seek relief in the church papers. Same thing there—Unification, Fundamentalism, Modernism, Liberalism, Infidelity, Devilism. Everybody seems to be "after" somebody else: Bishops, Editors, Boards, Colleges, Committees, and divers Orders and Leagues and Things. "O where shall rest be found?"

Lipscomb goes for the colleges, and Decell jumps on Carley, and Lewis gets after Curtis, and Ramsey "trees" Bazzel. Mr. Editor: If you can't print an issue without Bazzel and Ramsey, miss a few issues. Give us a rest. We are all "plumb wore out." "Let's go a-fishin'." Meanwhile, Jack Garner, and Zeke Shaw, and Luke McKeown, and other such, are looking after the collections, and putting on Sunday school programs, and visiting the sick, and preaching the gospel, and praying in the homes of their people—thank the Lord!

We lost one hospital. John Sherard is sweating blood for fear we will lose another one. It begins to look that way.

We built a new Home for the Orphans, and Sherard is sweating some more. He reports some four hundred dollars paid on the building fund, through the North Mississippi Conference Commissioner, in twelve months. He reports some eight hundred dollars paid on the hospital, while the hospital was doing twelve thousand dollars of charity work for North Mississippi. He reports that we are going to lose both hospital and Orphans' Home, if we do not get busy, "mighty quick."

Brethren: We'd better quit all this wrangling about nothing, and call our people to prayer, and give them a chance to do something worth doing.

Countiss has made two dollars for every one dollar that North Mississippi has ever put into our colleges—since the world was made; while his hundreds of graduates (every one a Christian) —teachers, church workers and home-makers, are illustrations of his sacrificial labors.

"They say" that a preacher in the hills said that he could not ask his people to support our educational institutions as long as such men as are in charge of them are kept in charge.

Where did that back-woods-man get that stuff, anyway? I doubt if he ever saw either of our colleges, or any other college. If he really did say that thing, and can be located, my guess is that he will be given an opportunity to tell us all about why he said it, when we get to Clarksdale. It is a fact that some of the severest critics of our teachers and trutsees have not paid the bills they owe the colleges. But Grenada College must be sold for debt, with our hospital and Orphans' Home, if we do not "cut out the hot air escape" and get down to Christian work.

Missionaries are being recalled, and superannuates are suffering, while we are "chewing the rag" about things that never did happen, and never can happen; and while communities in the Delta, with churches and parsonages ruined, farms desolated, people "dead broke," are borrowing money to pay their church dues, as they borrow money to buy their bread. And still we fuss! It is a sorry sight.

Missouri Conferences cared for their flooded churches, in twenty counties, without asking a dollar from the General Board; and Louisiana and Mississippi Conferences have done more for their damaged churches and pastors' hungry families than we have done for ours in North Mississippi, though the same appeals went out to all.

Brethren: Let's interest ourselves in the needs of the church, the work of our Lord, and forget some other things for a little while. It is three years, yet, until the "General Election;" and some of us may be dead.

BISHOP CANDLER AND THE SEASHORE CAMP GROUND.

Bishop Warren A. Candler will be on the Gulf Coast Sept. 18-25 in the interest of the Seashore Camp Ground. A plan is now in the making to transform the plan of the school that has been there, from an academy or high school, into a junior college of high grade; also to make the Camp Ground an assembly center for all manner of Methodist gatherings. It is conceded by many of our Methodist leaders that we have here one of the finest places in all Methodism for a magnificent assembly ground and junior college. It is also hoped that very soon in connection with the school there may be a Bible training course added. When we consider the increasing numbers of people that are coming to our Gulf Coast, and when we further realize that this is only a prophecy of vastly greater numbers in years to come, we must admit the presence of a great opportunity. This constitutes a challenge to the faith of our Methodist people of all adjacent territory and calls for immediate action. Bishop Candler, with far-seeing vision, is urging that earnest effort be made to avail ourselves of this opportunity. It is hoped that the Bishop will have a large, cordial, and sympathetic hearing. He will speak in Biloxi at 11 a. m., Sept. 18, and at Gulfport that night. His further itinerary will be given later.

JAMES L. SELLS,
Presiding Elder, Seashore District.

RESOLUTIONS ON THE EPWORTH LEAGUE AND THE COLLEGE, PASSED BY THE MOUNT SEQUOYAH EPWORTH LEAGUE ASSEMBLY.

Because we feel that the Epworth League could offer something which every college student needs for personal enrichment during his college days, and because we feel that the young people who return to their communities after college could add much to the life of their community if they were trained Leaguers, we urge that:

1. Every church strive to minister to the student group in its community through the Epworth League. We urge that special emphasis be placed on the devotional services so that they may be planned in such a way that they will satisfy the deepest spiritual longings in the hearts of students and answer the questions that confront many students. We also urge that the recreational program be planned to reach and offer wholesome recreational activities to the students.

2. We suggest that each Conference cabinet make a survey of its Leagues in order to determine whether or not the League is serving the college students in the Conference, and take such steps as the need demands, striving always to plan the program of the Assembly so that it will interest all college Leaguers.

3. We request that our Central Office workers think even more than in the past in terms of a program that is big enough to challenge college students and older young people everywhere. We urge that a page in the Epworth Era be given to notes and suggestions for activities in college Leagues. We suggest that books that are particularly adapted for the college students be offered with the list of study books.

4. We request that these findings be published in the Epworth Era and the Conference organs.

BIBLE DISTRIBUTION IN AUGUST.

The total distribution from the Bible House at 900 St. Charles Street, New Orleans, La., for the month of August, 1927, has been 7,235 volumes, consisting of 282 Bibles, 140 Testaments, 6,813 Portions; 5,804 have been sales, 1,431 have been donations. Cash sales have been $301.42. Donations and discounts, $26.17. Total value, $327.59. We have given away 1,440 Portions that have been paid for by people who are friendly to this work. Six hundred volumes were given out at night. We have $13.60 balance on hand from this fund.

I distributed 400 Portions of the Scriptures Sunday on my trip to Slidell and North Shore; the morning train does not stop at North Shore. I gave out about fifty Portions at Slidell, then walked five miles back to North Shore; half the way is through swampy piney woods, the other half is through swampy prairie. Saw many pretty water lilies. At one point I left the road and went into the dense woods, and upon my knees asked God for strength and wisdom to do his will, and a blessing upon the Word that I was giving out and upon those that were paying for his work.

On the way I furnished several families with the Scriptures at a railway section house; I stopped at a group of five houses where there was five large families of colored people living. There was only one Bible in the five homes. We left about twenty Portions of the Scriptures at these homes.

At North Shore there are about five hundred men living, mostly in temporary buildings, working on the Lake Pontchartrain bridge, canal and public highway. The highway is constructed from the dirt taken out of the canal, which also acts as a drainage ditch. The steam shovel is doing wonders in this State now.

We ate dinner with one of the crews, gave out all the Scriptures that we had left, were invited back, took a short rest; then I could have walked another five miles if it had been in the service of the Master; this strength was an answer to prayer, there is no question about that.

Let us sow our cities down with this Book, broadcast it in every town and hamlet, and to the solitary dwellers in forest and prairies, send it out to all people in all lands; trust in it, hide it in our own hearts, believe in it, and in him who is revealed in it.

To those people who have been so kind to us, and have shown readiness to co-operate with us, we wish to say: Stretch your imagination as you will, you will never be able to understand fully just what your help has meant to us, for which we thank you.

In His name,

G. A. PERKINS, Agent.

HOW TO ENFORCE NATIONAL PROHIBITION.

"The enforcement of prohibition is winning and will continue to win," says Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel of the Anti-Saloon League of America. "The alternative is the wreck of the republic, since the liquor traffic has made it imperative that the nation choose between prohibition enforcement and liquor lawlessness. The Eighteenth Amendment will not be repealed. It must be enforced.

"The first requisite for enforcement of prohibition is an enforceable law, without ambiguity, that leaves no vague border zone or loopholes for the liquor criminal, while it carefully controls possible sources of illicit supply. The second requisite is the appointment or election of capable, experienced officials who believe in the law they are to enforce." Dr. Wheeler urges that the 200,000 State, local and Federal officers whose duty it is to help enforce constitutional prohibition be subjected to this test before they receive dry support. "To put wet officers in charge of enforcement is as foolish as to set thieves to catch thieves. Such failures as national prohibition has met in its first seven years are largely due to such appointments.

"Less change in enforcement methods will help. Four different programs have been in force since the adoption of the amendment, besides minor changes. It is to be hoped that enforcement and not unnecessary reorganization will be the keynote under the new reorganization bill and civil service.

"The third essential for enforcement is the vigilance of its friends. The moral forces of the nation must support the maintenance and enforcement of this law against the organized attacks of the liquor element, or face defeat by default.

"Every arm of the government should be used in this fight against a criminal and outlawed traffic. By the imposition of severe penalties, by the use of the injunction and by the co-operation of every departmental agency having information that will lead to the apprehension and punishment of the guilty, violations of the law can be brought to the irreducible minimum.

"We need federal officers who will do their full duty. Naturally these will prosecute the big offenders first, but the general amnesty offered in advance to the small bootlegger by some federal officers who publicly declared they would prosecute only the big violators, is a dangerous invitation to crime.

"The concurrent clause in the Eighteenth Amendment places a joint responsibility on the State and nation to enforce this law. Some States, led by nullification governors, may be slackers in their duty and force the Federal Government to assume tasks which properly belong to the State, but the constitutional obligation still rests on all officers of that State to do their part in law enforcement. Even if the State defaults, Federal officers must enforce the constitution in such commonwealths.

"Unless majority government by constitutional methods is violently overthrown by the well-organized liquor minority, the dry sentiment of the nation will continue to prevail. Facing the wet challenge which would wreck the nation for the sake of a drink, the patriotic citizens of America will rank the booze rebels of this country with Benedict Arnold."

THE MISSISSIPPI CHILDREN'S HOME SOCIETY.

Dear Brother Carley: As you know, I do not come to you but about once a year with news of my activities and the work in which I am engaged, and it has been about a year since you have heard from me.

The Mississippi Children's Home Society is a non-sectarian, inter-denominational organization, and is not supported by any fraternity, church or State funds, but entirely by voluntary contributions from people all over the State, and I am glad to say that they have always responded to our appeals for help.

During the past year we had on our visiting list 956 children, 125 of whom were placed in foster homes during the year, and of these about fifty were infants, and forty were legally adopted.

We have a splendid board of directors, and they give every assistance possible; also an active Ladies' Auxiliary, who help to beautify the receiving home and give pleasure to the children.

In addition to my regular duties, I was on the lecture platform for all the summer normals in Mississippi during the past summer, and hardly a Sunday passes that I do not fill some pulpit over the State. I supplied Centenary Methodist Church, McComb, Miss., while Brother C. C. Evans was taking his vacation; I preached there two Sundays. Then I filled Brother O. S. Lewis' pulpit at Jefferson Street Church, Natchez, and also Galloway Memorial one Sunday while Rev. Hal S. Spragins was away.

I attended the National Conference of Social Work in Detroit in May, and Mrs. Sutton and I have just returned from a wonderful trip to Washington State, where we went for the American Prison Congress at Tacoma. Louisiana was well represented at this conference by Dr. Maud Loeber, of New Orleans; Rev. H. S. Johns, chaplain of the State Penitentiary, and Mr. Gill, of the Training School at Monroe.

Asking an interest in your prayers and with very best wishes to you, I am,

Yours very truly,

JOHN L. SUTTON, Superintendent.

CANDLER COLLEGE.

(An editorial in a recent issue of the Gulf Coast Guide, Gulfport, Miss., Hon. Clayton Rand, Editor.)

The Methodist Conferences of Mississippi, Alabama and Louisiana are planning to make some definite and useful disposition of the Seashore Camp Ground at Biloxi.

We have already expressed ourselves through this page with the suggestion that the site should be one chosen for a tri-State university. We have even intimated that leading Methodists, everywhere, might be prevailed upon to pool their efforts and finances in a richly endowed institution that would permeate the militant spirit of Methodism, revived.

There is need for a denominational institution of learning in the South, in keeping with the progressive thought of thousands of members of the Methodist Church, who realize that Methodism must either take a new lease on life or give added evidence of having gone to seed.

If the great ones in Southern Methodism are alert to the crying needs of the hour, and are willing to envision the broader service of a practical Christianity to the newer problems of youth, they can build a fitting monument to the search for truth and better understanding on the shores of the Mississippi Sound.

No site could lend itself better to the establishment of such an institution than the Seashore Camp Ground. National authorities give this county an enviable health record. The curriculum of to-day emphasizes strong bodies as it attempts to train strong minds. The whole atmosphere of the coast is one conducive to educational effort. The surroundings lend the touch of the inspirational that is also essential to a well-rounded academic product.

The success of Gulf Park College and the Gulf Coast Military Academy, as well as Stanislaus at Bay St. Louis, is proof that the Mississippi Coast has been endowed by the Creator with much that makes an ideal setting for the scholastic.

The plan is one that should not be circumscribed by the limitations of Methodism in these three States. The program should be one of broader vision than that, challenging the ambitious leaders of this denomination everywhere, to establish an institution of such proportions that it would inspire national respect and support.

The moneyed Methodists of America might support such a program.

CONGRATULATIONS FROM FAR-AWAY CHINA.

Congratulating Dr. W. G. Cram, General Secretary of the Board of Missions, and the staff at the Central Office upon the successful management of the Board's affairs which has led to a substantial reduction of the debt of the Board during the past year, Mr. E. C. Peters, of Shanghai, treasurer of the China Mission, declares in a recent letter that the full significance of this splendid work is just being realized by the missionaries in China.

Since the report of the General Secretary was made public after the annual meeting of the Board of Missions, May 3-4, congratulations on the successful administration of the financial affairs of the Board have come in from many sources. In this report Dr. Cram stated that the indebtedness of the Mission Board had been reduced within one year's time from $1,658,541.11 to $783,952.11, a decrease of $874,589.—Department of Publicity.

A SOLEMN OCCASION BECOMES LAUGHABLE.

Don't laugh until we get through. In fact, don't laugh at all. It is more of a tragedy than a comedy. We will tell the story just as we found it in a weekly church bulletin in our own state. It happened in a beautiful Methodist church, a church of 800 members. The large auditorium was two thirds full. The large congregation worshiped in a building valued at $75,000. They sang some of the fine old hymns of the church, "Come Ye That Love the Lord," "Take My Life and Let It Be Consecrated, Lord to Thee," and other songs of consecration. Finally the pastor announced the offering. The wonderful organist played the offertory. Five men, officials in the church, with orderliness and decorum, moved among the congregation for an expression of their response to the great sacrifice that the Son of God had made for them and for all mankind. These men represented large business interests. They thought in terms, when in business, of hundreds and thousands. The offering over, these five business men marched down the aisle of the church and placed on the table 73 pieces of money—legal tender in the realm of the American Republic—three quarters, 22 dimes, 35 nickels, 13 pennies. That's the story. Figure it out for yourself. If this story were not typical, we would not tell it. Nobody knows what church we are talking about, but almost any of us might, with conscious guilt, ask, "Lord, was that my church the Advocate was writing about. If every member were just like me, what sort of church would my church be?"—Alabama Christian Advocate.

THAT YOU MAY KNOW WHAT YOU ARE ASKED TO BUY.

The last of July Harold Bell Wright's new novel, "God and the Groceryman," came from the press of D. Appleton & Co. Book store windows are now displaying the book, and it is certain its sale will be pushed. We have refused the advertisement.

This book proposes a plan to do away with all denominations and substitute for the present denominational churches, temples for worship free and open all the time to everybody. To quote: "This plan is not a reformation; it is not coming out of any of the existing organizations; it is not to be built around the ideas of any individual; it calls for no distinctive body of worshipers; it will have no distinctive name; there will be no organization formed about any one or anything; there will be nothing for any one to join, nothing to support, nothing distinctive; it will antagonize no existing order—it will simply present to the world the teaching of Jesus, and it will present nothing else. It will be no more sectarian than the Sermon on the Mount."

The book is cast in the form of a novel, contains a severe and unjust arraignment of our denominational churches (though there is a basis, as every thoughtful churchman knows, for many of the criticisms) and offers the puerile solution alluded to above. The book comes to a wonderful climax and presents a beautiful picture of religious worship and work; but it is another Utopian dream.

The book will give the critics of the churches a few more stones for their slings. The plan for reaching the masses is simply silly. This review is written to let our readers know what they are asked to buy.—Editorial in Baltimore Southern Methodist, Aug. 11.

The cross speaks of the love of God. God's love for the world is revealed in his word, in his temporal gifts, and in his corrective discipline. But the clearest revelation of his love is found in the cross. If we are ever tempted to question the love of God, we should stand under the shadow of the cross. Surely we can trust ourselves with full assurance to such a love.—Dr. J. P. Marion.

LABOR SUNDAY MESSAGE—1927.

We print below the annual message of the Federal Council's Commission on the Church and Social Service for Labor Sunday, which falls this year on Sept. 4. As will be noted, the Message this year is brief so that it may be read in its entirety from the pulpit. It is suggested that every pastor read the Message on Labor Sunday or request his supply to do so in case he is absent on that day. The Message has been printed in attractive form on a single sheet and may be obtained, for posting or distribution, in any quantity at 75c a hundred from the Social Service Commission.

"The church and labor hold many common ideals. The Gospel of Jesus the Carpenter, which is the foundation of the Christian church, rests upon the love of God, who is the Father, and the service of all men, who are brothers. The social ideals of labor rest upon the essentially religious principles of service and sacrifice, of creative work, of brotherly friendliness, and of social justice. In the support of these common ideals, labor and the church stand together.

"On this Sunday, devoted to the cause of labor, it is appropriate for every church to reaffirm its support and allegiance to the common moral issues to which both labor and religion are committed. The church holds that human personality is sacred, and opposes all forms of exploitation and human degradation. It protests against the employment of children of tender years in denial of their right to growth and education, and the employment of men and women for over-long periods of labor. It stands for the payment of wages sufficient both to sustain and to enhance life, the right of workers to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and protection against unemployment and occupational accidents and diseases.

"It is fitting, too, that every church should continually affirm its belief in the application of the principles of Jesus in every industrial relation. The spirit of good-will expressed in advancing forms of industrial co-operation can reconcile the differences between managament and men, and eliminate the human and material wastes of conflict. That these statements are not vague ideals, but are actual programs coming to pass, is shown by the proposals of the American Federation of Labor for co-operation with management to increase efficiency and production, and by the growing number of instances where labor and management are actually working together for these same purposes.

"Unceasing concern for the lot of the workers, their wives and children, is the inevitable expression by the churches of that love which led Christ to turn to the multitudes and to become the passionate advocate of their welfare. The labor movement is the self-conscious organized expression of the workers' struggle for a more abundant life. It is impossible for the church of Christ to devote itself passionately to the welfare of the masses of the people and not to have sympathetic relations with organized labor. This does not mean that the church should become partisan, but rather that it must fulfill the commands of Christ in expressing his intense human interest. In fact the church has a right to expect the support of its members, in principle at least, in its efforts to lift the status of the under-privileged. In striving for the better life for them the church finds itself touching elbows with labor, and they together may perform a great service in the promotion of a more just and brotherly order in America."

ALLURING ARIZONA.

"Alluring Arizona" is the name of a new book from the pen of Dr. W. H. Nelson, the versatile editor of the Pacific Methodist Advocate. In his own inimitable style Dr. Nelson has written of the various peoples who have inhabited the arid zone of Arizona. He tells of the Cliff Dwellers, the early Indians, the Conquistadores, the heroic Missioners, the Mexicans, the Apaches, the Americans. He brings before you the panorama of fertile vales, peaceful natives, invading enemies, bloody struggles, massacres, turmoil and revolutions until the past fades and the Arizona of today emerges with its wealth of natural resources and its prospects of prosperity and greatness. But it is not so much the history of its people as it is the scenic wonders of Arizona of which the author writes. You see with him the beauties of the Painted Desert, the marvels of the Petrified Forests, the awe-inspiring vastness of the Grand Canon, the weirdness of ancient dwellings hung up in the cliffs, the glories of the mighty mountains with their sheen of shining snow. Over it all he has thrown a glamor of romance and mystery that make the book most charming. Two classes of people will enjoy this book most heartily—those who have never seen Arizona; they will be thrilled with the author's colorful descriptions. Those who have visited this wonderland will, as they read, live over again their memorable experiences.

The book may be ordered from our Publishing House, Lamar & Whitmore, Nashville, Tenn.

"TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN."

Dear Mr. Editor: Please republish the following statement from H. J. Maddox, of Laurel, Miss., which appeared in the issue of May 5:

"To Whom It May Concern:

"After twenty-two years of active, faithful services in the traveling connection, filled with hardships, privations, and sacrifices, accomplishing as much for Christ and the church as the average preacher, I cannot have the proper respect for myself and family and submit to location, against my will and wishes, on the grounds 'of inefficiency and unacceptability.' Therefore, after due consideration, I voluntarily withdraw from the membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South."

Signed: H. J. MADDOX,
Laurel, Miss.

Another to Whom It May Concern:

As presiding elder of the Newton District, in which the said H. J. Maddox was living at the time he issued the above statement—and is now living—and to whom he should have surrendered his "credentials" authorizing him to preach in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, when he decided to withdraw from the church, I wish to state that he has refused to surrender said "credentials." After waiting for some time to hear from Brother Maddox, and still no word came, I wrote him a letter calling his attention to the fact that, having withdrawn from the church, it was his duty to return to the church the "credentials" the church had given him, authorizing him to preach in said church.

He did not answer my letter. On the 19th of August I had a personal conversation with him in his office in Laurel. He still refused to surrender the "credentials." I told him, that would necessitate my giving a statement to the New Orleans Christian Advocate calling attention to his action in this matter, hence I am giving this statement to the public.

L. E. ALFORD, Presiding Elder,
Newton District, Mississippi Conference.

A GREAT ACHIEVEMENT IN CONSOLIDATION.

The Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., has given all the churches a demonstration of the feasibility of merging or consolidating several boards. Six years ago, the General Assembly of this church created a commission and instructed it to take all the necessary steps to bring about the reorganization and consolidation of sixteen boards and agencies into four. The organization and setting up of the new Board of Christian Education, which took over all the educational work of this church, called for the greatest and most radical changes of the whole scheme of reorganization. All educational institutions, including Sunday schools, all moral welfare and men's work, all student aid and recruiting were to be promoted and financed by this new board.

The board's fourth annual report has just been published and distributed. It is a book of 198 pages, and gives in detail the progress of all phases of Christian education as carried on by this branch of the Presbyterian Church. How completely and successfully this rather remarkable merger of church boards has been made is indicated by the following quotation from the General Secretary's report, which is the only reference in the whole book to there ever having been several boards instead of one:

"The word consolidation, as referring to a recent ecclesiastical episode in the Presbyterian Church, is now to disappear from the current vocabulary of this board. Putting together five old, highly effective agencies that had been in operation in the field of education for most of a century, adding to them three departments that were born of the urgent needs of the day, and then welding these groups with all their traditions and personalities into a functioning unit, and doing this in four years, has been an interesting denominational experience. But it is now complete, and this board in its literature and its public statements does not intend ever to excuse its shortcomings by pleading this disconcerting experience of consolidation, now happily in the past."

A LETTER.

President of Faith and Order League.

Dear Brother: The circular, bearing the numerous names of various brethren concerning what purports to be an order within the membership of the North Mississippi Conference—to hand.

I have no desire to join such an order for the following reasons:

1. I took vows for such action when I joined the church and Conference.
2. I see no use on earth for such an order.
3. If there be men who are in position of leadership of the church now or may be elected to such positions later who, after having taken the same vows, are found to be out of harmony with our standards of doctrine, this way of handling it will not succeed, as I see it.
4. It will raise more "snakes" of suspicion than it will kill.

Yours cordially,
Durant, Miss. C. M. CHAPMAN.

LOUISIANA MINISTERIAL FLOOD RELIEF FUND.

Dear Dr. Carley: Since my report to the Advocate some time since giving a list of receipts amounting to $3,928.12 for the Ministerial Flood Relief Fund up to July 20, I have received some two or three hundred dollars. I think it likely that collections have been taken in various places and the amounts subscribed not collected and turned in, and I would like to suggest through the Advocate that all churches or individuals, who are going to assist in this relief, will send in their remittance promptly, as we desire to make the last distribution in October and close out the entire matter before Conference. I am acting as treasurer of this fund at the request of the presiding elders of the Conference.

Yours sincerely,
T. W. HOLLOMAN.

FALSE HOPES.

How often do we look upon God as our last and feeblest resource. We go to him because we have nowhere else to go. And then we learn that the storms of life have driven us, not upon the rocks, but unto the desired haven.—G. MacDonald.

The Home Circle

LET NOT YOUR HEART BE TROUBLED.

Of the many and sweet old chapters
To comfort the children of men,
There is one where my soul seeks solace
Over and over again;
A comfort that comes to me ever,
Where I kneel by my quiet bed—
"Let not your heart be troubled,
Nor let it be afraid."

Sweeter than sweetest music,
Finer than the poet's art,
This promise of his that nestles
Like summer in my heart;
Out of the strife eternal,
Striving for daily bread—
"Let not your heart be troubled,
Nor let it be afraid."

O, wandering one and homeless,
This is the Father's grace:
"Let not your heart be troubled,
I go to prepare a place."
Solemnly some sweet morning,
Shall dawn the eternal peace,
When safe in his many mansions
Thy wanderings shall cease.

It comes as a gentle shower,
As the patter of cooling rain,
In the dust of life's lonely highway,
To quiet the pulse of Pain.
It comes as a peaceful presence
In the fever of midnight's dread—
"Let not your heart be troubled,
Nor let it be afraid."

No threat for the wrong committed,
No word for the task undone,
But only the dear God's pity,
Loving us every one.
Only the Father's promise
Of home when the day is dead,
Where the heart shall be no more troubled,
The soul be no more afraid.

THE GREATER LOVE.

Not long ago a business man had his wife call me on the telephone saying that he wanted to talk with me. When I called upon him, his wife and daughter were present. The latter was a little girl, 9 years old. He could not talk louder than a whisper. A well known physician had told him that he had a cancer on his vocal cords, that the only hope for relief lay in an operation, and the chances were "even" whether he would recover from it. When in his whisper he reached that place in his story, the wife could no longer stand it, but left the room. He continued in his whisper to me: "Day before yesterday I made my will. I have settled all my business affairs. I am going to the hospital to-morrow morning. I want some help in my spiritual condition. I face the unknown."

The little girl sat on my lap, and apparently ignoring what her father had said, I began to talk to her, and said, "Mary Katherine, you look well fed. Do you get enough to eat? Aren't you worried about your breakfast to-morrow morning?"

She smilingly said, "Oh, no, my Daddy gives me all that I can eat."

Then I played with her dress and said, "You have a nice school dress, but some day that will wear out. Aren't you worried about where your clothes are coming from?"

"Oh, no," she replied, "my mother makes all my dresses, and she will give me another one when this wears out."

"You must have a good father and mother," I said.

"There are none so good in the world as my daddy and my mother," she promptly answered.

I then said to her, "Mary, where is your Bible?" She slid down off my lap and went for her Bible. I turned to my friend and asked, "Did you hear what Mary Katherine said?"

He was looking rather blankly at me. Possibly he wondered whether that was all I had to say to a man who knew the seriousness of his physical condition, and whether I had no other message for him. When Mary Katherine came back with the Bible I opened it at Matthew 7:9-11. I said, "My friend, I want to read you a few words that Jesus spoke. It summed up his own religion, and he meant it to describe the kind that you and I should live. I am going to read these words, translating them into the language at a busy downtown corner. A crowd is around him, wondering what that man is trying to do. He looks upon the crowd, sees it composed of men and women like us, and he looks you squarely in the eye and says, 'What parent is there of you, who, if your child asks bread, will hunt around on the street for a stone, and give your child that to eat? Or, if your own offspring asks a piece of fish, will hunt around until you find a wriggling snake, and hand that to your child to eat?'" I could see a little shudder in the large body of my friend at the very thought that he would give his child a cobblestone or a poisonous snake for food. His father's heart rebelled against such a preposterous idea.

I read the next verse to him. "If you, then, for all that you know about evil, and imperfect as you are, know how to give good things to Mary Katherine, how much more will your Father who is in heaven give good things to all his children?"

Then my friend buried his face in the hair of his child, who nestled up to him with a childlike love and faith and trust in her father. Through his sobs, I heard him whisper to his child, "Precious little girlie, never mind anything that I have ever brought to you. It is nothing. But who would ever have thought that you would have brought God to me!" After a minute he looked up at me with his wet eyes, and whispered, "It is all right. I now know that I have nothing to fear."

I told him that all he had to do at the hospitatl, and when he came out of it and entered once more into the struggles of life, was to remember, and to live every day in every event and experience, those three words, "how much more," and his own parent's heart would tell him more about how God felt toward him than all the sermons that ever could be preached. For God had given him that little daughter in order that through his own parental feeling he might come to know how God felt toward him.

He looked at me with a smile and said, "Is this religion?" I answered, "That is the kind that Jesus lived—he wants us to share its joys with him."—Florida Baptist Witness.

WHY MEN FAIL.

Every failure can be made a step toward success. Every time we detect the cause of a failure we have gained knowledge that will guide us to success. Success is not rare—it is common. Very few miss a measure of it. Books upon books have been written on "how to succeed." Such books should be as unnecessary as treatises on "how to be healthy." For success is as natural and normal as good health, and if we fail it is because we have violated one or more of the fixed principles of success.

Some one has set down the ten most common causes of failure. Look over this list and check yourself up by it. If your system is free from any and all of these ten varieties of failure-bacilli, then you are to be congratulated. You are a success:

1. Finding fault with the other fellow, but never seeing your own.
2. Doing as little as possible and trying to get as much as possible for it.
3. Spending too much time in showing up the other fellow's weak points and too little time correcting your own.
4. Slandering those we do not like.
5. Procrastination—putting off till to-morrow something that we should have done the day before yesterday.
6. Deceit—talking friendly to the other fellow's face and stabbing him in the back as soon as he turns around.
7. False belief that we are smart enough to reap a harvest of pay before sowing a crop of honest service.
8. Disloyalty to those who have trusted us.
9. Egotism—the belief that we know all and no one can teach us anything.
10. Last, but not least, lack of necessary training and education to enable us to stand at the head in our line of work.—Nuggets.

TEMPLE YIELDS FACTS ABOUT ANCIENT MEXICO.

A sumptuous chamber, the walls of which are covered with fresco paintings, said to be very similar to those found in the prehistoric temple of horticulture in the archeological city of San Juan Teotihuacan, in the Valley of Mexico, is reported to have been discovered in the Maya ruins at Chichen Itza, Yucatan, by Dr. Sylvanus G. Morley, in charge of archeological investigations in Yucatan under the auspices of the Carnegie institution of Washington, D. C., and the Mexican government.

The frescoes are said to be marvelously preserved and it is expected that when the picture writings are finally deciphered by scientists much new light will be shed on the history of Maya civilization.

Doctor Morley announced to the Mexican government that his work of exploration has been stopped for the year, because of the intense heat. —Selected.

AN EFFECTIVE COLLEGE OF LIBERAL ARTS.

The Association of American Colleges has for several years been telling us what it takes to constiute an "efficient college," or "an effective college," to use the more recent terminology. At its 1927 meeting the Association devoted much time to the discussion of this topic, especially the problem of financing an effective college. President Cowling, of Carleton College, presented a rather exhaustive analysis of the financial needs of a college of liberal arts for one thousand students—five hundred and fifty men and four hundred and fifty women. Although the institution described by Dr. Cowling is, perhaps, an ideal rather than a real one, still his conclusions as to the requirement and needs of an effective college are interesting and suggestive to the friends and advocates of the church college of liberal arts. To be most effective such a college must have, according to President Cowling:

1. An educational plant valued at $3,500,000.
2. An endowment of $6,792,350 for current expenses, $625,000 for student scholarships and loans, and $1,000,000 for annual additions to the permanent equipment—making a total endowment of $8,417,350.
3. An annual expenditure of $589,617, or more than $500 for each student, for current educational expenses.

The total cost per student of maintaining this effective college, including the interest on the money invested in grounds and buildings, is $769.42. It is proposed that those students who receive no financial help from the college should pay an annual tuition fee of $250. In other words, the tuition fees in an effective college should pay considerably less than one-third of the actual cost of each student's education.

BISHOP CANDLER'S BIRTHDAY.

ent. It was a representative, even a distinguished company. * * *

"The following program was rendered: 'Bishop Candler as a Man and Friend,' H. Y. McCord, Sr.; 'Bishop Candler as President of Emory College,' E. A. Pound; solo, 'The End of a Perfect Day,' Floyd Jennings; 'Bishop Candler as Chancellor of Emory University,' W. D. Thompson; chorus, 'Sewanee River,' Susannah Wesley Bible Class; 'Bishop Candler as an Author,' A. M. Pierce; 'Bishop Candler as Citizen of Atlanta and Georgia,' H. W. Hill. Bishop Beauchamp was expected to speak, but other engagements carried him out of the city.

"Mr. Perry Bloodworth, in whose mind and heart the occasion took inception, and who did so much to bring it to consummation, was next introduced. After appropriate remarks, Mr. Bloodworth then presented Bishop Candler, in the name of the Druids Hill Church, an elegant loving cup. Mr. W. D. Thompson came forward also and presented to Bishop Candler a $5,000 bond that had been presented to Emory University by one of the Bishop's friends with the instruction that the interest on this bond should go to Bishop Candler during his life, as a birthday present from this friend.

"It was fitting and indeed imperative, if the occasion was not to be seriously blemished, that Mrs. Candler should receive tribute. For many blessed years she has enriched him with the wealth of her great love. She has never elected a career. Her home has been her career. Ever thoughtful of his comfort and always concerned that his exacting labors should not only not be hindered but rather abetted, she has been a pattern of wifely devotion. Called to the front by the chairman, she was met by Mrs. Hugh H. Harris, who presented her a magnificent bouquet.

"When Bishop Candler rose to respond to the address and presentations, the audience stood en masse and applauded tumultuously. * * *

"The audience sang, 'God Be With You Till We Meet Again,' after which Dr. F. N. Parker dismissed with prayer.

"Bishop Candler received more than one hundred and fifty telegrams of congratulation and good will. These came from every part of the United States and even from other countries."

BISHOP CANDLER AS AN AUTHOR.

By Dr. A. M. Pierce, Editor, Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

(In connection with the celebration of Bishop Candler's seventieth birthday, Dr. A. M. Pierce, editor of the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, paid a tribute to "Bishop Candler as an Author." At our special request, Dr. Pierce kindly furnished us with a copy of his remarks at the reception at Druids Hill Church, and we give them herewith for the pleasure of our readers.)

Had Bishop Candler made no contribution to his day beyond the productions of his pen, he would have made mankind immensely his debtor.

To go no further back, in his early manhood he was called to be assistant editor of the Christian Advocate, and his editorials added to the prestige of that always influential periodical. Since the severance of that relation, he has continued even until now to make frequent and valued contributions to the church press. For many years he has furnished an article every week for the Magazine Section of the Atlanta Journal. So popular have these discussions proved that requests multiplied for their preservation in more permanent form, and "Current Comments on Timely Topics" appeared. Among the other volumes that own his authorship may be named: "Christus Auctor;" "High Living and High Lives;" "Great Revivals and the Great Republic;" "Practical Studies in the Fourth Gospel," two volumes; "The Kingdom of God's Dear Son;" "Life of Thomas Coke;" "Bishop Charles Betts Galloway," and "The Christ and the Creed." His literary output has increased rather than diminished with the years, the last two named volumes having appeared within the last seven months. And with growing numbers there is sustained vigor.

Bishop Candler has been not only a prolific writer, he has been a purposeful writer. Not penurious gain, not popularity, not personal prestige has urged his creative activity. A sublime consecration has bound his whole life into beautiful unity. While yet a youth he met Christ in the way and from that day the Savior has been his central theme, whether in the pulpit or on the printed page. Through the years the increasing stature of his Divine Master has immeasurably out-towered any other and every other figure, filling his whole horizon. The gospel of his Lord has embraced for him within its compass the complete circumference of every human need—personal, domestic, social, business, economic, industrial, civic, moral, spiritual, national, international, world. In Christ he has found the panacea for every individual and racial ill; in him he has found the fine fulfillment of every longing hope; in him the wise solution of every vexing question. Whatever the topic under immediate consideration, it always climaxed in the appeal, "I beseech you in Christ's stead be ye reconciled to God" as the all-sufficient and only answer to every varied and complicated earthly situation.

Bishop Candler is a powerful writer, both destructively and constructively, whether in the realm of morals or doctrine. As an antagonist, he is deadly. With almost uncanny precision he discerns the fallacy in a syllogism, and with ponderous blows beats a false argument into tiny fragments. With equal discernment he visualizes the strength of truth, and with rare skill builds reason upon reason to rear a stately structure, at once symmetrical and impregnable. In his advocacy of righteousness he enlists the wealth of wide reading, of patient investigation, of prolonged meditation, of masterful thinking. In fit combination he employs a biting irony, a blighting sarcasm, a withering ridicule, a devastating logic, a convincing argument, a scintillating wit, a kindly humor, a moving pathos, a melting tenderness, an illuminating illustration, a persuasive outlook, an expanding suggestion, an horizon-lifting outlook. Thoughts now simple, now profound, clothe themselves frequently in the vernacular of the common people, sometimes in the chaste diction of the schools. And then, just as in speech, he climbs almost at will the dizzy heights of oratory and walks with confident stride the lofty altitudes of eloquence, so, when occasion calls, his pen flows in graceful rhythmic periods which add to charm both elegance and strength.

Bishop Candler is a productive writer. It is not for naught that through the toilsome hours he labors at his desk. He mightily molds opinion and over wide areas. Into the homes of the poor and the rich, the ignorant and the learned, the obscure and the prominent, the sinner and the saint, his printed message finds its way. In city and country, in places high and low, his brave words rebuke wrong, undermine the foundations of falsehood while they undergird the pillars of personal and social righteousness. In individual hearts they weaken doubt, strengthen faith, invigorate hope, ennoble ideals, put iron in the blood, and entice to daring endeavor. To multitudes he stands as the indomitable and dauntless champion of the old faith. When his keen blade flashes in fight, thousands thank God and take courage. Youth, bewildered by conflicting opinions, hears one certain voice, listens to clear accents in which there is no quiver of doubt, and dares to tread the old paths. Middle age, sometimes bending and almost breaking, wondering if after all there is any firm footing for its faith, hears the positive declaration, "I know whom I have believed and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed to him against that day," lifts its drooping head and trudges triumphantly on. Old age rests more serenely upon the confession that has conferred conquest on many a hard-fought field, and when its path at last passes through the valley of the shadow of death, they enter those dark spaces more securely because Bishop Candler has assured them that the good Shepherd, the same good Shepherd as of old, will go with them all the way.

To write as he has written and is writing makes life worth living.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. and Mrs. Claude K. Smith, Pineville, La., announce the birth of a son, Claude K., Jr., on July 29. Blessings upon parents and child!

The bids for the new Lake Charles, La., Methodist church were opened on Sept. 1. We have not learned to whom the contract was awarded.

Rev. J. E. Selfe and wife, of Lake Providence, La., leave on the 12th inst in their car to visit relatives at Jackson, Mich.

Rev. P. M. Caraway, our wide-awake pastor at Winnfield, La., sends us a list of seven subscriptions to the Advocate, with check to cover, for which he has our sincere thanks.

Rev. C. T. Floyd, of Moorhead, Miss., assisted Rev. H. P. Lewis in a meeting at Doddsville, Miss., Aug. 21-26, that was in every way a success, and resulted in five additions to the membership of the church on profession of faith.

We appreciate a friendly note from Mr. B. F. Webb, Route 3, Memphis, Tenn. Mr. Webb formerly lived in the bounds of the North Mississippi Conference, near Holly Springs. He has been for many years a subscriber to the Advocate.

Since Monday, Labor Day, was a legal holiday, no mail was delivered in New Orleans; hence it may be that some communications intended for this issue of the Advocate were unavoidably left out.

Rev. O. C. Hull, Dual Extension Secretary for the Mississippi Conference, recently held a Standard Cokesbury Training Class at Adams church, with seventeen members applying for credit. This is the first class of the kind ever held at this historic church.

Dr. J. F. Walker, head of the Department of Education at Millsaps College, recently resigned his position to accept a similar place at the University of Arizona. His place at Millsaps has been filled by the election of Dr. Marvin Beeson, son of Dr. J. W. Beeson, formerly president of Meridian College.

Professor George Lott Harrell, of Millsaps College, paid the Advocate office an appreciated call on Monday morning of this week. With his family, he was passing through New Orleans on a vacation automobile trip, planning to drive as far as Florida perhaps, and to return to Jackson by way of Atlanta and Birmingham.

Miss Irma Cochran, of Lucedale, Miss., sends us a report of a recent fine meeting held at the Cross Roads church, in which the preaching was done by Rev. Percy Vaughan, of Ellisville, Miss. The pastor, Rev. W. E. Wedgeworth, worked diligently for the success of the meeting, and much good was accomplished.

In a letter to this office, dated September 3, Rev. N. E. Joyner, Presiding Elder of the Monroe District, says: "Rev. J. E. Selfe, of Lake Providence, had a very good revival with 19 accessions by profession of faith. Rasmussen assisted Smart in a meeting at Crew Lake with 2 accessions. Carraway assisted Faulk at Bonita with 15 accessions."

All the station preachers of the Corinth District, North Mississippi Conference—Rev. G. C. Schwartz, Rev. A. T. McIlwain, Rev. J. W. Raper, Rev. T. H. Dorsey, Rev. W. H. Mounger—have spent a busy season assisting the brethren in revivals, with the most gracious results. Every pastor in the district has engaged in revival work, many Sunday school institutes have been held, and the work moves on well—so Rev. E. H. Cunningham, the presiding elder, writes us.

Mrs. S. C. Taylor, secretary, writes that the recent session of the Cleveland camp meeting, Cleveland, Miss., was a good one. The preaching was done by Rev. E. E. McKeithen, our pastor at Drew, Miss. E. E. McKeithen, Jr., and Miss Thelma McKeithen assisted with the music, with Miss Elsie Brinkley, of Memphis, at the piano. There were several additions to the membership of the church, and the community was greatly revived. Rev. W. R. Goudelock, pastor, was in attendance upon the services.

We take the following from a recent issue of the Iuka (Miss.) Vidette: "Rev. Lud H. Estes, pastor of the Madison Heights Methodist Church, Memphis, and Jeff Cunningham, of Corinth, have completely captured the hearts of our Iuka people by their soul-searching preaching and excellent song leadership and sólo work. Mr. Estes is pastor of the second largest Methodist church in Memphis, a leader in our Southwide Methodism, and a man of winning and compelling personality. His sermons are expositions of the old-fashioned religion; they pulsate with quiet power, are as clear as crystal, and are frank and plain in their appeal to man. The song leadership of Jeff Cunningham is all that could be desired, while his clear, mellow voice charms all by its sweetness and melody. Unusual crowds are waiting upon the ministry of these two devoted servants of God." Brother Cunningham is a son of Rev. E. H. Cunningham, presiding elder of the Corinth District. He has assisted this summer in meetings at Tremont and Oxford Camp Ground, with Rev. A. T. McIlwain, of First Church, Corinth; at Rienzi, with Rev. G. C. Schwartz and Rev. M. A. Burns, and at Booneville, with Rev. W. H. Mounger.

NULLIFICATION IS LAW-BREAKING VIOLENCE.

By Senator William E. Borah.

"Some people go so far as to say that this nullification of the statutes is wrong in practice as well as theory, that the best way to get rid of a law is to enforce it. But the cost of trying to compel obedience to a law which violates the conscience of the considerable minority of the people or the traditional usages and privileges of anything like a majority is usually too great."

This is the doctrine put out by a distinguished educator whose business it is to train and direct the minds of American youth.

In plain, unadorned language, this says that if a considerable crowd can be gathered together, they are perfectly justified in breaking the law, in defying the authorities. The learned professor says nothing about the right and the power of the people to change laws, the right of the people to repeal laws, but assumes that the only way the people can deal with the law is to break it.

There is no law upon the statute books which may not be repealed. There is no provision of the Constitution which may not be changed.

I want to ask you: What would be the condition of this country in a single fortnight if every law displeasing to a considerable number of people were disregarded, some disregarding one law and some disregarding another? Whose home would be safe? Whose happiness would be secure? How long would we enjoy the blessings of orderly regulated liberty?

"And why does he speak of a considerable minority?" If it is good, it is good as a matter of principle, not dependent upon numbers, and just as good for a single individual as for a group.

Again it is said: "The attitude (of those who disbelieve in the law) should be one of acquiescence in and encouragement of the process of nullification."

Here is your doctrine. No repeal. No respect for the orderly process of government, but nullification is the general law-breaking violence.

By all means, let's have the judgment of the American people upon this policy. Let's recur to the "first principle" to find what the people think of this doctrine of lawlessness.—From address at annual meeting of Citizens' Committee of One Thousand at Washington.

"A PLAIN HAND."

As the bent frame of the rag-picker, the calloused hand of the laborer, the lowered shoulder of the desk worker tells its owner's vocation, so in fashion less obvious, but not less veracious, does a man's body reveal his habits of thought. The miser cannot prevent his hand from giving him away. Look into a man's eye, observe his gait, note the carriage of his head, and you can name his spiritual master—be it avarice, or suspicion, or revenge or what else. Hard thoughts fling a sort of mud into the eye. On the other hand, nobody can permanently hide the fire and fiber of an inner nobility. Said Carlyle once, as he passed through a hospital ward which specially recorded the havoc of sin: "God Almighty writes a very plain hand." But God writes also an equally plain and surprisingly beautiful hand in the looks and bodies of his saints. Some one declares that "if a man have any noble traits in his nature they come out in his photograph." More than that, they come out all over him.To have the approving witness of one's own body is worth a good life.—Selected.

A LITTLE PARABLE.

He wore a dress shirt. He had a blackboard. He wrote figures on it. He spoke of poles, of negative and positive, of amperes, and of words I cannot spell, for I only know the letter they begin with, and I am not dead sure of that. He said no one had ever seen electricity, and no one really knew what it was. He said it was highly mysterious. I agreed absolutely.

But on the way home my friend said, "This bus was started by an electric spark." And a little later, when the suburban train traveled quicker, and looked a hundred per cent cleaner than I had ever know it, he said that the line was electrified. And I ate my supper and read a book, and clambered upstairs, and went to bed by electric light.

And I lay in bed and thought of the many sermons I had preached on the theory of religion, and I said to myself, "I am in future, going to tell more of the magic of Christ's touch in every age, and on every conceivable type of man and woman, for we are most convinced of the reality of electricity and of true religion when we see what it is doing. For while the thought of an ampere leaves me cold and bewildered, something which lights a million rooms impresses me much."—Christian World.

THE FOOTPATH TO PEACE.

To be glad of life because it gives you the chance to love and to work and to play and to look up at the stars, to be satisfied with your possessions but not contented with yourself until you have made the best of them; to despise nothing in the world except falsehood and meanness, and to fear nothing except cowardice; to be governed by your admirations rather than by your disgusts; to covet nothing that is your neighbor's except his kindness of heart and gentleness of manners; to think seldom of your enemies, often of your friends, and every day of Christ, and to spend as much time as you can, with body and with spirit, in God's out-of-doors—these are little guide-posts on the footpath to peace.—Henry van Dyke.

PEACE OF THE HOMEWARD-BOUND.

Jesus was not primarily concerned with the praise or blame that met him on the way. These were the scenery of light and shadow which he passed. His task was to finish the work which was given him to do, and this distinctness of desire gave peace of mind.

It is the same with those rare characters which represent most perfectly the influence of Jesus Christ. Such persons trudge along the highway of life, not looking here and there for a peaceful spot by the wayside, but traveling toward home, and going, though wearily, yet peacefully, with a song upon their lips, they steer their course across the ocean of life, not as those who are lost in the vastness of the Universe and know not whither they are bound, but as those whose compass points true, and who can steady their course with peaceful hearts because they are sure of their course and their point.—Peabody.

The one who devotes himself as best he knows how to his duties, whatever they may be, realizes a satisfaction that amounts to real happiness.—Selected.

He was born in Homesville, Miss., Nov. 26, 1865, joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, there eafly in life, and lived a consistent life until death. He was married to Miss Rosa McEwen, Dec. 20, 1894. To this union were born three children, who, with their mother, reside in McComb. They, one brother and two sisters, and a host of relatives and friends are left to mourn their loss. After the impressive services held in the Centenary Methodist Church by Rev. C. C. Evans, assisted by Rev. J. F. Campbell, the Knights Templars held services at the cemetery. He was a faithful, good husband, kind and indulgent father, an example of friendliness and Christian fellowship.

J. T. ABNEY.

ANDREW HOWARD RIVERS was born Sept. 18, 1885, at Moray, Madison County, Miss., and died, at the age of 41, at Pocahontas, Miss. When a little boy Andrew Howard moved with his parents to Pocahontas, where his father served the railroad as a manager of one section, until death claimed him. Brother Rivers being the oldest boy, it was his lot, with the help of his mother, to carry on. Taking his father's place he served as foreman on this same section till his death. Brother Rivers joined the church early in life, and was a consistent member, serving the church as a steward till the end came. He was devoted to his church, and proved it by talking and working until the last. It was our privilege to see him often during the four months he was sick, and even when it took some effort to talk, he was asking about the affairs of the church. Andrew Howard was married to Miss Mary Baker, Aug. 12, 1914. To this union were born three girls: Mary Elizabeth, Frances Evelyn, Beulah Kathleen. Brother Rivers leaves besides his wife and these three attractive children, a mother, two brothers, and two sisters, also one half brother. The church as well as the community at large feel the loss, but we thank God for knowing him, and seeing such a beautiful faith expressed by words, and by the life he lived. May God richly bless the family.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, God in his infinite wisdom and according to his divine plan in dealing with his earthly children, has sent forth the messenger of death and called from us our beloved brother, friend and co-worker, HENRY E. FAIRBANK, and transferred him from his labors here, for, with, and among us, to his eternal home of rest beyond; and,

Whereas, Brother Fairbank was one of our most useful and faithful members, and an earnest and wise counselor and co-worker in the Master's cause; and,

Whereas, he was ready and willing at all times to take his stand for right and righteousness, and against wrong in all forms; and,

Whereas, his death is not only a distinct loss to this class, but to the church and the entire community; therefore,

Be it resolved, by the Men's Bible class of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of Sumrall, Miss., That in the death of Brother Fairbank this class has lost one of its most beloved and useful members and teachers, one whose name, life, and example for good, and whose earnest and wise counsel with us will ever be cherished by us as a precious memory.

Be it further Resolved, That we ex-

ZONE MEETING, EDWARDS, MISS.

Our third zone meeting of the year was held at Edwards in July, with Mrs. John Bush, zone leader, presiding, and representatives present from Bolton, Raymond, Learned, Cayuga, and Edwards; also visitors from Jackson and Bovina.

Devotional was conducted by Miss Mamie Detrick, using Romans 12, "Our bodies a living sacrifice." Minutes were read and auxiliary reports received.

In a splendid talk Mrs. Robert Bush, of Learned, presented "Problems of the Rural Church and Needs of Our Community." The greatest factors—keeping the young people, training leaders, and more old-time services.

Miss Rosa McNeil told with much interest something of her plans, of our school at Scarritt, and the Belle Bennett building.

In her message Mrs. Wood, District Secretary, stressed the spiritual cultivation period of the Jubilee and the necessity of helping our missionary candidate girls through college; urged a Wesley House box sent on time in September, and a love gift to Miss Rosa McNeil from each auxiliary, and spoke of the needs of the Moore House at Back Bay.

Glad features of the program were the delightful musical numbers given by Misses Bechelto and Kindricks, Miss Audry Bloxum and Mrs. C. L. King; the splendid report made by a member of the Edwards Juniors, and a delicious tea served during the social hour.

Mrs. Bush thanked all for their interest in the meeting, and our hostess for generous hospitality. Bolton was selected as next meeting place in October, and Mrs. Gaddis closed with prayer.

MRS. J. O. WARE, Secretary.

ZONE MEETING, RUSTON, LA.

Zone No. 2, of the Ruston District, held the third meeting of the year at Memorial Park, Ruston, in July, Mrs. F. S. Price, leader, presiding.

Mrs. Upchurch, of Ruston, gave the devotional, reading the one hundred and fourth Psalm, showing how God reveals himself to us in nature, and how willing he is to listen to us when we come to him in prayer.

Mrs. McClure, of Ruston, presented the Jubilee in a very forceful way, especially urging upon us the importance of a personal preparation and reconsecration before the Jubilee can become a real and tangible thing.

Mrs. Schaeddle, of Monroe, who, with her husband, has served our mission in the Congo Belge, gave a graphic description of our work there, telling especiallly of the life of the women and the work that is being done among them. She had with her many interesting souvenirs of the life there, which she showed and explained. A charming feature was the song in the native dialect by her little boy and girl.

At the close of the meeting a delicious picnic lunch was spread under the beautiful trees at Memorial Park, and a happy social hour was enjoyed by all.

MRS. R. W. AYRES.

METHODIST HEADQUARTERS IN JACKSON, AND ELSE.

It seems to me we should have in the city of Jackson, the capital of a great State, seat of two of the best institutions we Methodist folks have in the State, and four thriving churches, a place of some kind, to be known as "headquarters." With a constituency of over 100,000 members, vast Sunday school and educational interests, we should secure and equip a place of this kind. Our good Baptist brethren have it, and as we pass up Capitol Street we come upon this place, and can get most any book we want. It seems that the chairmen of all the connectional Boards of the two Conferences, especially the Boards of Christian Literature, could co-operate and do this thing.

I'd like to hear from any one interested in this move. The Publishing House at Nashville, I believe, would be willing to do anything possible to help this kind of an enterprise.

Let me say a few words, in all kindness, about the New Orleans Christian Advocate. I am saying this from my heart and in all kindness. We have a good paper, as well edited as any in the connection. The editor is one of the best in the connection. This I have from two of the bishops. They know.

If the leaders of the church in the territory to be served by a paper fail to espouse the cause and put it over it must fail. It will fail.

I call attention to a fact, a fact that revealed the interest in our Conference. An hour was set for the purpose of considering the proposition of the Conference organ. The time came, sample copies were ample, the proposition of the committees, publisher and editor, was read, and the time passed off, and so little interest was manifested that it was a complete fluke. To me it was a shame.

Just get your stick and knock. If the interest manifested was a criterion to go by, it's not surprising that we shall fall far short of reasonable expectations.

I have reason to know this is too much the case in the charges at home. When a great, vital, indispensable institution, the Conference organ, fails to secure the interests of the leaders, it is sure that some one falls down on the job.

Others do it and we can if we will. If we want to.

Excuse me, but these are words of soberness and truth.

W. H. SAUNDERS.

DEPEND ON CHRIST.

"Reckon on Christ to do his part perfectly. Directly you give, he takes. Directly you open the door, he enters. Directly you will open the floodgates, he pours in a glorious tide of fullness—fullness of wealth, of power, of joy. The clay has only to be plastic in the hand of a Palissy; the marble has only to be pliant to the chisel of a Michael Angelo; the organ has only to be responsive to the slightest touch of a Handel; the student has only to follow the least hint of a Faraday or a Whewell—and there will be no failure in results. Oh, to be equally susceptible to the molding influence of Christ! We shall not fail in realizing the highest ideal of which we are capable if only we will let him do his work unhindered."—F. B. Sunday School

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

By Rev. C. D. Atkinson, Conference Superintendent.

The fall training schools are under way, there being two in session at this time, one at Leesville and one at Hammond.

* * *

The office is in receipt of a splendid itemized financial statement of the Standard Training School held in Haynesville in May, at which time the Homer and Haynesville schools cooperated. The final count, after paying all honorariums and outstanding bills, showed a balance on hand to be returned to the district fund. We think this is interesting, as well as unusual, and we congratulate the leaders on their management of the school.

* * *

We were agreeably surprised to receive during the week a letter from our good friend, Brother Clell C. Gray, pastor of the Maysville, Mo., Methodist church. Brother Gray has recently visited in his old home at Zwolle, and had the pleasure of preaching to his friends there. We are particularly interested in what he has to say of the noted progress in his boyhood Sunday school, which is presided over by Brother S. H. Porter. Mr. Porter has been superintendent of the Zwolle Methodist Sunday school for the past twenty-five years, and has been a most faithful and interested worker. Brother Gray writes of the splendid worship programs of this school, having found them varied, inspirational and instructive, and it gives us the deepest pleasure to have this word of recognition of the valutble service being rendered in our school at Zwolle by Brother Porter.

* * *

We have enjoyed a copy of the Sunday School Messenger sent to us from Austin, Tex. This is a splendid and most informative paper, furnishing news of camps, leadership schools, training schools, etc.

A most enjoyable day was spent at Pine Grove, in the Minden District, on Wednesday, the 24th, at which time the Pine Grove community hostessed in the most whole-souled and hospitable manner the sub-district rally of that district.

The meeting was presided over by Dr. F. C. Wren, District Secretary. The devotional was conducted by Rev. K. W. Dodson, presiding elder, and after the recognitions Rev. P. M. Caraway, of Winnfield, substituting for Mrs. R. E. Smith, of Shreveport, spoke on the Young People and their work. Rev. A. K. McLellan spoke of the special days that the small Sunday schools should observe, and also took up the subject of missions in the Sunday school, in the absence of Rev. H. E. Pfost, of Springhill. Worship in the Sunday school was discussed by Prof. Raulins, of Mansfield, and during the departmental hour Mrs. F. C. Wren had charge of the elementary groups, while the groups including the work of the Young People, Adults and Missions, were combined under the leadership of Rev. C. D. Atkinson and Mr. A. A. Wren, of Baton Rouge, District Superintendent of the Adult Department of the Baton Rouge District.

At the noon hour a bountiful and delicious dinner was served, that took us back to our boyhood days of fish fry and picnic delights.

The meeting proved a family reunion for the Wren family, which was quite an interesting part of the program. A call was made for recognition of all members present who had been present at the organization of the original Pine Grove Sunday school. Mrs. Ellen Wren, who was, at the time of organization seventy years ago, little ten-year-old Ellen Carr, was the only one to respond to this call. Present with Mrs. Wren were her daughter, Miss Ava Wren, superintendent of the Pine Grove Sunday school; and her sons, Dr. F. C. Wren, superintendent of the Sunday school at Winnfield and District Secretary of the Minden District; Mr. A. A. Wren, Adult Department superintendent at First Church at Baton Rouge, and district superintendent of Adult Work in the Baton Rouge District; Dr. H. P. Wren, associate district lay leader, of Vivian, La., and Mr. Marcus Wren, former superintendent of the Pine Grove Sunday school, together with their respective families. The only absent son was Mr. L. P. Wren, of Minden, who is a member of the board of stewards of the Minden church and an active Sunday school member. Mrs. Wren is now 80 years of age, active in every particular, thoroughly interested in Sunday school and church work. This is a remarkable family of church workers, and it was indeed a pleasure to visit in their home after the rally.

We find a word of praise for the Pine Grove Sunday school in keeping with its progress. The school is checked, has a wall chart with a number of stars denoting accomplishments, and has several rooms for group graded work.

Among those present was Rev. C. H. Sheppard, the pastor, who did much to make the occasion a success.

A letter from Brother I. T. Reames, pastor of the Eunice Methodist church, tells us the interesting news of a Teacher Training class organized in Eunice and being taught by the principal of the high School on "Principles of Religious Teaching."

* * *

An interesting letter is at hand from our chairman, Brother W. Winans Drake, of Ruston, telling of his pleasant and profitable journeyings, and stating that things are shaping up for his Training School. These are busy days as the leaders return from Junaluska and Mount Sequoyah and get into the work of the nine scheduled Training Schools for Louisiana this fall.

* * *

We are interested to note a detailed report of the Sunday School Day offering up to the present time. Vacherie, La., is the latest school to send in an offering. By districts we now stand as follows:

Alexandria District: First Church, $60.46; Glenmora, $9.59; Lecompte, $6.50. Total, $76.55.

Baton Rouge District: Keener Memoria, $25; Vacherie, $1.60; Clinton, $14.09; Ethel, $7; Angie, $2.50; Fisher, $2; Bogalusa, $30; First Church, Baton Rouge, $56.65. Total, $137.24.

Lake Charles District: Barham, $12.50; Crowley, $17.15; Gueydan, $4.50; Lake Charles, $50; Leesville, $7.70; Sulphur, $4.20; Vinton, $12.50. Total, $108.55.

Minden District: Campti, $2; Davis Springs, $9.32; Plain Dealing, $5.80; Standard, $3.60; Winnfield, $30; Brashwood, $5. Total, $55.72.

Monroe District: Bonita, $5; Oak Ridge, $15; West Monroe, $14.60. Total, $34.60.

New Orleans District: Bayou Blue, $1.40; Covington, $5; Lockport, $1; Carrollton Avenue, $38.46; Epworth, $16; Mary Werlein, $2.03; Louisiana Avenue, $10; McDonoghville, $5; Rayne Memorial, $88.25; Second Church, $15; St. Mark's, $10. Total, $192.14.

Ruston District: Dubach, $10; Harmony, $5; Eros, $4.40; Haynesville, $23.41; Homer, $36.69; Ruston, $50; New Prospect, $5.25. Total, $134.75.

Shreveport District: Mangum Memorial, $10; Noel Memorial, $38.26; Vivian, $6; Ida, $5.42. Total, $59.68. Grand total, $800.83.

As there are a great many schools in all the districts yet to observe Sunday School Day, we sincerely trust that this necessary fund will be greatly increased before the end of the Conference year.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Eighteen men who love children and young people have sent for material to be used in the observance of Children's Week. Let us have at least forty others to do likewise. If you have never done this, please give it a trial this year. The time is passing and reports will have to be made.

One important item for the pastor to consider at the fourth quarterly conference is the nomination of some one as superintendent of the Sunday school. Most pastors are limited to a few men who are willing to assume this responsibility. The first thing in a superintendent, he should be a man with a conscious knowledge of Jesus Christ, with a growing experience of his saving grace. He should be willing to study his Bible and good books pertaining to his work constantly. He should have a love for people, young and old. He should be willing to take as well as give advice. He should be able to do team work. He should be punctual in all his engagements. He should love to work hard and work constantly. A man may not have these qualities, but he can attain them if he so desires. The pastor who has a mind to, can aid very materially in helping a man become what he ought to be. If a superintendent is not religious and is not willing to study, the school might get on without him better than with him. Numbers of superintendents have grown to be great, good men simply because they have tried to fill the place as it ought to be filled.

I believe the biggest task the superintendent has is to help his teachers become thoroughly qualified for their delicate and difficult task of presenting Jesus Christ in such a way that he will be seen and felt and known by those who are taught. The first item in Point VII in our Program of Work is to appoint some one to take charge of training officers and teachers; this person is to see that every teacher and officer has the opportunity of reading at least one book a year pertaining to the work they are doing. No school is so small or far back that the teachers cannot read a good book, whether any one tells them or not. I shall be glad to mail any book needed by a teacher who wants to read. The pastor of any church will be glad to lend one or more books to the teacher who cares to read. The pastor who is a crank on the matter of getting his people to read the periodicals and books of the church is in demand everywhere. The free literature furnished by the Sunday School Board that can be had for the asking will help any man or woman to become more efficient in the work they have to do in building the kingdom.

The following have received diplomas recently: Mrs. L. H. Roberts, of Agricultural and Mechanical College; Mrs. B. F. Bullard, of Shannon; Mrs. E. L. Rawles, of Sherard; Mrs. R. P. Neblett, of Kosciusko. Mrs. R. A. McRee, of Grenada, received her Blue Seal, and Mrs. H. C. Gotcher, of Sherard, received her Gold Seal at Mount Sequoyah. Thus the good work goes on slowly but surely.

Not many people know that North Mississippi Conference had three instructors at Lake Junaluska this summer: Mrs. V. R. McDonald, and Miss Virginia Thomas, at one time Conference Elementary Superintendents, and Miss Martha DuBerry, who has charge of Religious Education at Tupelo. The two latter, Misses Thomas and DuBerry, are graduates of Grenada College, and Mrs. McDonald of Randolph Macon. The Sunday School Board of the North Mississippi Conference is making a large contribution to the church at large.

LOUISIANA YOUNG PEOPLE'S REVIVAL.

By special appointment of the Louisiana Conference Epworth League Board, I have been selected to promote the Young People's revival in our State. The possibilities of this great movement cannot be foretold. God is calling for a consecrated youth to receive the mantle of responsibility in many kingdom enterprises. We have many fine young peoople in Louisiana who are consecrated Leaguers, active Christians; but thousands more must be won for God, the church, kingdom service, or they will find activity in other channels. What are we to do?

Please notice the plans for the Young People's revival:

Six weeks' preparation:

1. Orgnize prayer meetings with leaders carefully selected by Council, with pastor's approval.

2. Organize weekly study class for Young People in personal evangelism. (Use text approved by Central office. See page 19, September Era.) Remember this is a personal workers' campaign, with Leaguers themselves as evangelists.

3. Organize the committees: Committee on Publicity, Committee of Music, Committee of Ushers (happy welcome).

4. On Sept. 11, discuss in devotional meeting the topic, "Lay preaching as a Means of Spreading the Gospel." (Leaguers, consider carefully how you, as young laymen, can accomplish by the same means, lay preaching, or personal evangelism.)

5. Observe self-denial week (Sept. 25 to Oct. 2). This cannot be emphasized too greatly. Practice some definite self-denial for Christ.

6. The Revival in Action: (Oct. 2-9.) Use pastors or Young People so far as possible. Use as many young people as personal workers as can be secured. (See theme Suggestion September Era, page 19.) Union revivals suggested for Shreveport and New Orleans.

7. Follow-up campaign: Remember the League slogan: "For the church always." Line up every individual for some definite service.

For further information read the September Era and the Promotional Letters that will be sent through the District Secretaries.

Yours for a consecrated youth,

DON. E. DULANY,

Vice President, Louisiana Conference Epworth League Board.

A REPORT FROM THE JUNALUSKA ASSEMBLY.

At the recent General Epworth League Assembly at Lake Junaluska, N. C., our Conference was represented by six people. They were: Mrs. Yathright and Margaret Yathright, Vicksburg; Grace Lewis and Faye Timmerman, from Hattiesburg; Mrs. Stewart Dunning, of Canton, and D. C. Camp, of Picayune.

We have been fortunate in securing a report from one of these representatives for the next issue of the paper. We also have one from our Conference Secretary, who was the official delegate to this Assembly. Because of the length of the reports we will let the other appear in a later issue of the paper.

FROM RINGGOLD, LA.

Dear Dr. Carley: The Methodist people have pulled down their old house of worship and are building a new church more adequate to our needs in service and worship. We are doing our best to complete the construction by Conference.

We were able to put our protracted meeting off until nearing its completion. We began on Aug. 14, in the Baptist new brick church. They tendered their beautiful building to us for worship until we could get in our new church with our protracted meeting.

Dr. C. F. Wimberly, of Charleston, S. C., came and began preaching on Tuesday. We held our first service in the Methodist church Tuesday night. We had large crowds at each service. Dr. Wimberly did some old-fashioned revival preaching, day and night. It met the need of our church and community. The church was ready for a revival. She had complied with St. Paul's exhortation to the Romans: 1. "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. 2. And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God." I Thes. 4: 1. "Furthermore, then we beseech you, brethren, and exhort you by the Lord Jesus, that as ye have received of us how ye ought to walk and to please God, so you would abound more and more. 2. For ye know what commandments we gave you by the Lord Jesus." I have not seen a church move with such power in all my ministry. From the first altar call folk were reclaimed, converted and sanctified. Some were consecrated to God's service at each meeting.

Closing out Sunday night, Aug. 28, we received a class of fifty-three to add to our church register—thirty by baptism, many by vows, and a few by church certificate.

Any man who needs a good old-time evangelist to help in a meeting will make no mistake in employing Dr. C. F. Wimberly, of Charleston, S. C. He is a great man of God.

I ask you readers to pray for us that we may go on to a mighty harvest for our Master.

NATCHITOCHES STANDARD TRAINING SCHOOL.

The second session of the Natchitoches Standard Training School, held at Natchitoches the opening week of the State Normal College, Sept. 18-23, will afford Sunday school workers and Bible students some fine opportunities of work. The four classes offered are: "Life of Jesus," taught by Dean R. E. Smith; "Story-Telling in Religious Education," taught by Mrs. W. W. Templeton; "Organization and Administration of the Sunday School," taught by Dr. W. W. Holmes; and a Cokesbury course, "The Small Sunday School," taught by Rev. A. K. McLellan.

The pastoral charges of Campti, Rev. P. O. Lowrey, pastor; Pleasant Hill, Rev. D. F. Anders, pastor; Kurthwood-Alco, Rev. P. H. Fontaine, pastor; Provencal, Rev. W. E. Anding, pastor, and Natchitoches, Rev. H. L. Johns, pastor, are co-operating, and it is hoped that 100 credits will be issued. Any one desiring to attend will please write the undersigned.

Dr. Caldwell's 3 Rules Keep You Healthy

Dr. Caldwell watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time regardless of how much one tries to avoid it. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation, known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the most delicate system and is not a habit forming preparation. Syrup Pepsin is pleasant-tasting, and youngsters love it. It does not gripe. Thousands of mothers have written us to that effect.

Dr. Caldwell did not approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for human beings to put into their system. In a practice of 47 years he never saw any reason for their use when a medicine like Syrup Pepsin will empty the bowels just as promptly, more cleanly and gently, without griping and harm to the system.

Keep free from constipation! It robs your strength, hardens your arteries and brings on premature old age. Do not let a day go by without a bowel movement. Do not sit and hope, but go to a druggist and get one of the generous bottles of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Take the proper dose that night and by morning you will feel like a different person. Use Syrup Pepsin for yourself and members of the family in constipation, biliousness, sour and crampy stomach, bad breath, no appetite, headaches, and to break up fevers and colds. Always have a bottle in the house, and observe these three rules of health: Keep the head cool, the feet warm, the bowels open.

We would be glad to have you prove at our expense how much Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin can mean to you and yours. Just write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, and we will send you prepaid a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE.

LETTER FROM REV. L. I. McCAIN.

Dear Mr. Editor: I am having an unusually fine vacation. My wife, a couple of friends of Minden, and myself drove by auto to Detroit, and then crossed the Detroit River into Canada, and drove 256 miles through Canada to the Canadian side of Niagara Falls. Storing my car at Niagara Falls, we came down the Niagara gorge to Queenston, Canada, and caught a boat over Lake Ontario to Toronto. There we got another and larger boat and continued the voyage across the rest of the lake and up the St. Lawrence River to Montreal. We passed through the famous Thousand Islands, of unrivaled beauty, and farther on shot the five rapids of the St. Lawrence. This latter was one of the most thrilling experiences of my life.

I did not know until this trip that Montreal is a city of over a million people. It is a strange mixture of the past and present. French is spoken there far more extensively than in New Orleans. For the first time in my life I felt more at home hearing a tongue spoken that I did not understand—it made me think of Louisiana as nothing else on my trip through two nations did.

There are some large steamers here on the lake. The Kingston, on which we went over the lake, it 360 feet in length.

Niagara Falls, like the fundamental teachings of Christianity, never get old.

This is my third visit to the Falls, and they are as fascinatingly interesting as ever.

We expect to motor back through northern Ohio, Michigan to Chicago, and then south through Illinois, Missouri, Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, and home.

We have truly been favored with a splendid vacation this summer.

Should the 400 extra subscriptions for the Advocate fail to come in, let me know.

LEON I. McCAIN.

FROM COVINGTON, LA.

Dear Mr. Editor: The work in Covington continues to move along in a satisfactory way. We have many things to hinder our work here. The greatest is the persistent visiting of New Orleans folks on Sunday, causing our regular church attendants to turn cooks and remain home from church to entertain.

A successful revival was brought to a close at Fitzgerald last week. This is the second revival in that community this Conference year, the pastor doing the preaching for both. It is well to mention the greatest result of the year's work thus far. At the close of this revival we did not have a Methodist home in the Fitzgerald community that was not a Christian home. Another thing worthy of mention: Not a single disturbance interrupted the services the last three nights of the revival. A very unusual thing it was, there were more than five hundred people on the grounds, and the building will only seat about one hundred comfortably. Mrs. Jordan sat outside in the car with our baby, and she said there was not a single disturbance among the great number outside, but they stood with hats off about the windows and doors and paid the greatest of respect to the services. Fitzgerald is a little country church eight miles out of Covington, supplied from Covington with one afternoon appointment each month. Miss Nellie Gill, of Homer, La., led the singing, and was the drawing card for the great crowds. She is certainly good help in revival work.

Miss Gill and I are in a revival at Waldheim this week. It will close this week-end. We are trusting the same God for the same gracious results in this revival. We then go to Mandeville for a two weeks' revival, the beautiful little city on the lake shore.

Miss Gill has an open date, Sept. 18 to Oct. 2. Any pastor needing her at this time may reach her at my address, and I am sure he could do no better in selecting some one to direct singing, young people's work, and children's work; also she is excellent in solos.

This date marks a net increase in membership of fifty, after the natural loss and in addition to a thorough purging of the rolls. I am asking the prayers of the brethren in the work here. It is all but easy. Pray for us.

Respectfully yours,

H. W. JORDAN, Pastor.

METHODIST TRAINING SCHOOL STARTS SOON.

The Seashore District Standard Training School for Sunday school workers will be held at the Main Street Methodist Church in Biloxi Sept. 18 to 23.

The first class will be at 3 p. m. Sunday, Sept. 18, and thereafter the School will have one session each day beginning promptly at 7 o'clock each night on Monday, Tuesday Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of that week.

There are six courses of study offered, and each student in the school may take any one of these courses. For the student who successfully completes this course during this school a unit or credit will be given him, which credit applies on the Leadership Training Course. At the school held last year fifty credits were earned, and it is the desire this year to make that number greater. The courses offered are as follows:

No. 1. "Beginner Pupil," teacher, Mrs. W. W. Adams. Book, "Study of the Little Child." For all working with 4 and 5-year-olds.

No. 2. "Primary Pupil," teacher, Mrs. W. B. Ferguson. Book, "A Study of the Primary Child." For workers with children 6, 7 and 8 years old.

No. 3. "Junior Pupil," teacher, Mrs. J. H. Conrad. Book, "A Study of the Junior Child." For workers with boys and girls 9, 10 and 11 years old.

No. 4. "Intermediate Senior Psychology," teacher, O. S. Gates. Books, "The Religious Education of Adolescents," and "Psychology of Middle Adolescents."

No. 5. "The Pupil," teacher, Miss M. M. Jones. Book, "The Pupil," Barclay. For those who need this unit on their Leadership Training Course.

No. 6. "Bible," teacher, J. C. Chambers. Book, "Life and Letters of Paul." For those who need this unit or those interested in Bible study.

All persons interested in this school should get in touch immediately with Miss Laura White, Biloxi, who is in charge of the enrollment; she can furnish any information desired.

RESOLUTIONS.

tend to his family and other loved ones our sincere sympathy, and pray that the same God in whom he placed his trust may guide them safely through this life and to the home beyond, where they will be reunited.

Be it further resovled, That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this class, and a copy be furnished the family of Brother Fairbank; also that a copy be furnished the New Orleans Christian Advocate and the Sumrall News for publication.

NO WOMAN CAN KEEP HOUSE EFFICIENTLY

Without Good Health

MRS. FRANK DINDORE
823 PIERCE AVENUE, LANCASTER, OHIO

Four Walls Can Make a House, but it takes a Woman to Make a Home

To be a successful homemaker, a woman must guard her health. When mother is not well, the home is upset. Women everywhere are learning through their own personal experiences, as these women did, the merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Lancaster, Ohio.—"For ten years after my marriage, I had poor health. I was on a visit to my sister in Utica, Michigan, and she had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Her husband got me a bottle and I took it and felt so much better that I got a second one. Now, whenever I feel run-down I take the Vegetable Compound and soon feel all right again. I have had three little girls in the last six years and do all my housework, sewing, washing, and ironing. My time is pretty well taken up, but I will answer any letters I receive."—Mrs. Frank Dindore, 823 Pierve Avenue, Lancaster, Ohio.

Sturgis, Michigan.—"I am very thankful for what your medicine has done for me and have recommended it to others. I took it to give me strength before my baby was born. I would have to stop work and lie down sometimes all the afternoon. I felt as if I did not care whether anything was done or not. I got tired out so easily. One day I found a little book on my porch and that night I showed it to my husband and he went down town and got me a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. The medicine has helped me so much that I was soon able to do my work, and when my baby was born, my nurse, Mrs. Forbes, said it was the easiest birth she had ever attended. I will be more than pleased if I am helping someone else by giving my testimonial."—Mrs. Edward Persing, 208 Surprise Ave., Sturgis, Michigan.

COKESBURY TRAINING SCHOOL AT BARLOW CIRCUIT.

A very interesting and inspiring five-day session of the Cokesbury Leadership School, which was conducted by Mr. O. C. Hull at each of the three churches of Barlow circuit, closed Friday night, Aug. 26.

These schools followed the third circuit-wide Sunday School Institute held at Rehoboth church, Aug. 21.

Great interest was manifested throughout the course, many coming to hear the lectures who did not take the examinations.

Thirty-six certificates of credit were issued at the close of the session and two Sunday schools were scored. Each church has a program of work properly displayed.

We feel that this training course will mean a new day to our Sunday schools. They are being reorganized according to the training course, and every effort will be made to perfect them to a full requirement of a standard school.

Three churches on Barlow circuit gave on offering of $50 for Sunday School Day.

Much credit should be given Mr. Hull for his untiring efforts in this work. He conducted three classes each day throughout the course. His rare ability as a speaker and an educator makes him not only well fitted to give the training course, but he ever imparts a moral and spiritual influence that leaves a lasting impression.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

THE LAYMEN AND THE BENEVOLENCES.

The General Board of Lay Activities met in annual session at Lake Junaluska, N. C., Aug. 2-4. All the interests of the Board were carefully considered and much important business was transacted. At this time, we desire to call special attention to the action of these representative laymen of the church concerning the collection of the benevolent claims. That action was expressed in the report of the committee dealing with this matter, which was unanimously adopted, from which we quote:

"Your committee is of the opinion that the fundamental question now before the church is whether or not the benevolences can be paid in full. These benevolences, or Conference collections, constitute the primary obligation of the church, and without them the church cannot exist. For many years our people have lacked in information on this subject, and we believe that such lack has been the primary reason why there has been a constant decline in the percentage of payment of these claims. There has been some awakening, and this awakening has resulted in the legislation of the last few years.

"Prior to 1922, the responsibility for the benevolences was placed on the pastor in charge, and the legislation of 1922 seemed to shift the responsibility from the preacher in charge to the lay organization. The General Conference of 1926 placed the responsibility where in our opinion it properly belongs; that is to say, it relieved nobody from responsibility, but placed the responsibility on bishops, presiding elders, preachers in charge, lay leaders, lay boards, and individual members of the church. The General Board of Lay Activities is not disposed to avoid any of its responsibility, but accepts full but not exclusive responsibility for the Conference collections, or benevolences. We believe that our people are fully able to pay one hundred per cent, and we will not be satisfied with anything less than one hundred per cent. Our people have grown richer, but the last General Conference made no increase in the amount of these assessments. Insistence was properly placed upon payment in full. History has shown that no people nor any nation is in more danger from adversity or poverty, but there is much danger in an accumulation of wealth which is not devoted to proper ends. We believe that our people can pay this Conference year one hundred per cent of our Conference collections in the several months remaining before the sessions of the Annual Conferences, and we urge that these months be used in an intensive effort to bring these claims up in full."

There are two statements in this report that are especially significant. The first is the one to the effect that, in the opinion of the committee, the fundamental question now before the church is whether or not the benevolences can be paid in full. We suppose this is considered a fundamental matter because it is a generally accepted fact that an organization that does not meet in full its financial obligations still lacks much to be desired. The Methodist Layman for September gives a list of the districts that paid one hundred per cent of these claims for the Conference year 1925-1926. This list shows that only fourteen districts in the connection thus met in full their obligations during that period. Four of these were in the Florida Conference; three in the West Texas Conference; one each in the Central Texas, the Holston, the Louisville, the North Alabama, the North Mississippi, the North Texas, the Pacific, and the Tennesseee Conferences. It must be admitted that the disastrous overflow in certain areas of the church makes it extremely difficult to meet the financial obligations of the church in full this year; but the districts that paid in full last year are so distributed geographically as to indicate that in normal years these collections could be secured in full everywhere.

The second significant statement is the one to the effect that for many years our people have lacked information on this subject and, in the opinion of the committee, this lack of information is the primary reason why there has been a constant decline in the percentage of payment of these claims. There ought to be no difficulty in supplying this lack. Every pastor is interested in the collection of these claims in order that he may present "level columns" at Conference, to say nothing of his desire that the great work of the church may not be handicapped by lack of funds. The pastor has the opportunity to inform his people fully concerning the purpose and use of the benevolent collections. If he will make use of this opportunity, the presumption is that the response to the appeal for the Conference collections will be more liberal.

If all the preachers do their part and all the laymen do their part, the collections this year ought to show a marked increase over last year.

SCHOOLS ARE OPENING.

All over the land the public schools are opening for another year's work and hundreds of thousands of boys and girls are taking up the study of those subjects that are supposed to fit them for upright living and honorable citizenship; and thousands of young men and young women are packing their trunks for their first trip to college, where they are supposed to get the finishing touches on the process of preparation for the duties of life. The opening of the schools in the fall is a great period in the lives of the students and in the life of the nation.

Maybe our schools are not all they ought to be; maybe there are some misplaced emphasis in our educational process, and maybe some of our teachers do not really understand the true meaning of the work to which they have dedicated their lives. But in spite of all that can be said to the contrary, our schools and colleges are, as a rule, tremendously in earnest in their efforts to make better men and women of the boys and girls committed to their care, and they are deserving of the sympathetic encouragement and support of our people.

We are especially glad to believe that the schools maintained by our church are worthy of the fullest confidence and the most liberal support. The church is unequivocally and unreservedly committed to the work of Christian education. It has spent millions of dollars in the erection, equipment, and endowment of educational institutions in which to give Christian education to its own members and to all others who will avail themselves of their privileges. Many of our best men and women have consecrated their lives to service in these institutions. These schools represent the best that has yet been achieved in the program of Christian education. It is only reasonable to suppose that there will be improvement as the years go by and additional resources become available; but they are the best we have now. Let us use what we have—and make them better as we use them.

THE LOSS IN CHURCH MEMBERSHIP.

Widespread publicity has been given to the figures compiled by Dr. H. K. Carroll showing the loss of approximately half a million names last year from our church membership rolls. The fact of such loss is distressing; but it should be remembered that these figures do not represent a decrease in net membership. According to Dr. Carroll's figures, there was a net increase in Protestant church membership last year of 489,000.

In connection with this loss of the churches, an interesting fact was called to our attention the other day. The chief official of one of the most popular "luncheon clubs" of the country has recently made an investigation which shows that in the past two or three years there has been a noticeable falling off in the membership of these clubs and of all other altruistic organizations. There is no comfort in this discovery except that it destroys the charge of its enemies that the church is peculiarly a decadent institution, that it has lost its hold on the world, and that it is doomed to early extinction. The church is not the only organization that is feeling the blighting influence of the age of gross materialism in which we live.

One more word needs to be said: The church is the only institution that by its TRINITY.

By Frances Minor Crymes.

Upon our knees we seek approach to thee,
God over all;
Enthroned on high, thou hearest every plea,
Our faintest call;
For thou, omniscient one, dost even see
The sparrow's fall.

Thou, Holy Spirit, ever-present Guide,
God's witness art;
Dost urge, admonish, cleanse, accuse and chide
Each faithful heart;
Thy counsels teach us, strengthen, and abide;
Oh, ne'er depart!

We praise God that he hath a Savior given,
And in Christ's name
We dare to lift imploring hearts to heaven,
Whence Jesus came.
For us his blood was shed, his heart was riven;
He bore our shame.

So shall we pray to thee, Great Trinity!
We kneel before
Creator, Comforter, Redeemer, three
Whom we adore.
If our devotion changes, it must be
To love Thee more!

THE NEED FOR A NEW TYPE OF LEADERSHIP TRAINING.

By J. Marvin Culbreth.

Before we can have a competent leadership on an adequate scale for the changing affairs of the world, we shall have to multiply greatly a new type of leadership-trainers and alter radically the method of training.

All educators admit the necessity of altering the process by which leaders are trained. The whole educational system with which we are familiar is challenged to-day—in regard to the discipline it employs, the methods by which they are applied, and the ends which are proposed for achievement. This is illustrated by the departures attempted in the field of the liberal arts, of the sciences, and of theological education. It is emphasized by the broadening conception of the curriculum as inclusive not only of the content of formal instruction, but also of the progressive changes which occur in the experience of the student himself through the activities in which he engages. It is justified by the growing impatience with the theory that education is the giving of knowledge in doses of carefully determined quantitative measurement.

The demand for a revision of the training process involves, according to Dr. Howard Edwards, of Rhode Island State College, the integration of the three great realms of experience—the physical, the human, and the spiritual. Specialization in the work of education has produced far from satisfactory results. The liberal arts colleges, he reminds us, laid stress upon the classics, mathematics, and ancient philosophy, and lost touch with progressive life all around them. Scientific and technical schools, he charges, "laid emphasis on matter, on the sciences that deal with matter, and on the vocations that provide for the physical needs of man, but his spiritual needs were not officially recognized at all." While finally, this critic shows, strictly religious schools were "absorbed in the inculcation of fixed tenets of faith and suddenly found themselves in a world of fact totally irreconcilable with many of these tenets and insulated from the great currents of human life which they sought to direct." They made war on obvious fact and thus jeopardized their influence.

But the arbitrary separation of function and interest is no longer tolerable. "It is in the highest degree essential to effective workmanship," Dr. Edwards continues, "to demand that the worker, besides being skilled in his task, should be able to orient the task itself in its relation to a vaster whole, should understand and evaluate himself as a worker, should comprehend his relations to other workers both in his own field and in other fields, and above all should be motivated in his work by high and fine ideals of responsibility, integrity, and accomplishments." That is to say, all schools must have a common objective, namely, "to take the strong and the capable and to motivate and equip them for the service of mankind. Motivation is the integration of the three categories of thought and experience; namely, matter, man and spiritual reality."

The single greatest hindrance to the realization of this high end is to be found in the personnel engaged upon the stupendous work of education. Again, following our analyst, "there are men whose range of thought is narrowed to the area of their own petty interests, whose imagination and enthusiasm are limited wholly to what they call their specialty, whose sympathies and aspirations are merely rudimentary—men to whom the student is simply a chest or packing-box in which to store neat little cartons of handy information more or less curded and dessicated by passing through their own minds." This might be taken as a description of a theological professor holding perfectly rigid views of systematized doctrine. In fact, it was intended to apply to men who are to be found in scientific and technical schools. The portrayal applies equally well to men engaged in the cultural and refining work of the liberal arts college.

The present day student is in revolt against this type of professor and the whole conception of education which he represents. The most reasonable hope of a better leadership depends upon the success of this revolt. Instead of seeking to suppress it, educators should acknowledge the ground of fact upon which the revolt rests and align themselves with every force likely to aid in delivering us from the sterility of an unyielding system and the obscurantism of partial and petty views of life.

Unmistakable signs of the times indicate that interest in the revision of leadership-training is something more than a merely academic question. It is a familiar fact that the church itself is questioning the effectiveness of her own schools in regard to an adequate return upon the investment which they represent. Secular agencies raise the same question in regard to State institutions. Aroused leaders have gathered in several conferences recently to attempt an evaluation of the educational system in terms of revision. But, most significant of all, students themselves are demanding an accounting with the system to which they are obliged to intrust their development.

The distinct break with the conventional program offered at Indianapolis has been followed by student conferences at Louisville, Ann Arbor, Evanston, Atlanta, and Memphis. "We have reached the age of self-determination," is the declaration of the new freedom upon whose foundations youth has planted its feet. It means that youth—the raw material of the leadership that is to be—descries new goals upon the horizon and feels that it must have a voice in choosing the way and preparing the equipment for the adventurous journey. Mark the themes chosen for consideration. Observe the method of discussion employed. Note the spirit of fearless inquiry and frank self-criticism revealed. Ponder the beginnings resolved upon. Then let those who are set for the training of the new leadership ask in all humility—"Who is sufficient for these things?"

What kind of leaders do ambitious youth wish to become? Let me give you the answer of one, in order that you may judge. This young person says that for him security has no attraction; routine is intolerable; to be a cog in a machine is unthinkable; promotion by courting popularity is detestable; and the rewards of chance or luck are stultifying. On the other hand, initiative, risk, creative achievement, and a rugged positiveness of character are the righteousness for which his soul hungers and thirsts continually.

If any one imagines that these are the sentiments of a ministerial student or a volunteer for a frontier mission post, let him be advised that they were spoken by a young man who decided, after a long apprenticeship, that he would not sell his soul to a great corporation. If his choice of values had been reversed, he could have become a vice president of the business at $25,000 a year. But this was his conclusion: "A struggling concern, the destiny of which has not been worked out, is by all odds the choice for a young man."

The question which confronts us to-day is whether we are going to prepare leaders for "concerns whose destiny has not been worked out," or whether we are merely going to recruit heads of department for a system which cannot be changed.

Are we ready to develop a leadership that will change the method and the output of our own church schools? Does the type of institution exist to which church schools should conform? For example, is Scarritt College for Christian Workers to be considered as a highly specialized institution, sui generis, in our scheme of education, or should every one of our colleges assume an equal responsibility for developing effective Christian character and approximate the disciplines and the laboratory activities employed to attain the ends desired? How large a place is to be given in the future to the disciplines and skills of Christian education in our avowedly Christian schools? The answer will be determined by the leadership developed in the next five or ten years.

Are we prepared to follow up the advantage already gained in the matter of integrating religious education with State education? A part of the formal content of religious education has been admitted to curriculum standing in tax-supported schools in seven States in the South, namely, Alabama, Arkansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Texas, and Virginia. Plans are pending in Arizona, Florida, Kentucky, North Carolina, and Tennessee. Our embarrassment is the lack of prepared men to occupy the positions already open. Before the rapidly turning door of the growing opportunity, we stand wondering and questioning. Will our established system of education expand to make liberal room for this development, and will we with high courage and increasing faith undertake to supply competent leaders for this extraordinary movement? Are we going to proceed by trying to segregate religious education as a thing apart or by seeking to spiritualize all education?

The occupation of this field cannot be accomplished on the basis of denominational effort. If religion is to be integrated with State education, then the interests of various religious groups must be effectively integrated with each other. A necessary mark of the leadership that is demanded is the spirit and the ability to promote creative fellowship in a common service; not a selfish striving for advantage, or rank, or prestige on the part of the Methodists, but unselfish devotion to the one single aim of bringing the motivation of religion into the vast processes of education.

These, then, are some of the "struggling causes whose destiny has not been worked out." There are hundreds of young persons who, for the joy of achievement, will spurn the security of a fixed system and choose rather the uncertainty and the danger of initiative, struggle, and conquest. Are we ready to invest in the preparation of such a leadership for the accomplishment of such clearly defined ends?

NOTES FROM THE BATON ROUGE DISTRICT.

At the end of July, this elder found himself winding up his third round of quarterly conferences, which had been arranged on the supposition that Annual Conference would come about Nov. 16. There being four months before Conference, and no one wanting his services for some weeks, he took the first vacation he has had in five years, and went with his daughter by automobile to Lake Junaluska, and some points of interest in and around Asheville, Greenville, and Atlanta. These notes are written before he has visited more than a few points on the district, so the news given is not strictly up to date in all cases.

Amite, B. H. Andrews, pastor, is enjoying a new interest in church work that has not been equalled since the pastor first took charge in November, 1923. Brother Andrews is bringing his quadrennium to a close in fine spirits. His people are threatening to ask for an extension of his services.

Rev. George D. Purcell has had a good revival at Baker. He was assisted in his meeting by Rev. T. G. Stamps, who had rendered a like service there two years ago. He has had good meetings at other points on this charge, and has looked faithfully after his work.

Rev. B. P. Taylor has conducted a successful financial campaign on the church debt at First Church, Baton Rouge. He has had a fine meeting, and entertained and taught a class in the Standard Training School. He is in high favor with his people.

Keener Memorial, O. L. Tucker, pastor, has ambitious plans on foot for erecting a new church on a choice site near the new high school. This ought to be a strong church and render a valuable service for Baton Rouge Methodism in its new location. No more faithful congregation can be found on the district, nor more faithful pastor.

Rev. P. B. McCullen is coming to the close of his first quadrennium in the Conference with a remarkable record of work. He has built a new and much larger and better church, after the old one was burned in 1924; has brought up his course of study every year on time; has met every assessment levied on his church, and every special; will leave the church out of debt and dedicated, and the parsonage probably out of debt, and the assessment for ministerial support more than doubled. Istrouma bids fair to come rapidly to the front as a fine station. Brother McCullen is much in demand as an evangelist, and has held a number of fine meetings, including the Bluff Creek camp meeting, aside from his pastoral work.

Bogalusa is enjoying a prosperous year under the leadership of R. W. Tucker, who is in his third year in that charge. He brought his church up to his traditional policy of full collections last year, and the church has advanced sharply in its assessed salary. His people love him and follow him.

The Clinton charge was enlarged this year to include most of the East Feliciana charge. Rev. B. D. Watson is the pastor, and has been kept busy with revival meetings and the Bluff Creek camp meeting, which is on his charge. His family has been sick a good part of the year, which has in some measure hindered him in his work. He is tireless and faithful as a pastor, and a first-rate evangelist, as the brethren testify who have had him in meetings.

R. L. Clayton has had the usual first year experience as an itinerant. He has six churches on his charge, Denham Springs. He has held revivals at each church, has Epworth Leagues, Missionary Societies, Sunday schools, and all other works of a first-class charge. He has built a new church at Denham Springs, and a new parsonage at Walker, and both are out of debt. Brother Bonnecarrere, his predecessor, had made preparations, and gathered material that made the church enterprise a possibility. Brother Clayton has his course of study almost completed, and has received around one hundred members this year.

C. C. Miller, our pastor, at Franklinton, has steadily improved in health for the past few months, and has been looking faithfully after his work. He is in one of the most delightful charges in the Baton Rouge District. He has plans on foot to clear the debt on the new church. He has made a record for full collections since he has been at Franklinton.

The work on the Gonzales charge is prospering under the leadership of J. P. Bonnecarrere. He has been industriously looking after all the interests of the church. He is a local preacher and will apply for admission on trial at the next session of the Conference.

Greensburg has six churches, but J. S. Rutledge is looking faithfully after them all. He had the Oakland camp meeting on his charge, and was assisted by T. G. Stamps. They had a good meeting.

Hammond is entertaining the Training School for the central section of the district at this writing. W. H. Harvell, the pastor, is near his boyhood home here, and is hoping to lead his people in their effort to pay the parsonage debt off this year.

J. H. Bowdon, pastor at Jackson, is making full proof of his ministry. He has held revivals at his churches, doing the preaching at Ethel himself at the request of his people. He has assisted some of his brethren in meetings, and has kept all the interests of his charge in good shape. He held the first two-class Cokesbury Training School in the State on his charge.

The work on the Kentwood charge, William Schuhle, pastor, is in good shape. It was so exacting on the pastor's time that arrangements have been made for assistance, and Rev. W. J. Newsom has been employed as assistant to Brother Schuhle.

W. H. Royal, pastor, and G. P. White, assistant, have the work well in hand on the Natalbany charge. Good revivals in the churches, improvement in the church property, additional improvement on the parsonage, better organization in the Sunday schools, and revivals held in the congregation are some of the features of the work on that charge.

A. E. Barrett is looking constantly after the work on the Pearl River charge. He has five churches, and preaches three times on Sunday frequently.

Pine Grove is prospering under the leadership of J. T. Parsons. New model roads in prospect will bring new life to the country to which this faithful pastor ministers. He has four churches.

Plaquemine and Donaldsonville have been affected by a series of backsets in the economic life of the country where they are located. The last of these is the flood, which, while not reaching the towns, has reached the farming country that feeds the towns. Brother Waltman has been doing faithful work under trying circumstances this year.

J. W. Booth, at Ponchatoula, is completing a successful quadrennium. During his pastorate the church has become a station, has built an annex for Sunday school purposes, and has gotten in the habit of full collections. The church is in every way in better condition than it has been for years, according to the testimony of its lay leader.

The church at Springfield has been completed and is ready for dedication.; a good parsonage has been completed and paid for under the pastorate of A. L. McQueen. He believes in revivals and makes an effort to hold them in all his churches every year.

T. G. Stamps, at St. Francisville, has had long and severe affliction in his family. Mrs. Stamps has been twice in a hospital for operation, the last time on Aug. 31. At this writing she is doing nicely, but suffering considerably. Brother Stamps has been untiring in his evangelistic work, having assisted in a large number of meetings. Part of his work has suffered by the high water around Tunica.

R. A. Cross has asked to be relieved in his work on the Washington charge, as he wishes to complete his seminary work at Emory University. A. A. McKnight will finish out the year. Brother Cross has held three meetings before asking to be relieved.

H. W. May reports things moving on well on the Zachary charge. His two churches, Zachary and Slaughter, came up well on Missionary Special and flood relief.

The churches in Baton Rouge will entertain the Annual Conference, which meets Nov. 30. Our fine new building at First Church will accommodate all boards and committees, and afford ample room for every need of the Conference.

With this quarter the quadrennium of this elder comes to a close. He has for the past four years been among the friends and scenes of his childhood for the first time in his ministry. It has been a busy and a happy four years, and he will pass on to his successor a newly repaired parsonage, several new churches, and more in prospect, increased salaries and Conference collections. Roads have been so improved by State and parish enterprise that he can reach almost all his work on paved or gravel road, and only a few scars from the great flood will mar the prospect.

DOUBLE DUTY—ANSWERED PRAYER.

Holder's is the oldest church on the Bay Springs charge. It hasn't paid its Conference assessments in several years. It was suggested that I hold the meeting this year. I undertook to do the preaching, led the singing, and visited most all the heads of families of the church, scattered over several miles of territory, during the meeting. So many meetings off and on the charge until I hadn't had the opportunity to visit them. It was certainly double duty, but I didn't really get hoarse at all, had unusual liberty in preaching, and got acquainted with almost the whole membership to a person.

One night I mentioned about the gracious time the Lord and I had in the prayer mentioned in these columns relative to winding up the year's work and that I felt he wanted the whole charge to pay its Conference assessments in full, Holder's leading the way. After an earnest appeal of about ten minutes, in seven minutes the whole assessment for this church for Conference and General Work was over-subscribed, to be paid by the first of November. Nearly half of it was in cash; besides, a nice amount in cash was paid on the pastor's salary without a word being said about it publicly.

So the prayer is being answered! Let those who really pray, keep the people of the charge in mind, the winding up of the year's work, and mine and me. Thanks!

J. A. WELLS.

THE PLACE OF PEACE.

At the heart of the cyclone tearing the sky
And flinging the clouds and the towers by,
Is a place of central calm:
So here in the roar of mortal things,
I have a place where my spirit sings,
In the hollow of God's Palm.

REPORT OF NORTH MISSISSIPPI ORPHANAGE COMMISSIONER.

Dear Dr. Carley: In this week's Advocate Brother J. E. Cunningham states that his information is that there has been paid, in twelve months, by the Commissioner for North Mississippi Conference, on the Methodist Orphanage Building Fund, only some four hundred dollars. Will you please give space to this report of my work, showing what I have received and remitted in the three years and ten months I have been Commmissioner.

First year	$10,974.24
Second year	9,763.85
Third year	5,920.57
Ten months	3,345.94
Total	$30,004.60

In addition to the above, I have collected $1,738.96 from the women of the Conference known as the Chapel Fund, making a total collected and remitted of $31,743.56, averaging $7,666.79 yearly.

If those who have subscribed larger or smaller amounts will mail me their check before Nov. 1, the fourth year may show up as well as the first. All of the presiding elders have given me their loyal support in this work; none shows greater interest in the Orphanage than does Brother Cunningham. I thank them all.

S. A. BROWN, Commissioner.

DEDICATION AT MAIN STREET.

On Sunday, Oct. 30, Bishop Candler will dedicate the Main Street Church, Water Valley. This building was erected some years ago, but the congregation did not succeed in lifting the debt till last year. During the early part of this year some needed repairs were made and plans laid for the dedication. This happy event will occur on the fifth Sunday in October. It will be a great day for Water Valley Methodism and her friends. Bishop Candler's reputation as a pulpit orator in connection with the fact that he is the bishop in charge of the North Mississippi Conference will give to this occasion unusual interest.

All the pastors of this congregation have had a part in bringing the work up to its present happy and prosperous condition. The church was never more prosperous and the outlook was never quite so bright as it is to-day. Beginning last Sunday the pastor, Rev. J. E. Lawhon, entered upon a period of revival effort, doing the preaching himself. He has the evangelistic fervor and gift as few pastors have, and has made careful preparation for the revival. They are having large congregations and fine interest. The pastor promsises to have everything in good shape for the coming of the Bishop, and this occasion will be a red letter day for Main Street people.

Bishop Candler will preach for our people at Oxford at the evening hour on the fifth Sunday, and will be given an opportunity to see our great need of a new church at this educational center. He will likely speak to the University boys on Monday and will go from there to Clarksdale to meet the North Mississippi Conference, which opens Nov. 2.

"AM I MY BROTHER'S KEEPER?"

(Statement by the Board of Temperance and Social Service of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.)

Part 1.

The cry of Cain, "Am I my brother's keeper?" has been through the ages the real, if not the openly declared attitude of selfish men and women, who place the gratification of their own personal appetites, desires and ambitions above all else, and actually, if not openly, refuse to deny themselves anything they crave, or to accept any responsibility for the welfare of others, or of the social order of which they are a part. The Master declares that "the prince of the world" is Satan, and the ruling principle of this world is selfishness, or as St. John says, "The lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life are not of the Father, but of the world." "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil," which are declared by St. Paul to be "adultery, fornification, idolatry, hatred, emulations, wrath, strife, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like." And the Master's weapon of destruction is Love. Whenever or wherever Love comes in, it brings with it "joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance," and where these are found the works of the devil cannot live, but are destroyed as icebergs by the warmth of summer.

The Episcopal Address to the General Conference at Memphis in 1926 declared: "An outstanding fact in the life and work of the world to-day is the steady, irresistible translation into the life of individuals and of organized society of the teaching of Jesus Christ concerning the vital central truth of human brotherhood, of the obligations of neighborly love, including willing self-denial, and the implications and practical results which necessarily follow a sincere recognition of that fact."

The Board of Temperance and Social Service is charged by the Discipline "to point out the practical applications of these principles to particular social problems and conditions," and in compliance therewith the Board at this time would call the attention of our people to four outstanding "Problems."

I. The Appalling Increasingly Destructive Attacks Upon the Home and Family Life.

The family and its home have been the great basal facts in the development of every great national life. Husband, wife, father, mother, son, daughter, brother, sister—these are the relationships which tie men and women together and which give motive, meaning and intensity to the activities of life. The disintegration of the family, the disruption of home life, so weaken the very foundations that if not checked, national, social and religious life must all topple into ruin. God "set the solitary in families" for the training of young life, and a people is doomed when the family and home life are destroyed.

Here then we have a direct deadly assault of selfishness upon that which gives meaning and value to human earthly existence. Read and think: In 1925 there was one divorce for every seven marriages; in 1926 there was one divorce for every 6.22 marriages, an increase of over ten per cent in a single year, and a greater number of divorces in the United States than in any other so-called Christian country.

This horrible record has been made possible because the legal grounds for divorce have been so multiplied, until in many States if there is a sufficiently strong desire for a divorce, by either party, it can generally be secured. A large percentage of these divorces, especially in so-called high society, are sought for purely sexual reasons, in order that a marriage (?) may be contracted with another person for whom sexual lust has been excited, and for the open gratification of which legal sanction is desired. Marital vows, the rights of innocent children, the stability of society, the teachings of Christ and the Apostles are all swept aside, either for the gratification of a new sexual passion, or to obtain freedom from obligations which it requires courage and self-denial to fulfill. And this reckless, ever-increasing repudiation of solemn marital contracts, this exaltation of selfish appetites and desires, regardless of its effect upon others, is now followed by the proposal that we should follow the example of Bolshevik Russia: that marriage be contracted with the open legal agreement that it can be terminated upon the request of either party, if no children have been born, in which sad (?) event more complicated proceedings must be undertaken. In short, live together a week, a month, a year, as long as you please, but when you see some one with a stronger sexual appeal, dissolve your contract, and make new ones as soon, and as many, as you please. And this exaltation of fleshly lust is strongly advocated by a man claiming to believe in monogamous marriages, but who permits the picture of his wife and child to be printed in a magazine to illustrate an article in which he advocated this infamous attack upon the foundations of the State, the Home and the Church.

As a part of this same animalistic attitude toward life, it is now asserted openly that a large percentage of the young men and women of today in all circles of society have decided that the gratification of sexual appetite is as normal and proper as the gratification of the appetite for air, sleep, drink or food, and that the appetite should be gratified, whenever it arises and circumstances permit. And furthermore it is declared, sometimes sorrowfully, sometimes defiantly, that these young men and women are acting accordingly, with the resultant loss of modesty and chastity, and an appalling increase in the number of abortions and illegitimate children.

To meet this ever-increasing loathsome peril, all lovers and defenders of stable government, organized society and of the Christian church must unite. The habits of the cattle, the swine, and the fowl of the barnyard cannot be adopted by intelligent moral beings without degrading them finally to a level of the beasts. Free-love, so called, would destroy the family and its home, and without the family and its home, society, government and the church would be doomed. Certainly on this question the position and the duty of the church is clear. She has been too quiet, has said too little to stem the tide of lust and sin. The lusts of the flesh, "Adultery, Fornication, Lasciviousness, Uncleanness," are the same today that they have always been, and "they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." Again, "Be not deceived, neither fornicators, nor idolators, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God." Again, "If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy, for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are." There cannot be the slightest compromise here. The church must squarely face and meet this tremendous responsibility which has come upon her. Our ministry must not be more modest than its Master, or the apostles, but must declare openly in clear, unmistakable words the teaching of the Master, and must emphasize the beauty and the great value to the individual and to society of self-control and self-sacrifice, as exemplified in Christ himself, and as contrasted with the inherent selfishness of sexual immorality and its disintegrating effect upon personal character, upon the home and upon the entire social order. There will be sharp criticisms, and sometimes bitter denunciations, and some divorced persons will doubtless leave the church, but the position of the church must be clear and emphatic on every phase of sexual sin, including unscriptural divorce. The church must be the "saving salt of the earth," or herself be cast out despised and trodden under foot by the world.

The imperative duty, the inescapable responsibility of parents to instruct, to train and control their children must be proclaimed until parents act. Selfishness is the root of this present-day lack of oversight, to say nothing of discipline. Parents must make companions of their children, control their associations, advise, stimulate and properly restrain their activities and require their obedience. The throwing of the reins loosely upon the necks of children to develop self-expression is a crime against them. Proper freedom they should have, but more than they can use intelligently will lead to ruin. There must be a sharp reversal of the present attitude toward parental and social control. Parents must not permit and decent society must not tolerate girls in their teens to go unchaperoned with boys or men, sometimes for hours, sometimes at night, in motor cars on lonely roads or in the woods. While some girls may defy parents and society, yet they should do so in the teeth of parental and social protest, and at the peril of their standing in decent society. We have played the ostrich with eyes in the sand too long. We have tempted our boys and girls with a freedom for which young life has not had sufficient training and experience to use safely and successfully. We should repent in sack-cloth and ashes, and assume proper responsibility and control.

Recreation. Moreover, in addition to counsel, advice and control, there should be organized efforts to give to our young people some forms of diversion and recreation to occupy the mind and to combat the degrading sex obsessions, which are developed and strengthened by many of the illustrated papers, magazines, novels and moving pictures. The parents of every community should establish a playground and organize a Recreation Association, employ a trained director or directress, or both, and spend thought, time and money to secure for their children healthy, clean recreation. Swimming pools, bowling alleys, baseball, football, all helpful athletic sports should be made available. Community singing should be cultivated. Contests and debates should be held. In short, every possible effort should be made to furnish something better and more attractive than the "petting" and "necking" parties, which are a present-day curse to our youth. "The King's business demandeth haste." Surely love for our children, love for our country, love for the church and God will stir us to action.

II. Industrial Relations.

The Episcopal Address quoted above continues: "Herein (the teaching of Jesus concerning human brotherhoood) is implied the right of all men and women to a living wage, to limited hours of service, proper restrictions on child labor, a larger participation in the fruits of industry, better homes, better medical care, more parks and playgrounds, opportunity for self-culture and development—in short, whatever makes for a richer, fuller life."

Nowhere is the teaching of Jesus concerning brotherhood put to a more severe test than in the relation of capital and labor, of employer and employee. What does it mean "to love thy neighbor as theyself" when the question of the division of the profits of industry are involved? Labor is present-day activity and has the right to its fair share of that which could not be earned without its efforts. But capital is itself simply accumulated results or savings of previous years of labor, and the men who manage this capital, and direct this or that industry perform just as necessary a service, and their labor is a real and as taxing as that of their employees. "Useless each without the other." Brotherly love requires that there shall be constant effort to give to every man that share of the proceeds of the industry which will enable him to provide not only the necessities of life for himself and his family, but will give some time and money to recreation, self-culture and development. Any industry which furnishes money for recreation, leisure, pleasure for the employer, and none for the employees needs a readjustment of its division of profits. It is of the utmost importance that there be frequent frank conferences between managers and men, with full opportunity given to clear up any misunderstandings so that there may be harmonious activity based upon sympathetic understanding. If the human brotherhood teaching of Jesus is accepted and followed there will be peace in industry, but if selfishness rules, there will be constant discord and strife.

III. War and Peace.

This subject is of such great importance that it cannot properly be omitted. To summarize briefly another quotation is made from the Episcopal Address:

"This same teaching (of human brotherhood) also implies that men must not kill their brothermen, and so demands physical and spiritual disarmament, the abolition of aggressive war, the adoption of peaceful methods to settle international disputes, such as adherence to a world court, and by the formation and maintenance of an international organization, by whatever name it may be called, to initiate and put into effect plans for the uplift of the entire social order throughout the world."

That war shall be outlawed, and that men shall beat their swords into plow-shares and their spears into pruning-hooks, is the command of the King of Love and the Prince of Peace.

MISSISSIPPI METHODIST HEADQUARTERS IN JACKSON.

By Rev. Marlin H. McCormack, Jr.

In a recent article in this paper, Rev. W. H. Saunders, of Philadelphia, Miss., expressed what is the desire of a great number of the forward-looking, progressive Methodists of Mississippi that a Mississippi Methodist headquarters be established in Jackson. Why this has not been done long ago is a mystery to some of us. The urgent need of such a headquarters is clearly to be seen.

Our Baptist friends have not shared with us our indifference and negligence in this matter. They have a building of their own in Jackson, the logical place, in which we find the Mississippi Baptist Book Store; the editorial offices and printing plant of the State Convention organ, "The Baptist Record," which goes into more homes in Mississippi than our own Conference organ does in Mississippi and Louisiana combined; the State offices of every department of their church's work —the B. Y. P. U., the Woman's Missionary Union, the Department of Stewardship and Budget, and, if I mistake not, the Educational Department of the State Board. And each of these offices has salaried workers employed for full-time to direct the work and affairs of that particular department.

I am personally acquainted with most of these workers, and find them to be a splendid bunch of folk, ready and willing to serve not only their own church, but any one they can. It is this corps of efficient, trained workers and leaders that is keeping their church in the forefront of denominational work in Mississippi. They will pardon me, if needs be, for referring to them in this article; but may we Methodists, who so thoroughly believe in centralization in church organization and administration, not get a valuable lesson from our Baptist brethren who are making a notable application of our "doctrine" of centralization in the administration of the work of the several departments of their church while we Methodists so gracefully stand by and look on?

Couldn't the two Methodist Conferences in Mississippi, in co-operation with the Conference Boards of the two Conferences and the General Boards of the church, work out a plan whereby they could establish joint headquarters in Jackson, the capital city and center of interest in Mississippi? Conference boundaries might cause some interference; but were they made by the Medes and Persians? Yea, even the consolidation of the two Conferences is not entirely out of the question, and there are lots of reasons why they should be. If we need such a headquarters, aren't we equal to the task of establishing it?

The two Mississippi Conferences have enough in common to cause them to be more closely united in the work of Methodism in Mississippi. We are the only major denomination in the State with two separate and distinct centers of executive administration. The Baptists, as we have shown, have one State Board, which is the executive body of the Mississippi Convention and has charge of the administration and is amenable to the State Convention. This State Board is divided into an executive staff for each department of the church's work. The Presbyterians have one State Synod, which also has similar executive offices situated permanently in Jackson. But we have two Annual Conferences which are the seats of authority of Mississippi Methodism. These Conferences have plenty of boards, but they are made up of busy pastors who work free-gratis, and about the only paid executive we have is the Conference Sunday School Superintendent, who has several assistants.

Why would it not be more efficient and ecnomical for Mississippi Methodism to have its missionary, educational, Sunday school, Epworth League, Woman's Missionary Society, and Lay Activity interests combined under a single Conference Board, with separate executive staffs for each department, employing full-time office and field workers for each department of our work just as we do now for the Sunday school department? Surely, if it proves successful with the other denominations, it would do so with us, whose number is among the largest. The extra expense would be insignificant compared to the increased collections, interest, and activity.

Whether this is a matter for the General Conference, Annual Conference, General Boards or Conference Boards to act upon, is immaterial; it is a matter for Mississippi Methodists to decide whether they need and want such a headquarters, and if so, to see that the proper course is taken to establish it. With Methodists it is never "can it be done?" but "will it be done?"

Here's for a Mississippi Methodist Headquarters, a Mississippi Methodist Book Store, and a "Mississippi Christian Advocate" located in a Mississippi Methodist Building in Jackson. May the Lord God of heaven and earth, who has so richly blessed, preserved, and watched over us in days gone by, guide us in the way which only his most holy and infinite wisdom knows to be best for the welfare of his kingdom!

OFF DUTY.

Usually you can take the grade of a man by his employment of his idle hours. Not the things he does on duty, but the things he permits himself off duty, tell the kind of man he is. Never before was there so great need for relaxation, and never before so many ways to relax. But it is well to remember that the tiredest part of a man is not his body, but the soul in him. And we need to inquire, oftener than apparently we do, whether our diversions really rest the soul. There were Luther with his favorite musical instrument, and Ole Bull hanging over a cliff that he catch the deep overtures of the sea, and Gladstone chopping trees in the forest at Hawarden, and Tennyson climbing to the eyrie of his favorite house, and my mother with her open Bible and the far-away look in her eyes. Always need for a place of retreat and repair. Personally, I do not think the Atlantic City way is the best way to restore and restock a jaded spirit. Recreation is there, but not true rest. Better a brook to sprawl beside, or a hill to climb, or a good book, or a friend to commune with, and God. The old invitation is unannulled: "Come unto me and I will rest you."—George Clarke Peck.

YOUNG MAN'S PRAYER.

God, make me a man—
Give me strength to stand for right
When other folks have left the fight.
Give me the courage of the man
Who knows that if he wills he can.
Teach me to see in every face
The good, the kind, and not the base.
Make me sincere in word and deed.
Blot out from me all sham and greed.
Help me to guard my troubled soul
By constant, active, self-control.
Clean up my thoughts, my speech, my play,
And keep me pure from day to day
O, make me a man!

BENEVOLENT ASSESSMENTS CAN BE PAID.

Dear Mr. Editor: I have been examining Table No. 3—Finance—in the Annual of the Louisiana Conference for 1926. I have ascertained from my examination of the Annual that we lack a great deal still of paying our benevolences in full.

Last year the Alexandria District had only five charges out of twenty-one to pay their benevolences in full, and the whole district paid only a little over 50 per cent of the total. The Baton Rouge District had eight charges to pay in full, out of her twenty-six, and the whole district paid only 60 per cent of their benevolences. In the Lake Charles District only three out of eighteen paid in full, and the whole district a little over 50 per cent of the total. In the Minden District three out of twenty paid in full, and less than 50 per cent of the total was paid. In the Monroe District six out of nineteen paid in full, and the whole district paid a little over 70 per cent of the total. In the New Orleans District eight out of the twenty-one paid in full, and the whole district paid 80 per cent of the total. In the Ruston District four out of nineteen paid in full, and the whole district paid 59 per cent of the total. In the Shreveport District twelve out of eighteen paid in full, and the whole district paid 92 per cent of the total.

We see from this that only forty-nine pastoral charges out of one hundred and sixty paid their benevolences in full, and, as a consequence, we lost $36,000 for benevolences that we should have received.

I believe the benevolences could be raised in full in practically every charge in the Louisiana Conference if the pastors would only make up their minds that it must be done. I am not a theorist in this matter—I speak from experience. In the year 1911 I was on the Haynesville circuit. Haynesville, the head of the circuit, was then only a small country town. From September to December cotton dropped five cents a pound, and yet the benevolences were paid in full for the first time in years. I was sent the following year to Bogalusa. Only 35 per cent of the benevolences had been paid there the preceding year. But I did not let this discourage me. I went to work to raise them, and all three of the years I was pastor in Bogalusa the benevolences were paid in full.

In December, 1916, I was sent to Hammond. It was one of the most disorganized stations in the Conference, and had been paying for some years pittances to the benevolences. Must I get discouraged? Nay verily—the last thing to do. In spite of all the difficulties, Hammond was one of the two charges in the Baton Rouge District to pay its benevolences in full that year. Every one of the five years I was there the benevolences were paid in full, and toward the close of my pastorate the charge was paying well on towards $1,000 per annum to these causes.

During the four years I was at Lafayette, the benevolences were paid in full, notwithstanding the financial strain connected with the new church enterprise, and during the quadrennium the benevolences were doubled.

It can be done. How is it to be done? By preaching on tithing and Christian stewardship. By education. Let the people from the pulpit and on the pastoral rounds know to what causes these benevolences are being given. When praying in the homes, pray specifically for benevolence causes. Write the different purposes for which they are collected on your blackboards at prayer meeting, and then have special and definite prayers asking God to kindly dispose the membership toward the Conference claims.

Try it, brethren, if you don't believe it, and results will come—and splendid results—as sure as the sun will rise to-morrow morn.

LEON I. McCAIN.

THE WORK AT MALINES, 1926-27.

By A. Mietes, Pastor in Charge.

(Note: Rev. A. Mietes, pastor in charge of Methodist work at Malines, Belgium, is supported as a special by the church at Minden, La., of which the Rev. Leon I. McCain is pastor.—Bureau of Specials.)

With great thanks to the Lord, I may state that the work in Malines has been blessful during the past year, and I firmly hope that its influence will increase in the future.

This congregation has now risen to a blossoming parish, the fruits of which are already seen. Our blessings have been many. A good reputation by outsiders, increased offerings, and several new members have rewarded our work.

Members and Finances.

Our meetings are regularly attended and the interest is proved by the increasing contributions, which have doubled during the year. The previous year twelve members were registered on our books, and last year we had the pleasure to welcome among us thirteen new members, one of which elected domicile in another town, another went to Holland, so we are at present twenty-three members.

During some days we made a special effort to reach new people, and notwithstanding the bad weather this effort brought us two members and the friendship of various other persons, who henceforth regularly attend the Sunday evening meetings.

The total income amounted to 1,643 francs, of which 74.05 francs were collected by the Sunday school.

Work Among Children and Young People.

The work among the children extended to about fifty children. When some of them were won away by other influences, others in greater numbers were reached and filled the places left empty.

A boy's association was created. By bright weather we go and play football or out walking. When the weather is less favorable we do indoor work, but religious teaching always prevails. Up to now there are in the association but ten boys about 12 years of age.

A sewing club for girls was created under the leading of Mrs. van Duven and Miss Mietes. All things are made destined for Christmas, At the same time the Bible is read and explained. The club runs splendidly.

The boys and girls are both zealously saving so that we will be able to make several trips.

We had a very nice Christmas celebration, the expense of which was entirely covered by friends and members of the church so that we had not to make appeals to Brussels. We had also a lecture, with lantern slides, given by Mr. Rainey, of the British and Foreign Bible Society. We had a crowded room, a contented public, and fair collections.

The several "Chinese shadow" evenings given by Mr. Milet were much enjoyed.

On Easter and Pentecost the children added to the interest of the evening meetings by singing hymns, etc.

The choir, only created in September, 1926, also contributed to the joyful humor on the above-mentioned occasions.

Bible Study and Reading.

Our Bible study evening is going on even during the summer. The distributing of reading matter is for the greatest part in the hands of youth. Each week a part of the town is visited, and the arrival of our distributors is looked for by many. Some of the readers have dared to come to our Sunday meetings, which for them is sometimes a great step.

The Children of the Orphanage.

On Tuesday afternoons I give religious lessons to the Flemish children of our orphanage. I give one hour to about fifteen little ones and one hour to about fifteen greater ones, which is indeed a very interesting work, giving every satisfaction.

Besides the Malines work, I am in charge of part of the work at Aerschot. Several circumstances have had their influence upon the work, and among the older and younger people it could and must be better. The work among the children suffers on account of the lack of a leader. The club of young people is giving the best results.

We have registered seventeen members here. One person has gone elsewhere and four have left the congregation, so that we have only twelve members and some on trial.

The total receipts amounted to 802.40 francs. Of this sum 571.60 francs were collected by the Epworth League, and the rest by the adults. Thanks to the new regulations, we hope to be able to state a marked progress in the future.

Specifications have been prepared for the necessary alterations and decorations required in the property purchased recently at the Chaussee de Tronchiennes, for the accommodation of our Flemish work at Ghent. The property will soon be ready for the accommodation of our congregation there.

Made at the annual Mission meeting, Brussels, Belgium, June, 1927.

THE ITINERANT.

By Joel Frank Hudspeth.

He sought no gold, he claimed no crown:
O'er rugged mountains, up and down,
  O'er plains of dust and alkali,
  Devoid of shade, and desert dry:
Where swollen streams came tumbling down,
By lonely hut or straggling town;
  With dauntless faith and steadfast eye
  He held the blood-red banner high.

By evening star, by pale gray dawn,
With the last shade of heaven withdrawn,
  My dreaming thought can visualize
  That heart on its high enterprise—
That sturdy Spartan riding on.
  I still can glimpse through tear-moist eyes,
(Although the passing dream be gone)
  And hear that pleading voice that cries
  Inviting sinners to the skies.

He had a tryst he fain would keep,
  Through weltering heat or pelting rain;
  To meet his Lord by deeds of pain,
For hearts that bleed and eyes that weep:
Through scorching flames or waters deep
  To spare no sorrow, stress or strain,
  To count no toil nor anguish vain,
Could he but find the Master's sheep.

Now he must stop who fain would fight,
  Must rest and wait till close of day
  Who longs to join the bloody fray,
And follow Christ to harvests white.
O church of God, what piteous plight,
  That while we snugly sing and pray,
He must endure the sting and bite
  Of poverty, midst shadows gay!
Shame, shame on us who will not pay
Our debt to him while still 'tis day.
  Oh let us take away this blight,
  This stench and sin in Heaven's sight—
And all upon His altar lay.

—Pacific Methodist Advocate.

IN TUNE WITH THE INFINITE.

We are ready to praise when all shines fair; but when life is overcast, when all things seem to be against us—then to praise God; then to say, This fear, loneliness, affliction, pain, and trembling awe are as sure tokens of love, as life, health, joy, and the gifts of home: "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away;" on either side it is he, and all is love alike: "blessed be the name of the Lord"—this is the true sacrifice of praise. What can come amiss to a soul which is so in accord with God? What can make so much as one jarring tone in all its harmony? In all the changes of this fitful life, it dwells in praise. —Selected.

TEN LITTLE DUTIES.

Ten little duties! Does no good to whine;
Skip about and do one; then there are nine.
Nine little duties: it never pays to wait;
Do one quick, and, presto! there are eight.
Eight little duties: might have been eleven;
One done in no time; now they're just seven.
Seven little duties! 'tisn't such a fix;
Do one more, and, bless me! they're only six.
Six little duties, sure as I'm alive!
Never mind, one's over; now there are only five.
Five little duties knocking at our door;
Lead off one to Doneland; that leaves only four.
Four little duties, plain as plain can be!
Can't be shirked—one's over—leaving only three.
Three little duties: like a soldier true;
Meet them and vanquish one; then there'll be but two.
Two little duties between you and fun;
In just a minute longer there'll be only one.
One little duty: now what will you do?
Do it! Why, surely. now you are through!

EIGHTEEN SHIRTS.

By Susan Hubbard Martin.

Marcella Mary came home very thoughtfully that Sunday after church. The minister's text had been that one which reads: "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ."

Marcella Mary felt as she had never felt before, the little she really did in helping others, and as she went over the words of that sermon in her mind, she wished more than ever that she might be a real burden bearer.

She did not know just how or where to begin, but surely some one would need her help. She thought about that sermon all day Monday, too.

On Tuesday morning early mother asked her to go over to Mrs. Bassett's for that recipe for sweet pickles. Ann Bassett was the village washerwoman. Her husband had died three years before, leaving her nothing but debts and a home only half paid for. Ann Bassett, tall and energetic, had not given up. She had turned her hand to the one thing she knew how to do well, namely, washing and ironing other people's clothes. And because she rendered such excellent service she had as much work as she could do. It was hard of course—but Ann was strong and tireless, and gradually the debt on the little house grew less, and Ann, once in a while, was able to lay a dollar away.

Marcella Mary reached the little cottage and walked around to the back door. It stood open. A fire was burning in the stove, but in a chair over by the window sat Ann Bassett, and she was crying.

Marcella Mary went over to her.

"Why, Mrs. Bassett," she cried in her sweet young voice, "what is the matter?"

Ann Bassett lifted her head and looked at Marcella Mary. There were tear stains on her cheeks.

"My sister's daughter, Rosanna, has just been taken to the hospital," she said. "They live at Fairbury. I could take the 10 o'clock car and be back at 6 o'clock this evening—but I've got eighteen shirts to iron and they can't wait. I've always loved Rosanna—she's such a good girl and I'd like to be nearby while she undergoes that operation. My sister Sally is so nervous I could be a help to her, too, but there's those eighteen shirts."

Marcella Mary was silent a moment. She was thinking of the words of the minister's text, "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ."

She had been wishing for an opportunity to help some one and here it was. She could iron shirts, and how glad she was she could.

She laid a firm young arm about Ann Bassett's stooping shoulders.

"Get ready to go," she said promptly, "and I'll stay here and iron those shirts for you."

"But there's eighteen of them," objected Ann.

"That doesn't make any difference," replied Marcella Mary. "I've ironed father's shirts many a time and mother says I always do it so well. You can trust me with this work."

She saw Ann Bassett safely out of the little cottage in time to catch that 10 o'clock car. Then she ran across the street and telephoned to mother and told her what she was going to do. This done, she went back into the little hot kitchen and began her task.

It was hard work, but she kept steadily on; stopped at noon long enough to drink a glass of milk and eat a slice of Ann's homemade bread.

By 4 o'clock every one of those eighteen shirts was ironed and hanging on the rack and as beautifully ironed as if Ann had done it herself.

Ann came home at 6 o'clock, and with a covered tray in her hands on which reposed Ann's supper, Marcella hurried over and listened to how Rosanna was.

"She's going to live," said Ann Bassett, sinking into a chair, "and I'm so thankful I could be there with Sally and the others. But oh, Marcella Mary, if it hadn't been for you I could not have gone. You've been a good angel to me. I can't thank you—but you'd be surprised if you could see the gratitude in my heart."

Ann Bassett's voice broke, and Marcella Mary patted her on the shoulder affectionately.

"I was glad I could do it," she answered. "Now sit up and eat your supper. I've got a baked potato, a broiled lamb chop for you and a dish of tapioca pudding."

Up in her own room that night Marcella Mary lay in her little white bed tired but happy. How soft her pillow! But before she drifted away to the land of dreams she whispered drowsily: "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ."—Presbyterian Advance.

A DUCK AMONG TURKEYS.

By Linda Lauderdale.

A duck egg was, by mistake, set with some hen eggs. Now, hen eggs hatch in three weeks; but it takes four weeks to hatch a duck egg. The old hen left the nest with a fine brood of chickens, clucking happily and apparently unconcerned because one egg failed to hatch; but the children found it and examined it closely. "Oh, it is a duck egg," they said, "and the little duck is wiggling." They put it under another hen; and, in a few days, a fluffy little duck pecked his way into the world of light and freedom. Who would have guessed that the downy, yellow creature would live the strangest, most eventful life of any duck imaginable?

A lone motherless duck is a problem to a busy country family; for a baby duck is sensitive to cold, fqrequently gets on its back, and requires careful feeding. Furthermore, not even a duck wants to be alone. For two days the little fellow quacked distressfully when out of sight of the children, who became a bit wearied at its plaintive plea for their company.

Then the old turkey hen was discovered with a fine brood of turkeys and was brought home and put in a coop. "Let her take care of the duck," said the children as they slipped the little fellow under the old turkey for a night's repose among turkeys.

Next morning the duck seemed perfectly at ease among the turkeys, who stared at the noisy, strange-looking creature paddling around in the water set for them to drink.

In a few days the turkeys were set free. The children laughed to see the duck waddling off with the turkeys. They wondered how his short legs would ever keep pace with the turkeys, the greatest of wanderers. To put a duck among turkeys was too rough a joke to play on even a duck! One day, wearied and exhausted, the duck stumbled against a rock and fell on his back. The turkey hen's cries of distress brought the children to his rescue. They carried him to the house, but he soon set up a cry for his friends, the turkeys. When with them again he seemed the happiest duck in the world.

As the turkeys grew older and stronger, they wandered farther and farther from the house; but, where they went, there, too, went the duck. Sometimes they tried their young wings in flight, leaving the duck far behind; but they waited in the distance for the duck, who was at a loss to understand such aerial stunts. When they came to a fence, they jumped or flew over it, while the duck quacked in distress until he could find a hole through which he could reach his waiting friends. When the old turkey gave the danger call, the little duck followed the example of his little turkey friends, hiding safely in the grass.

But even a duck among turkeys will be a duck. When the turkeys ranged near the creek, the duck excused himself for a swim. Spring lizards, minnows, crawfish, and frog eggs! How delightful to paddle around in the cool water! What joy to be a duck! But, when the turkeys again sought the hill or forest, the duck reluctantly said good-bye to swamp and stream to go anywhere with the turkeys. At night he brought up the rear, feebly wabbling home, even his neck filled with food.

As time passed the turkeys ranged far and wide and did not come home to roost. They sought safety from minks and polecats by roosting high in tall trees. A less loyal companion than that duck would have protested that a wilderness is no safe place for a duck to roost and would have cast his lot with the ducks at home. But the defensless creature was optimistic and accepted his lot in silence, roosting under the trees where his companions reposed in comparative safety.

For a timt all went well. One morning the children noticed that the turkeys seemed restless and disturbed. They saw no duck among them. How they hastened to the roosting place of the turkeys! A few scattered feathers in evidence of a terrible struggle told too plainly the unfortunate end of the duck among turkeys.—Baltimore Southern Methodist.

A FUNNY ADDITION SUM.

How many apples did Adam and Eve eat?

Some say Eve 8 and Adam 2—a total of 10 only.

Now we figure the thing out far differently: Eve 8 and Adam 8 also—a total of 16.

We think the above figures are entirely wrong. If Eve 8 and Adam 82, certainly the total will be 90.

Scientific men, however, on the strength of the theory that the antediluvians were a giant, reaon something like this: Eve 81 and Adam 82—Total 163.

Wrong again. What could be clearer than if Eve 81 and Adam 812, the total was 893?

I believe the following to be the true solution: Eve 814 Adam, and Adam 8124 Eve—8938.

Still another calculation is as follows: If Eve 814 Adam, Adam 8 1242 oblige Eve, total 82,056.—Exchange.

DIRECTIONS.
All checks and money orders should be made payable to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.
Communications pertaining to subscriptions and other business matters should be addressed to the Manager, or to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.
The Printed Label on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after four weeks, notify us, and we will make it right.
Communications intended for the Editor should be directed to him at 512 Camp Street. Correspondents will observe the following rules: 1. Write on only one side of the paper. 2. If you have a typewriter, by all means use it; otherwise use a good quality of black ink. 3. Leave a space of at least two inches at the top of the first page; leave a margin of at least one inch on the left-hand side of the page; do not crowd the words and the lines together. 4. Take special pains to write proper names correctly and legibly. 5. Use letter paper if you can get it—not note paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

THE LOSS IN CHURCH MEMBERSHIP.

very nature has within itself the power, not only to resist this blighting influence, but also to overcome it. The church is of God; it may fall into periods of spiritual declension; but it will cleanse itself and in due time it will regain its power over the lives of men. The gates of hell will not prevail against it.

"HARVEST DAY" FOR THE LOUISIANA ORPHANAGE.

We hope every pastor in Louisiana will definitely call the attention of his people to the fact that Sunday, Oct. 9, is "Harvest Day" for the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage. This great institution, which now has 190 children in its care, is dependent for its support upon the Easter Sunday collections in the spring and the "Harvest Day" collections in the fall. The contributions from the overflowed sections of the State will necessarily be curtailed this year; therefore, it is of the utmost importance that collections from other sections be unusually liberal. The Orphanage is our own organized activity in behalf of helpless children, and its support ought to be of sacred interest to us all. Remember the date—Sunday, Oct. 9.

ENCOURAGING RESPONSES.

There have been some encouraging responses to the recent appeal for additional subscriptions to the Advocate. Miss Mollie Higginbotham, of Mer Rouge, La., one of the old-time friends of the Advocate, writes: "I started to try to get more subscribers here, but being too weak to walk very far at a time—and that being my only way of going—I made poor headway. However, I am sending to-day by post office money order $14 for the enclosed list of seven subscriptions." Rev. E. L. Cargill, of Cotton Valley, La., in sending in four subscriptions, says: "I trust you don't think I am not interested in the Advocate and am doing nothing toward trying to get the people to take it." Rev. Paul D. Hardin, of Brookhaven, Miss., sends in a list of seven subscriptions. Rev. H. W. Jordan, of Covington, La., also sends in a list of four.

Others have likewise shown their interest, some by renewing their own subscriptions and others by securing new subscriptions. The response has been encouraging enough to show that the necessary number to put the Advocate upon a sound financial basis can be secured by the proper effort. We are sincerely grateful for what has been done, and trust that the good work will go on.

MEETING OF THE PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

The Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate will meet in regular annual session at the Advocate office, 512 Camp Street, New Orleans, La., Thursday, Oct. 13, at 10 o'clock a. m. A full meeting of the Committee is desired.

W. WINANS DRAKE, Chairman.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The tenth World Sunday School Convention will meet in Los Angeles, Calif., July 11-18, 1928.

From an account of the recent session of the Illinois Conference, we learn that there are no superannuates in that Conference.

Dr. Briscoe Carter, Louisiana Conference Secretary of Education, was in New Orleans on Monday of this week, paying the Advocate office an appreciated call.

Dr. F. N. Parker, dean of the Candler School of Theology, is spending a few days in Louisiana. He honored the Advocate office with a call on Monday morning.

Upon invitation of Bishop H. M. DuBose, Dr. Theodore Copeland will preach a series of sermons at the Holston Conference, which convenes at Knoxville, Tenn., Sept. 28.

Rev. and Mrs. J. E. Selfe, of Lake Providence, La., left on Sept. 5 by auto for Jackson, Mich., for a visit to Brother Selfe's mother, now in her eighty-seventh year, and other relatives.

A new book by Dr. H. C. Morrison, "The Optimism of Premillenialism," is just from the press of the Pentecostal Publishing Company, Louisville, Ky.. The price of the volume is $1.

Our church at Tylertown, Miss., is a wide-awake organization, with a wide-awake pastor—Rev. J. M. Lewis. We know it is a wide-awake church because all its members take the Advocate.

Rev. and Mrs. R. H. Bamburg, of Trout, La., announce the marriage of their daughter, Mollabeth, to Mr. William K. Pepper, on Thursday, Sept. 1. The Advocate extends all good wishes to the happy young couple.

Rev. H. W. Jordan, our pastor at Covington, La., accompanied by Rev. Fred Campbell, called at the Advocate office on Monday morning of this week. Brother Jordan reports a net increase of sixty-two in the membership of his charge thus far.

Dr. R. H. Harper, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, made a trip to Louisville, Ky., last week to consult with Dr. T. D. Ellis, General Secretary of the Board of Church Extension, concerning church extension work in New Orleans.

The publishers, J. B. Lippincott Company, have just brought from the press a new book by "Pansy" (Mrs. Isabella M. Alden), "The Fortunate Calamity," which is, as the sub-title says, "the story of a very modern fairy godmother." The price is $1.75.

Recent advices from Bishop James Cannon indicate that the Bishop continues to improve from his recent attack of African fever. As soon as his nervous system becomes normal he expects to be able to handle his work as well as ever. Bishop Cannon is still in Switzerland.

The second annual session of the General Missionary Council of the church will be held at Jackson, Miss., Dec. 13-14. The first session of the Council was held at Louisville, Ky., in December of last year. The General Missionary Council was created by the General Conference of 1926.

We learn from the Alexandria Town Talk of the recent meeting at Melder, La., in which the preaching was done by Rev. Claude K. Smith, of Pineville, La. There were twenty-eight additions to the membership of the church, and more than two hundred reconsecrations. Six infants were baptized.

Sixty credits were issued in the training school which recently closed at Hammond, La., the highest mark reached in this school since it began, in 1923. Six of these credits were Cokesbury units and nine were rural Sunday school management, which show what our people are thinking about the country Sunday schools.

Bishop and Mrs. W. B. Beauchamp spent last Sunday in New Orleans, worshiping at Carrollton Avenue Methodist Church in the morning. Bishop Beauchamp was en route to hold the Mexican Mission Conferences. The church will be delighted to know that his health is sufficiently robust for him to perform his official duties.

The Louisiana State School for the Blind is desirous of getting in touch with every blind person or person whose sight is so defective as to seriously handicap him, and requests that any one who knows such a person to communicate with A. J. Caldwell, Superintendent, or A. C. Lewis, care State Department of Education, Baton Rouge, La.

In addition to those mentioned last week, Rev. E. H. Cunningham, presiding elder of the Corinth District, North Mississippi Conference, writes that Rev. J. A. George, of Ripley, Miss., is another one of his station preachers to engage in revival work during the summer, more than five hundred conversions resulting from his labors in Mississippi and Louisiana.

Dr. W. Winans Drake, pastor of Trinity Methodist Church, Ruston, La., calls the attention of the Advocate to the death of Mrs. E. M. White, widow of the late Rev. H. O. White, of the Louisiana Conference, which sad event occurred on Sunday, July 31, at her home near Ruston. Dr. Drake will furnish the Advocate with a sketch of the life of this saintly woman at an early date.

Dr. N. E. Joyner, presiding elder of the Monroe District, Louisiana Conference, requests us to correct a mistake of date in his announcement of the Monroe district conference which appeared in the Advocate of Sept. 1. The conference will meet on Monday night, Sept. 19, and close on Tuesday night, Sept. 20. The mistake in the notice as published is in speaking of Sept. 20 as falling on Wednesday.

The Macmillan Company has just issued a new edition of its famous catalogue, "Macmillan Books for Boys and Girls." This catalogue, issued every year for the past seven years, has become a kind of standard in the field it covers. An especially valuable feature is the list of more than five hundred titles grouped by subject and age interest. The catalogue will be sent free of charge upon request to the Macmillan Company, New York.

Rev. L. W. Cain, pastor at Parker Memorial Church, this city, is assisting Rev. A. L. McQueen in a tent meeting at Albany, La. The services are being attended by great congregations, and there is every indication of a gracious revival, resulting probably in the organization of a church at that place. The tent being used is the one owned by the Conference Board of Missions.

Brother Cain is as effective in evangelistic work as he is in the pastorate—which is saying a good deal.

Evangelist Claude P. Jones, of the Mississippi Conference, has just closed a gracious revival at Pachuta, Miss., where he assisted the pastor, Rev. R. A. Allums. He is now in a meeting with Rev. C. H. Strait at Decatur, Miss. From Decatur he will go to Gallman, Miss., for a second engagement with Rev. J. E. J. Ferguson. Brother Jones has some open time in October that he would be glad to give any of the brethren desiring his services for fall meetings. His address is 103 Fourth Avenue, Hattiesburg, Miss.

The Federal Radio Commission has given permission to the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago to remove its radio station WMBI a distance of about twenty miles outside of the city, and to increase its power from 500 to 5,000 watts, which will more than treble its range and enable WMBI prorgrams to reach all sections of the United States and most of Canada and Mexico. The station will continue to divide time with station WJAZ of the Zenith Radio Coorporation, on a wave length of 1,140 kilocycles, 263 meters.

Rev. J. H. Felts, our pastor at Greenwood, Miss., attended the Kiwanis convention in New Orleans last week as the representative from his club. He was elected lieutenant governor for the Kiwanis district embracing North Mississippi. The opening convocation of the convention was delivered by Dr. R. H. Harper, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, and the opening address was delivered by Dr. Arthur Moore, pastor of the First Methodist Church, Birmingham, Ala., on the subject, "The Aristocracy of Service." The address was spoken of as one of compelling interest.

Whitworth College, at Brookhaven, Miss., is beginning the sixty-ninth year of the work Sept. 14. Notwithstanding the fact that the college is operating next session only two classes, the enrollment of boarding pupils is fully equal to that of last session. The college has the largest enrollment ever in recent years of non-resident students to enter the freshman class. All except three of the graduates of the Brookhaven High School class of 1926-27 are entering Whitworth for their freshman work. If our people will hurry up and endow Whitworth, its dormitories will more than fill up with students.

The Cokesbury Press has just issued a volume, "Princes of the Christian Pulpit and Pastorate," by Dr. H. C. Howard, professor of Homiletics and Pastoral Theology in Emory University, that will furnish interesting and stimulating reading to many of our preachers and thoughtful laymen. The book is composed of a series of biographical studies of fifteen of the outstanding figures in the Christian ministry from the time of St. Francis of Assisi to the present. It is beautifully printed, and the price is $2.50. As is well known, Cokesbury Press is the trade name of our Publishing House, from which the book may be ordered.

A TRIBUTE TO THE LATE WARREN F. BLACK.

On Jan. 30, 1926, Warren F. Black passed away in Birmingham. For twelve years he had been an active member of the First Methodist Church of that city. In fact, he had been so efficient and faithful as an usher that when he was taken away the board of stewards of that church passed resolutions relative to his faithfulness and to the loss which had been sustained by the congregation and the church because of his home-going. Not only had he served the congregation as an usher, but he was one of the most active members of the Men's Bible class, and for several terms of office he was its secretary and kept the records of all the men in the class. He was liked and loved by every member of the class, and because he had only been sick a few days, the Men's Bible class of First Methodist Church was stunned and shocked when they learned of his death.

Not only was he active in the class, but his influence and presence were felt in the Senior Epworth League. He held different offices at various times, and one of the last things that he did for the young people was to give some books from his library to serve as a nucleus for a Young People's Library.

Very few young men come to a city as large as Birmingham and find their way to a church and become so active with it that they are missed as Warren F. Black was missed when his Heavenly Father called him home. No doubt his activity in the church and his consecrated life were due to his early training received in a Methodist parsonage. He was a son of Rev. and Mrs. W. C. Black. His father for seven years was editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and held appointment under the Mississippi Conference.

The above is not to be considered as an obituary or as resolutions, but is just a little testimony to the life of a young man who put God first, his church second, humanity third, and himself last. He was always happy in serving, and was always willing to do any duty when called upon. He has been and is still missed tremendously by the people of the First Methodist Church, and O how we miss him! We wish that more of the young men of our church would emulate his character and his willingness to serve.

ORGAN DEDICATION, ABERDEEN, MISS.

Dear Dr. Carley: On Sunday evening, September 18, in the First Methodist Church of Aberdeen, we will hold a dedicatory service for our new $20,000 pipe organ, which was recently installed by the Geneva Organ Co., Geneva, Ill. We cordially invite former pastors or former members to be present with us on this occasion. After the dedicatory service we will be given an organ recital by Mr. Nord, an organist of considerable note.

R. G. MOORE, Pastor.

IT IS TO SMILE.

By Rev. James H. Felts.

Mr. Editor: In an article recently appearing in the Advocate this statement is noted: "Suppose, for instance, that a brother should affirm his orthodoxy, and yet be found using Bruce Barton's blasphemous book, 'The Man Nobody Knows,' in a series of prayer meeting talks, or discussing the first chapter of Matthew containing the genealogy of Christ under the caption, 'A Bad Egg in a Bad Nest,' should we expect to find him joining a 'League of Faith and Order.'"

Why suppose? I so used Bruce Barton's book, and shall do so again without the slightest hesitation if occasion arises. In the course of more than thirty years of active ministry I have so used many other books, including "John the Loyal," "Current Comments on Timely Topics," "Dangers of Crooked Thinking," "The Other Wise Man," Ingersoll, Paine, Hubbard, Brann, and may even so use "The League of Faith and Order." I so used the splendid Questionnaire sent out by Grenada College students when Brother Stephens was there. I know of no better way to offer criticism, comparison, commendation, or illustration. In each instance there was definite purpose. Always there is the background of Holy Writ. I have recently so used our Book of Discipline with good results.

As to the "Bad Egg in a Bad Nest," the writer was even more grossly misinformed. I have delivered one message under the caption, "A Bad Egg in a Bad Nest Hatched a Songbird." Rahab was the character. The development was the (Transforming) Power of Faith. Nancy, the outstanding character in Oliver Twist, was used in this message. In neither instance have I the slightest apology to make, or special explanation. Intelligent, fair-minded people don't need it; the other kind disturb me very little.

I make this passing observation: To vote only for those who "believe as I do" will force all of us to vote only for ourselves. In all such poorly veiled personal attacks as the writer allowed himself to make, it is to smile. The more's the pity.

Thank you, Mr. Editor, for this little personal space.

PEACE IN BELIEVING.

Peace comes by belief; not by ourselves or our own strength, but by being held in the hand of him who saved us, do these disturbed natures of ours come to their true selves and work harmoniously and to their best results. Self-conceit, which is the most peace-destroying thing in all the world, is overwhelmed in consecration to the Master and contrition starts from the dust, and turns into the very angel of hope and growth when once a soul believes in Jesus Christ. Oh, then, that over us, perplexed and troubled and afraid, as over the disciples in the chamber long ago, the hand of Jesus might be stretched, and we, to-day, might hear him saying, "Peace I leave with you; My Peace I give unto you. Believe in Me." Oh, that our souls may say, "Dear Lord, we do believe in thee, and so we claim thy Peace."—Phillips Brooks.

MISSIONARY BEAUTITUDES.

Blessed are the missionaries of the Gospel, for to them is given the promise of the presence of Christ.

Blessed are the sowers of the word, for they shall abundantly rejoice.

Blessed are those who turn many to righteousness, for they shall shine as the stars forever.

Blessed are they who spend themselves in service for the needy, for they shall have the benediction of the King.

Blessed are the givers for the spread of the Gospel, for they are approved by our Savior.

Blessed are those who are persecuted for righteousness sake, for great is their reward.

Blessed are the intercessors, for they have the assurance of answered prayer.—December Royal Service.

REPORT OF THE PHOENIX MEETING.

Our revival meeting began at Phoenix Church on Satartia charge the fourth Sunday in August. The preaching was done by Rev. L. L. Roberts, pastor of Canton Methodist Church. Singing was conducted by Rev. O. H. Scott, of McComb City. Those who have heard Brother Roberts can and will agree with me when I say that when Rev. L. L. Roberts stands before a congregation and delivers a message they have gotten something worth while.

The meeting began the fourth Sunday in August and closed out the following Friday and the congregation grew from day to day. Mr. Scott is just wonderful among young people. He is a great singer and he understands how to organize the young people, and he wins the confidence of both old and young.

There was great interest manifested and the church was revived. So as I see it we had a great meeting—work done that will tell in the future.

I will say this: All the preachers who want a whole team will make no mistake in securing the Revs. L. L. Roberts and O. H. Scott if they want a work that will live on after the meeting is over and they are gone.

FINE MEETING AT NEW HEBRON, MISS.

Dear Brother Editor: On the night of Aug. 21, we closed at New Hebron, on the Silver Creek charge, what was conceded by the citizens of the town one of the best meetings in the history of the church.

We were assisted by the Jones evangelistic party, consisting of Claude P. Jones as preacher, Mrs. Jones as pianist, and Mr. H. M. Scott, of Milan, Tenn., as soloist and choir director.

The service rendered by this splendid party was par excellence. It affords me unusual pleasure to give them my unqualified endorsement through the columns of your paper.

To any of the brethren desiring first class service, in the preaching of Brother Jones you will get it. In the field of music, I count Mrs. Jones and Mr. Scott among the best I have ever heard. You will make no mistake, brethren, in using this party of consecrated workers.

Yours in Him,

E. A. KING, P. C.

THE METHODIST BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION.

There are many good reasons why the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and especially the ministers, should join the Methodist Benevolent Association. I am mentioning some of them.

The Methodist Benevolent Association is twenty-four years old and has had a steady growth, until to-day it is a strong institution with more than $2,000,000 in insurance in force.

The Methodist Benevolent Association has a strong board of directors, composed of the most representative men of the church, both ministers and laymen, who are giving of their time and ability without pay as a service to the church.

The Methodist Benevolent Association gives insurance to members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and is the only institution which is operated exclusively for members of our church.

The Methodist Benevolent Association gives insurance at a much lower rate than the old line companies do, yet is perfectly safe, operating under a charter and conforming to all legal requirements.

This is the time in which insurance is the popular thing—never before were so many people taking life insurance. Since this is true, why not join your own Methodist Benevolent Association?

Life insurance is one thing you cannot get when you need it; so it is important to secure it while you can.

The Methodist Benevolent Association is anxious to issue a policy to you.

The Methodist Benevolent Association was originally for ministers exclusively, but it has grown to such proportion it takes the membership in general of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

It also has an Educational Endowment policy for the children to assist them through college.

I shall endeavor to visit as many of the Annual Conferences as possible, and we hope to have some one represent the Association at those I cannot attend. We want to serve the membership of our church in our line.

METHODIST BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION,

R. S. TINNON,
Field Secretary.

Winnsboro Blue Granite Monuments Maintain Memories

*"Thou turnest man to destruction * * * They are like grass which groweth up. In the morning it flourisheth and groweth up; in the evening it is cut down and withereth."*

How these words have been impressed upon us. There are some losses we will never forget; some memories we will always cherish.

Visits to the cemeteries where graves are marked reveal that many of the markers and monuments are also of few days, some discolored, others cracking and crumbling, as the ravages of time take their toll.

What a consolation to know that Mother's monument has been cut from a more lasting stone—granite—genuine Winnsboro Blue. How the very rock itself brings back the tender memories of her. One can almost see a vision of childhood days in the stone itself.

OF ALL THE GRAY GRANITES,

Winnsboro Blue Granite

"The Silk of the Trade"

stands preeminently the most lasting, the most beautiful and inscriptions on it most legible.

Be sure that you get the genuine Winnsboro Blue Granite. Like other high quality materials there are many inferior substitutes that resemble this granite on first appearance but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty.

Write for Free descriptive literature, also for facsimile reproduction of a polished sample of Winnsboro Blue Granite, that you may see its beauty.

When you have purchased a monument specifying Winnsboro Blue Granite write us giving name of your Memorial Merchant, and we will send you a polished Winnsboro Blue Granite paper weight.

WATERPROOF, LA.

We are glad to report that our auxiliary is back to normal again.

We meet each week, the first and third Tuesdays at the church for regular business meeting and "Voice" program; on the second and fourth Tuesdays we meet in the homes for Bible study, and under the direction of Mrs. Earl Hunter, find it truly profitable and interesting. We always "serve" at these meetings in the homes and enjoy a social hour after the lesson. Our corresponding secretary presents Christian Stewardship on the fifth Tuesdays.

We have finished two mission study books this year and plan to complete one more before the Week of Prayer.

Am sure we will go over the top with our Pledge just as we did last year.

We have an average weekly attendance of 18 members, which I think is very fine.

We did repair work on the parsonage last year to the extent of nearly $1000. We haven't undertaken anything like that this year, but our women responded beautifully to the call for help during the flood, and we are still doing charity work.

BADLY RUN-DOWN

Kentucky Woman Had "Terrible Time" Doing Her Home Work. Strength Returned After She Took Cardui.

Shelbyville, Ky.—"Several years ago," says Mrs. Alven Jesse, of this place, "my health was very bad. I was very much run-down. I was in such a weak, nervous condition that I was not able to do my housework.

"I struggled to keep up, because I had to, but many a time I spent hours in bed, trying to force enough strength to go through the daily routine.

"This condition went on for some time, until I heard about Cardui, which some one told me was good for such ailments. I gave it an immediate trial, and, I am thankful to say, my improvement was rapid. I soon was able to do my housework with ease and comfort. I felt fine and I looked so much better.

"This spring I was not as well as I had been. I was ill in the winter with colds, which left me weak. So I sent at once to the store for Cardui and began taking it. In just a little while I was feeling much better, my strength returned and I was able to get my work done easier and with less effort."

ZONE MEETING, BONHOMIE.

About 120 were in attendance at the zone meeting of the Methodist Missionary Societies of Main St., Broad St., Court St., Bonhomie, Petal, Purvis, Lydian Circle and Priscillian Circle, which was held Monday afternoon, Aug. 29, at the Bonhomie church. There was a good representation from each organization, and the president, Mrs. D. E. Edwards, presided.

Devotional was led by the Rev. J. W. Laudenslager, pastor-host, using Scripture from St. John 15 and stressing the thought of Christian service being one of joy. The presiding elder, Rev. J. R. Jones, led in prayer, minutes were read and approved and reports considered, the treasurer, Mrs. W. A. Bilbo, reporting $75 on hand and free-will offering amounting to $18. Mrs. Jones expressed her appreciation for the gifts recently received at the district parsonage.

A most impressive pageant, "Telling the Tidings," was given by Broad St., with about 20 members taking part and each having a helpful message; then a musical reading by Miss Louise Garraway and a piano solo by Miss Maxine Purvis were very much enjoyed.

Mrs. T. W. Cooper's talk was an inspiration to every woman to be a member of some missionary society. Mrs. K. B. Alsup, in an appealing manner, gave a picture of Whitworth College.

The next meeting will be held on Oct. 31 at Court St. Church, with Pricillian Circle and Petal co-hostesses, Main St. and Bonhomie to give program. At this time there will be an election of officers.

The service was concluded with prayer by Rev. Mr. Wesley, of Purvis, and the out-door social half-hour, during which an abundance of tasty sandwiches and tea was served by the members of Bonhomie and Main St., brought the meeting to a pleasant close.

WHERE THE GOOD NEWS IS SPREADING.

Reporting an increased membership for the year 1926-27, with fine attendance on all church, League, and Sunday school services during the year, the Rev. Jan Leidorf, pastor of the Methodist church at Trebon, Czechoslovakia, in his report made at the annual meeting of the Czechoslovak Mission, held at Pilsen early in July, told of great success along every line of church work.

Mr. Leidorf's charge lies in the South Bohemia District, of which the Rev. Josef Dobes is presiding elder. Mr. Leidorf himself is supported as a special on the mission field by a layman of Jackson, Miss.

Statistics for the year show an Epworth League with twenty-three members; a Sunday school of sixty, and a total church membership, including probationers, of 610. During the weekly meetings of the League the Bible is studied or biographies of great leaders of the Czech nation or of pioneers of the Methodist church.

Collections for the year amounted to Kc. 11,991.93, which were used for the local church work, for the general work, the superannuated endowment fund, the Methodist orphanage, and the Masaryk League against tuberculosis. The Sunday schools contribution was expended for Bible pictures and for Christmas gifts.

Sunday School

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Literature to be used in the observance of Children's Week has been mailed to thirty-eight pastors. Let me have orders for twelve others and I shall be fairly well satisfied. This is an effort put forth by the church to call attention to the worth of childhood and youth. Would that I had the power to stir the heart of the church to action! Next year may be too late to reach and help some of the gay, thoughtless youngsters that we see every day about us. Man, what is the matter with you that you do not do everything in your power to help the young people to a better life?

Have you seen the leaflet on Promotion and Training Day? This day is near at hand. What preparation have you made to observe it successfully? Have you ordered Promotion Certificates? Have you a list of all the teachers and officers who have read an approved book, or have taken one or more credits? The best way to save the world is to save that part under our own care, the world that we can see all around us. After a man has attended to his own job he does not have time to correct those he may never see. May the Lord have mercy on us and deliver us from so much useless and hurtful twaddle!

If you want a helpful program to be used in the installation of your officers and teachers, you will find the same in the October number of the Workers' Council, prepared by Rev. John Chambers, of Jackson. If you care to add to it or take from it or make a better one, do so, but install your officers and teachers publicly and thus give them a good start for the new Sunday school year.

Read the October number of the Magazine, especially "Group Lesson for Intermediates and Senior," "Enriching Lesson Material," "Our Rural Problem," "Missions in the Sunday School," "The Habits of Religion" and others. Dr. Chappell is constanly improving our Sunday school periodicals. What we read determines in a large measure what we think; what we think tends to get into conduct. Read the best and your conduct will be upon a high plane.

Mrs. A. C. Johnson, of Doddsville, Miss., has consented to act as Elementary Superintendent of the Greenwood District. Her first task is to help pastors see to it that a number of schools observe Children's Week. Teachers of Beginners, Primaries, and Juniors of the Greenwood District, write Mrs. Johnson for help. Mrs. W. H. Ratliff, of Sherard, has agreed to have Children's Week looked after in the Greenwood District. She has already lined up nine schools and is after the tenth.

We want a picture of all the new churches in the Conference for an exhibit. Make a good kodak picture of your new church, then one of the officers and teachers and send it to me to place in the exhibit. The man who has been instrumental in building a church deserves all commendation. Some man's blood has gone into every church building in the Conference. Get busy and send in the picture at once.

We are checking up the schools to see where they have gotten results and to see what is to be done next. No school is making the progress it ought to make that does not have a regular meeting of the Workers' Council. No sane man would deposit money in a bank that does not hold regular meetings of the directors. Is it not strange that you can get men to go wild over making surveys to find out the number of cows in the county? There is money in cows and not a cent in boys and girls. It is a wonder that God is so patient with us. "What fools we mortals be."

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

By C. D. Atkinson.

The fall Standard Training Schools are shaping up in a splendid manner, providing inspiration and enthusiasm to our workers to carry on.

* * *

We are in receipt of official reports of the Hammond and Leesville schools conducted last week. At Hammond, in the Baton Rouge District, sixty credits were issued as follows: "The Worker and His Bible," taught by Dr. B. P. Taylor, 25 credits; "The Pupil," taught by Prof. J. E. Stephens, 9; "Junior Materials and Methods of Teaching," taught by Mrs. R. H. Harper, 9; "Sunday School Management," taught by Rev. F. C. Adams, 11; "Cokesbury Course," taught by Rev. A. K. McLellan, 6. A card from Brother Booth, Educational Director, assures us that this was a most excellent school, the best they had, with fine spirit and fine personnel. Brother Adams writes to express his appreciation of having been invited to teach in this school and spend a week with our Louisiana folk. Brother Adams is the Extension Secretary of the North Texas Conference.

At Leesville, in the Lake Charles District, fifty-seven credits were issued: "The Worker and His Bible," taught by Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr., 26; "The Small Sunday School," taught by Rev. C. D. Atkinson, 11; "Principles of Teaching," taught by Mrs. G. F. Winfield, 13; "Primary Administration," taught by Mrs. Byron Harwell, 7. We hear fine reports and echoes from this school, the fine spirit of the workers, the splendid work of the faculty, and the lasting good results. On Friday the members and faculty, together with others of the congregation, went to Holly Grove for a rally and "dinner on the ground." This was a wonderful occasion, with about 100 present. The words of welcome were given by Brother R. T. Wright, a resident local elder, who told us that the Holly Grove church was 110 years old. The superintendent of the Sunday school is Brother T. W. Biven, and we have read with considerable interest what he has to say of what the Leesville Training School will mean to his school. I quote: "To have a school that is much better organized; a regular program of worship well prepared and carried out; to have one or more training classes each week; to be more punctual and systematic in all my Sunday school work; to have the best school that Holly Grove has ever had."

The writer wishes to express a sense of appreciation of the fine hospitality extended to the workers in both of these schools, as each and every one were delighted.

The Alexandria school closed on Friday night, Sept. 9, with approximately forty-five credits, the official report of which will be given at next week's writing. A splendid teaching force has composed the faculty, and the spirit of the school is splendid.

* * *

The latest Sunday School Day offerings come from First Church, New Orleans, $50, and Alco, $5. We acknowledge these with thanks.

* * *

We are in receipt of a letter from Brother Robert Vaughn, of Ruston, reminding us that Oct. 9 will be "Harvest Day." This is one of the two days in the year when our offerings go to the support of the little children in our care at Ruston, and we trust that every congregation, and every member thereof, will do a big thing this year in providing bountifully for these little people.

* * *

Letters from Mrs. R. H. Wynn, of Lake Charles, requesting literature and helps for the organization of Intermediate and Senior departments, and from Mrs. J. H. Cain, of De Ridder, for literature on organized Bible classes, are received with interest, and we offer our sincere good wishes to these organizations.

* * *

We are approaching our annual observance of Children's Week, and in this connection an interesting letter comes from Mrs. W. W. Holmes, State Superintendent of the Elementary Work, in which she calls attention to a suggestion by Miss Skinner that all of our schools observe this week, and points out the fact that a great many schools, because the pageant form of observance sometimes proves burdersome, take no steps whatever toward this observance. It is important that something be done along this line. There are many other things besides pageants that will bring our work before the people of our churches. We have our visitation, exhibits, intensive training, and many other phases of this forward movement that are important to bring before the church. Let us each and every one make plans for the observance this year of the Enlarged Children's Week. Use the pageants when possible; but when not practicable, use other methods of taking this "Forward Step." If you desire any suggestions and help, Mrs. Holmes,—whose address is 839 Morrovia Street, Shreveport; or your District Superintendent whose name and address you are no doubt familiar with, will give you whatever assistance you need, or direct you to the proper source.

* * *

We have a letter from Brother Henry W. Jordan, of Covington, inviting the office staff to visit his school. Brother Jordan tells us he has six Cokesbury credits in his school this year, and expects to have more by the time Conference convenes. This is an excellent showing.

* * *

Training Schools for Monroe, First Church, Shreveport, and Ruston are shaping up. The "set-up" meeting for the Shreveport school was held on Sunday, the 11th instant. Monroe has her faculty engaged with the exception of the Intermediate-Senior course; among the instructors will be Brother Lutz, Brother Joyner, and Mrs. W. B. Ferguson. The Ruston School will soon be in shape, and among the teachers there will be Bro. Cleanth Brooks, of Alexandria, who will teach a course on the Bible. Natchitoches is ready for a school Sept. 18.

* * *

Rev. W. S. Henry, of Lecompte, was a welcome visitor in our office this week. His congregation will build a new church on the lot where the former high school stood. We congratulate the preacher and the people, and wish them great success.

* * *

Your writer was at Opelousas last Sunday to answer a call to help out a sick preacher. Brother Boddie overworked himself during the flooded season, and his doctor advises a few weeks' rest at Coopers Wells, which he is planning to do. We enjoyed our visit at this historic city and in the hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Lawler.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL PAGEANT, "THE HOLY ALLIANCE."

It was my great pleasure and good fortune to attend the second term of the Leadership Training School at Lake Junaluska, beginning Aug. 3. On the night of the 17th some of the members of the Sunday School Board, instructors and others gave the pageant, "The Holy Alliance." This splendid pageant, showing the destructive forces of disease, ignorance, sin, poverty and extravagance as they plot against the constructive agencies of character building—the home, the church, the school and the State—and thus the forming of alliance in the fight against these evils. The 3,000 persons or more who witnessed the splendid performance gave every evidence of great appreciation. The lesson stood out clear and impressive and carried a wonderful message.

This pageant we are anxious to place in every Sunday school, not only in the Newton District, but in every Sunday school in our two great Mississippi Conferences, the pageant to be given at the close of enlarged Children's Week during the month of October, or as near thereto as possible. It can easily be given in any congregation. The leaflets, posters and other helps will be sent you free of charge—just for the asking.

Write Miss Jones, 401 Millsaps Building, Jackson, or to me, and we will gladly do all we can to help you forward our slogan, "Give More Thought to Childhood and Youth."

I am at this time sending material to ten Sunday schools for the observance of enlarged Children's Week. Let us hear from other churches.

Elementary Superintendent,
Newton District.

A LETTER FROM REV. E. G. KILGORE.

Dear Dr. Carley: Since my last note to the Advocate I have conducted five revival meetings—one in Missouri and four in Mississippi. Two were with Brother A. A. Martin, on the Ebenezer charge, and two with Brother Bowlin at Wright's and Lewisburg, on the Pleasant Hill charge. In all these meetings classes were received into the church, including a number of promising young men. At Lewisburg, our last meeting, twenty-one were added to the church, all on profession of faith except one, who came to us from the Baptists. These pastors were rejoiced at the success of this work, and the oldest citizens at Lewisburg say the revival there was the best held there in the history of the church, or at least for a long time.

I have preached eighty-six times during the last three months, and held up fine through it all. Pretty good, isn't this, for one who has already passed his threescore and ten years? I am happy when at work.

Owing to the slump in the price of cotton last year and this followed by the disastrous floods, finances in this territory are very short; but the people are making an honest effort to do what they can, and the preachers are hopeful.

E. G. KILGORE.

Memphis, Tenn.

A GREAT VACATION.

Dear Dr. Carley: My family and myself are home again after a most delightful vacation during the month of August. Our church here gave us the entire month off, with salary continued, plus a nice "vacation gift" in cash.

During our absence two of our boys who had just recently felt a call to preach filled my pulpit one time each. They tell me that all available sitting and standing room was taken at each of these services, and that there was a great overflow into the church lawn. These boys are among the finest and best boys in our community. Both are now in high school, and expect to take college and seminary work as a part of their preparation. One is Sam Talley, and the other is Roy Montgomery. Roy Montgomery was converted and joined the church as a result of our "Young People's Revival" that we held July 5 to July 12, and about which I hope to write more at a later date.

Our destination going was Onawa, Iowa, the home of my wife's people. While there we drove up to Sioux City for a day, where my wife has a brother and a sister. (By the way, I played around their nine-hole golf course with my brother-in-law—a golf course with many ups-and-downs!) I was invited by the pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Onawa to preach on the second Sunday, and did preach to a large congregation of Methodists and Congregationalists. We spent two happy weeks at Onawa, a beautiful little town of about twenty-five hundred people. It seems to be quite a town for producing preachers' wives. There are no less than eight preachers' wives, now living, who were born and reared in Onawa, my wife being one of the eight.

On our return home we visited friends and relatives in Kansas City, Urich, Clinton, and Montrose, Mo., and my youngest sister, Mrs. Walter Foley, in Chelsea, Okla. My other sister, Mrs. Gaylord Booth, and her two daughters, from Oklahoma City, met us there.

On the third Sunday of August I had the privilege of preaching in Clinton, Mo., ten miles west from which I was born and reared. My uncle, Dr. W. B. Calvert, wanted me to come by there and to preach. He made arrangements with his pastor for me to preach at the Methodist Episcopal Church in the morning, and, to my great surprise, when I reached Clinton, I found that they had me scheduled to preach at a union service of all the Protestant churches at night. It was a happy day. On Monday we drove out to the old place, where we met many more old friends and neighbors who had not driven to town to hear me preach.

We drove on to Chelsea, Okla., after spending Saturday, Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday with friends and relatives from Kansas City to Montrose, Mo. We visited at Chelsea five days, thence on home. I was scheduled to preach in Chelsea the Sunday morning of the fourth Sunday.

Now, I did not preach the same sermon all the way around. I preached four different times, and I preached four different sermons, on the subjects: "An Every Day, Every Vocation Life Service;" "Christianity's Program for the World;" "Prepare to Meet Thy God," from the parable of the "Marriage Feast," and "The Universal Jesus," respectively.

This is the first time we have ever used our vacation time just to visit, but I must testify that it is the most profitable vacation we have ever had. I may speak of some of its educational values later. We are home, refreshed in body, mind, and spirit; ready for hard work.

It was truly a great vacation.

HOWARD E. PFOST.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

The past week has been the week of the Training School at Capitol Street Church. This was an all-general-unit-school with five teachers. Fifty credits were earned in the school and two office credits. Only four persons who could have received credit did not get credit in this school. There was an earnestness manifested that was very fine and made a wonderful impression. We feel that the work of these schools in Jackson will grow in interest and power.

The School at Natchez begins Sunday, the eleventh, and will be concluding when you read this notice. We would appreciate your prayers for us that this school may be run for the glory of God.

Our school opens at Hattiesburg September 25, and continues through that week. We are trusting that this school will be the best school ever held in Hattiesburg. Last year we had 79 credits issued here and we are hoping we will have 100 credits this year. The first week in October our school at McComb City will be held. This school I trust will be far-reaching and much better than last year as to the number of units taken.

The Check-Men of the Hattiesburg District will meet the afternoon of Sept. 27 in the Court Street Church. I trust that each interested party will be present and that we will have a most delightful meeting.

The Check-Men of the Jackson District will meet Saturday, September 17, at 3:30 p.m., in the ladies' parlor, Capitol Street Church. We are trusting that we will have a full attendance and all men will be on hand at this hour.

The idea of checking all the schools in the month of October is attracting favorable comments from all parts of the Conference. We feel sure that with the co-operation of the preachers this work will mean a great deal for the closing out of the circuits on getting accurate reports.

Mr. Hull has just closed a revival on the Trenton charge, in which there were a number to unite with the church, and the church life of the community greatly revived. He has also just closed three Cokesbury Schools, two on the Barlow charge and one on the Adams charge. These schools were unusually successful. We are trusting that many doors will be open for this type of work straight on through the year. Nothing rallies a community like a training course.

Pray for the work and the workers.

The very first application will give you relief and a few short treatments will thoroughly convince you that by sticking faithfully to it for a short while your foot troubles will be a thing of the past.

Don't expect a single bottle to do it all at once, but one bottle we know will show you beyond all question that you have at last discovered the way to solid foot comfort.

Remember that Moone's Emerald Oil is a clean, powerful, penetrating Antiseptic Oil that does not stain or leave a greasy residue and that the very first bottle must give complete satisfaction or your money cheerfully refunded.

JUNALUSKA.

To the six Mississippi Leaguers who were in attendance, the above name symbolizes the highest mountain peak of inspirational attainment, and to those throughout the Conference who could not be there, we only hope that it may be your opportunity in some future time to attend one of these great Conference-wide assemblies held in the mission building, overlooking beautiful Lake Junaluska, with the mountains towering in the distance.

This year's conference was exceptional in the wonderful attitude manifested by all in attendance, and the consciousness of His presence among us. It was in truth a great assembly, and it was good to have been there.

Under the able supervision of Dean E. O. Harbin, an excellent faculty had been procured, and the class work was of the best. Our only regret was that we could not be in every class, but physical limitation as well as assembly restrictions prohibited this. We were exceptionally blessed, however, in our selection of classes.

Prof. C. Washburn, head of department of church music at Scarritt College, Nashville, instructed us in Hymnology, and in his efficient way caused every member of his class to obtain a greater appreciation of our own Methodist hymns, and to determine, in their meager way, to bring this awakened appreciation back to the folks at home.

Mr. and Mrs. Twilley, of the Florida Conference, were with us, Mr. Twilley an Assembly pianist, and Mrs. Twilley as teacher and lecturer. One of the unfortunate happenings of the conference was the painful accident which Mr. Twilley sustained on the afternoon of Stunt Night, when the De Luxe Baby Grand piano that he was helping to move fell, mashing three of his fingers on his right hand, incapacitating him for several weeks. Mrs. Twilley, who before her marriage was the State Field Secretary of Epworth League work in the Conference, and now an evangelist, made of her class in Evangelism one of the most inspirational that it has ever been my privilege to work in. In addition to this wonderful service, she rendered further service in her vesper hours down by the lake, when she presented in her estimable way, "Equipment of the Leader." The work of these admirable people will stand out as high lights of this year's Assembly.

Mr. Harbin directed us in "Conference and District Management" in our discussion group on Methods, and as all of you know, we were ably directed, as Mr. Harbin is among the best in this line of work, not to mention his exceptional recreational leadership abilities. Miss Sampson, from Central Office, Richmond, gave demonstrations and lessons in Crepe Paper Work, Basketry, and Wax Work, and numerous delegates took advantage of becoming more proficient along these lines.

In our Forum hours, Mr. Moreland, missionary to Brazil, conducted two very interesting periods, and, assisted by Mrs. Moreland, taught us some of the Brazilian games. Customs of Brazil were made very clear to us, and all of us are better able to appreciate and discuss our work there since having heard Mr. Moreland. Two other periods were presided over by Mr. Pim, who discussed Hi League and Senior Chapter organizations, assisted by Miss Tatom on Junior Epworth Chapters.

The Dramatic Class presented their work in the form of a beautiful pageant which took the place of one of the platform hours. This class was well handled, and their presentation was a credit to the untiring efforts of Miss Biggs, who had this phase of the work in charge.

Platform hours were of course a feature of the Assembly, the first two addresses being brought us by Dr. W. R. N. Score, of Texas. Dr. Score served during the world war as chaplain, and with his broadened outlook was able to bring us two wonderful messages, using the Assembly theme, "Leaguers To-Day—Leaders To-Morrow" as his keynote address, and "What Will We Do With Jesus" as his second theme. Dr. Score, in addition to this work, was in charge of the Spiritual Set-Up each morning, when he discussed, "Tests of the Leader."

Dr. Ellis, famous globe trotter and writer, was another of the platform speakers, and in his message of exploration and discovery of the Bible lands, the fact was indelibly impressed on our minds that the Bible was always true, and would check up in every instance pertaining to geographical or historical record.

Dr. Forney Hutchinson, of Oklahoma City, brought us a series of five addresses, and left us with a longing for more. He is one of the best preachers in these parts, as evidenced by the fact that his congregation at St. Luke's won't let him go, he having served them for nine years. Interspersing his wonderful talks with keen, clean humor, he brought home his messages on the "Test of the Fiery Pit," "Burning and Shining," "Modern Prodigals," "Coasting," and "Service."

The recreational feature of this year's Assembly was presided over by Mr. Philip Schwartz, North Carolina. He divided the Assembly into four groups, "All Eager," "More Eager," "Earnest Eager" and "Been Eager," and for twenty minutes every morning competitive games were played. Most of our Mississippi folks were "More Eager," and, captained by a Mississippian, they were successful in "kopping the cup." Our own Conference Secretary was very much in evidence on first base, and her co-Leaguer helped her to bring laurels to the Magnolia State in the same position and on the pitcher's mound, when the "More Eagers" captured the base ball championship of the Assembly. Organized hikes, volley ball, and aquatic sports were all featured, closed by a circus party on Saturday night, in which all took part. Stunt night was won by Tennessee in their presentation of a "Sunflower Minstrel," second place going to South Carolina, with "Old Man in a Shoe," and third place to Florida, with "Columbus a la Mode."

The closing half-hour of each day's work was in the form of Candle Prayer Groups, and to these groups belong a great portion of the success that attended the Assembly this year. Inspired by the mountainous peaks about us, reflected in the placid surface of Lake Junaluska, illuminated by the ever burning cross, the Assembly will always be a landmark in our life.

Above is the program of the first Epworth Hi League camp of our Conference, and we think it was a good one, since we actually saw this program carried out with great success last week at the Hi League camp at Camp Dantzler. We should like to write this up at great length, but because of lack of space we shall only call your attention to a few of the outstanding features.

There were forty-eight young people in attendance, counting faculty, officers and students. These represented every district except Brookhaven. These fine young people came to this camp with the determination to get everything possible of methods and inspiration to take home to their Leagues, and we believe that they did this. Camp Dantzler is situated in

SHOULD HUSBANDS DO HOUSE WORK?

How Mrs. Dyer Solved the Problem.

Mrs. Mildred Dyer was lucky. She had a good-natured husband who helped her with much of her housework. Because she was in ill health for five years, it was often necessary for him to do this. But it bothered Mrs. Dyer. She felt that he had to work hard enough anyway. The time he spent in doing her work was needed for his own. She determined to find the road to better health.

She writes: "I think Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is simply wonderful. My health is better than it has ever been. I am getting stronger and gaining in weight."

She has solved her problem and her household is happier. The Dyers live at Redlands, Calif., Route A, Box 183.

How often does your husband have to do your housework? No matter how willing he is, no woman feels comfortable about it. Perhaps you, too, will find better health through the faithful use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

EPWORTH HI LEAGUE PROGRAM, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE EPWORTH LEAGUE, CAMP DANTZLER, HATTIESBURG, MISS., AUG. 29-SEPT. 3.

such a delightful place and the entire surroundings were so conducive to a Christlike spirit that our motto, "Be Christlike," was achieved. No one who has not had this wonderful opportunity of camping in the woods, where God is revealed at every turn, in the trees, in the singing of the birds, in the moon and the twinkling stars reflected in the waters and in the deepening silences of the twilight, can appreciate the beauty and the joy of the experiences of these Leaguers.

Much permanent help was gained from a study of the Bible and the Methods classes as well as those in Nature Study, hand and camp craft; but the real inspiration of the camp came from the morning watch and vesper services. The morning watch service was led by Mr. B. Frank Pim. Each morning just before breakfast we gathered in a circle and sang songs of praise, followed by a chain of prayers. Then Mr. Pim made a brief talk each day, illustrating it with God's own handiwork: hills, water, stars, rocks and roots. These were very impressive services, and we know that here the Young People's revival really began. The vesper services, led by Rev. J. A. Smith, who applied his messages to our own every-day life were truly inspiring. These moments that we spent in prayer and meditation were very precious.

The play life was not neglected in this camp. Under the leadership of Mr. Pim, Miss Sells, and Mr. Lewis, this phase of camp life was amply provided for. The campers were divided into two tribes. The Cherokees were under the capable leadership of C. A. Lawson, of Laurel, while the Choctaws were led by Ernest Turcotte, of Vicksburg, otherwise "Chief Eagle Feather." Each afternoon competitive games were played, the winner getting twenty-five points and the other tribe getting ten points. There were no losers. It was here that we learned what it means to be a good sport. Each night one of the tribes had charge of the camp fire program, while the other tribe built the fire. The program was always very entertaining, since we discovered quite a bit of talent in camp. The paper that was written by the members of the tribe who gave the program was very original, and every one enjoyed it. At the end of the camp the totem poles were judged, and the Cherokees won. This gave them an additional one hundred points, and they were declared the winners of the whistle.

On the closing night of the camp a very impressive candle service was held. Some of the Leaguers formed a cross, others formed the letters E. L. on each side of the cross. Every one else arranged themselves in a circle. Each person was given a candle. The cross was lighted first and each person in turn received his light from his neighbor. Mr. Pim made an impressive talk, and all sang, "Let the Lower Lights Be Burning."

The closing exercise was held Saturday morning Sept. 3. At the call of the bugle all assembled at the circle. Several songs were sung, and then each Leaguer told what had meant the most to them during the camp. Brother Osmond Lewis offered a prayer, the winners of the totem pole and the winners of the whistle were announced, and certificates of credit were issued to thirty-two Hi Leaguers. Those receiving two units of credit on their Hi League Christian Culture Diploma were: Virginia Hendrix, Minnie Rae Sells, and Harold Crews, of Gulfport; Harry Cameron, of Shubuta; Marion Helveston, Slater McEachern, of Lucedale; Ann Stevens Lewis, of Natchez; Ernest Turcotte, of Vicksburg; Georgie Mitchell, Evelyn Stite, of Yazoo City; Luna Hill, Eloise and Eunice Jordan, Curtis Ramsey, Harvey Jordan, of Ellisville; Archie Porter, Julian Livings, Mildred Carley, and Kathleen Nall, of Petal; Lloyd Sutherland, C. A. Lawson, Bob Newcomer, Olive Virginia Whitaker, Margaret Miller, Mary Alice Weems, of Laurel; Mary Lee Anderson, Rosena Harrell, Fay Clark, Emma Louise Lewis, Frances Norsworthy, Elizabeth Tatum, Ruth Bailey, Margaret Price, of Hattiesburg.

After the certificates were delivered, all present expressed their thankfulness for being in camp and their determination to let their lives reflect the Christ that liveth in them by singing,

"Into my heart, come into my heart,
Lord Jesus;
Come in to-day, come in to stay,
Come into my heart
Lord Jesus."

EPWORTH LEAGUE ASSEMBLY, LAKE JUNALUSKA, AUG. 4-14.

On Thursday night, the first platform hour of the Assembly was led by Rev. J. N. R. Score. After this hour, a "get-to-gether social" was held at the Mission Building. At this time the play groups were organized under the supervision of Mr. Swartz, recreation leader. Much enjoyment and competition was enjoyed on this first night as well as the rest of the Assembly in ball games, water sports, and other competitive games. Much credit is due to Mr. Swartz for his untiring efforts to make us enjoy the recreation periods.

Class work began in earnest on the morning of Friday, Aug. 5. The first devotional was led by Rev. Mr. Score on "Tests of a Leader." The theme of the Assembly was, "Leaders for To-day and To-Morrow," and all class work was based on this theme. There were classes in Leadership for Junior, Hi League, Union, District and Conference Workers. Both teachers and students reported fine work. Much inspiration as well as methods of League work was gained by the association with such consecrated leaders and Leaguers.

The open forum period was filled by several leaders. Miss Sampley, of the Richmond Publishing House, had charge of this period for two days. She gave demonstrations in crepe paper work, wax working, and basket making. Mr. Moreland, who has spent five and one-half years teaching in a college in Brazil, gave us some very interesting facts about the people, the country and the work of the Methodist church in Brazil. Mrs. Moreland gave some demonstrations of Brazilian games. Mr. Harbin, dean of the Assembly, gave some suggestions for recreation. The last two days of the Assembly Mr. B. Frank Pim, General Hi League Secretary, discussed the Hi League in open forum.

The afternoons were given over to recreation. We took trips to Mount Pisgah and Eagle's Nest. These sight-seeing trips were enjoyed by all who were fortunate enough to participate.

Mrs. F. W. Twilley, of Tampa, Fla., led the inspiring vesper services each evening down by the lake. The theme of her talks was "The Leader's Equipment." She held one vesper service on the top of Eagle's Nest. There we truly had a "mountain top" experience in both senses of the word. All of us declared this to be a great service, as were all those led by Mrs. Twilley. To know her was to know that she had been with God, and to love her.

Rev. Mr. Score, of Texas, and Dr. Forney Hutchinson, of Oklahoma, brought great messages at the platform hour. Thursday night was given over to stunts, which were clever. Friday night Miss Biggs presented her class in dramatics in a beautiful pageant, "The Spirit of Youth." On Saturday night we held a circus frolic, featuring each play group and the faculty in special acts. Sunday was Consecration Day, and one that was very precious to all of us, and one that will long linger in our memories.

I, as secretary of the Mississippi Conference Epworth League, and your elected delegate to this great Assembly at Lake Junaluska, wish to thank the Conference for making it possible for me to attend this splendid Assembly. I am sure that I will be a better worker after receiving this splendid training and wonderful inspiration.

Yours in his name,
GRACE LEWIS, Secretary,
Mississippi Conference.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

A GOSPEL—WITH A PROGRAM.

The preacher's first business has to do with a gospel—a message of salvation. Just as Jesus Christ came to seek and to save that which was lost, so the Christian preacher is to proclaim the message of salvation to sinful men. True preaching is not the perfunctory announcement of the way to be saved; it is the passionate appeal to men to be saved, through repentance and through faith in Jesus Christ. The true preacher ought to feel the awfulness of the Apostle's burden, "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel;" but he ought not to forget that he is a preacher, not to save himself, but to save others. There must be a central passion in every great life; the preacher's central passion ought to be the salvation of the lost.

It is pathetically tragic for a preacher to have a program without a gospel; yet it is possible for such to be the case. A worthy program designed to accomplish worthy ends may be so beautifully and completely formulated as to attract and interest men for itself alone, causing them, to some extent at least, to lose sight of the fact that the program is only an incident in the accomplishment of a great purpose. It is a sorry day for the church when a program takes the place of a gospel and when interest in a perfection of organization and the achievement of quantitative results supersedes a passion for souls.

All this, however, is not to say that a program is incompatible with a gospel. As a matter of fact, a gospel implies a program. We are not finding fault with a program—we are simply insisting that the major emphasis belongs upon the gospel.

"CAN PREACHERS REALLY CARE FOR EACH OTHER?"

Attached to the Ninth Annual Bulletin of the Board of Finance, just from the press, is an appeal by Dr. Luther E. Todd, Secretary, addressed to all the preachers of the church, under the striking caption used above. We are going to quote his appeal here—but we are going to suggest another caption as appropriate: "Do Our Active Preachers Really Care for Their Worn-out Brethren?" Dr. Todd says:

"Brother Preacher: I am doing my utmost for the success of Superannuate Endowment. Are you? But this great task cannot be done by any one Secretary, or by a small group of interested pastors. It requires team work and faithful application by all of us.

"If you have not presented this matter to your people for the current year, may I urge you to do so at an early date. At least give them an opportunity to do what they will. If you will explain the subject to them and call for contributions, I am sure you will be surprised at their response.

"Your Annual Conference is not far away, and surely you will want to make a creditable payment on your quota. To do this you will have to work fast, but there is yet time to accomplish something worth while.

"Please, dear brother, lend a hand. If your charge is paid up to date, this does not apply to your case. If, however, your charge is behind on this sacred obligation, I trust you will do everything in your power to square the account as nearly as possible.

"We must not let this undertaking degenerate into a dismal failure, but it will do just that unless we give it the best we have in leadership. If it does fail, it shall not be my fault. Can you say as much?"

We really believe that if all the pastors of charges that are not paid up to date on Superannuate Endowment would present this cause at just one service, explain the need, and ask for contributions, many thousands of dollars in the aggregate would be added to the Fund by the meeting of the Annual Conferences. This is a consummation devoutly to be wished.

THE PASSING OF WAYNE B. WHEELER.

The unexpected death of Mr. Wayne B. Wheeler, General Counsel and Legislative Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, on Sept. 5, was a severe shock to all friends of prohibition, not only in the United States, but also throughout the world. Mr. Wheeler had given his life to the promotion of the cause of prohibition and to him perhaps more than to any other one man is due the credit for what has been accomplished in the suppression of the liquor traffic within recent years. He was utterly sincere in his advocacy of prohibition, and he combined with his sincerity a knowledge of men and of the practical methods of accomplishing results that made him the recognized leader of the prohibition forces. He was trusted by all the friends of temperance, and respected and feared by its enemies. He could ill be spared at a time like this, when a determined effort is being made to overthrow the results that have been attained. But we may well believe that his death will bring a realization of the need of united and persistent work on the part of prohibitionists to hold what has been gained. The workmen may be buried, one by one—but the work will go on.

IT CAN'T PAY.

In almost every newspaper we pick up nowadays, there is at least one account of a bank robbery, a pay-roll holdup, or some other criminal effort to get something for nothing. Sometimes the perpetrators of these crimes are arrested on the spot; sometimes they are apprehended later; and once in awhile they seem to make their escape permanently. But their criminality never pays—it cannot pay. If they are arrested, they suffer disgrace and imprisonment; if they escape, they are still hunted and have forever to be dodging the law. Yet men will continue to break the law. The sinner is in a poor plight. There is no possibility of his escaping permanently. Some day he will have to stand before God in judgment and give an account of his life. Then the penalty will be inflicted. Sin can't pay except in the wages of sin, which is death. The man who is astonished at the shortsightedness of those who violate the law of the land, yet who is himself a persistent violator of the laws of God, might very well check up on his own case.

ECCLESIASTICAL POLITICS.

We sometimes hear it charged that the church is a hotbed of political scheming and that appointments are made largely as the result of wire-pulling and skillful maneuvering. We believe the charge is without sufficient foundation. There may be a few cases here and there where somebody undertakes to use questionable methods in reaching a desired goal; but we believe most appointments are made according to the godly judgment of the appointing powers and that mighty few men even desire to be the beneficiaries of favoritism.

The probability is that the charge of politics in the church grows largely out of the innocent custom of preachers, especially as Conference draws near, of talking about impending changes and hazarding guesses as to what will take place. One brother says: "I understand that there is likely to be a change at such and such a place." Another brother responds: "Yes, and if the change is made, I guess that Brother ——— will go to ——— and Brother ——— will take his place." Later, somebody says: "I hear it rumored that So-and-so is slated for Such-and-such." And then it is easy for somebody else to report that he hears that Brother So-and-so is figuring on going to Such-and-such. So the report of wire-pulling goes abroad.

There may be a little politics in the church—but we believe there is so little of it as to make it a negligible force in making appointments.

"HOW TO ESCAPE LONELINESS."

Mr. Francis Bardwell for the past eighteen years has been Inspector of Almshouses in Massachusettes. He has devoted his life to the work of making the lot of the poverty-stricken a little brighter. In a recent number of the American Magazine, he gives a remedy for loneliness. He says it works. Here it is: "Learn to fit in! Learn to change your point of view! Learn to give; and learn, also, to receive. Admit that you are not infallible. Give the other person's opinion the benefit of the doubt. Take life as it comes to you. And, no matter how it comes, don't despise it!"

THANK GOD!

"Thank God for life!
E'en though it bring much bitterness and strife,
and all our fairest hopes be wrecked and lost,
E'en though there be more ill than good in life,
We cling to life and reckon not the cost.
Thank God for life!

"Thank God for love!
For though sometimes grief follows in its wake,
Still we forget love's sorrow in love's joy,
And cherish tears with smiles for love's dear sake;
Only in heaven is bliss without alloy.
Thank God for love!

"Thank God for pain!
No tear hath ever yet been shed in vain,
And in the end each sorrowing heart shall find
No curse, but blessings in the hand of pain;
Even when he smiteth, then is God most kind.
Thank God for pain!

"Thank God for death!
Who touches anguished lips and stills their breath
And giveth peace unto each troubled breast;
Grief flies before thy touch, O blessed death;
God's sweetest gift; thy name in heaven is Rest.
Thank God for death!"

"AM I MY BROTHER'S KEEPER?"

(Statement by Board of Temperance and Social Service of the M. E. Church, South)

Part II.

Prohibition.

The Episcopal Address already quoted continues: "The teaching of Jesus—concerning human Brotherhood—has developed a new conscience which declares and emphasizes the rights and duties of organized society as positively and with as sweeping an imperative as it declares the duties of the individual. It is this social conscience which has demanded the adoption of the national prohibition law, and has put the brand of the outlaw upon the traffic in intoxicating liquors. The national prohibition law is the most remarkable social enactment by any great nation to promote the general welfare by the restriction of the activities (appetites) of the individual."

The prohibition law is an example of genuine self-denying brotherhood—of the surrender of the right to gratify personal appetite for the good of fellow-men. And this determination to protect society from the selfishness of the covetous and the sensual brushes aside without any hesitation any claim upon any individual to perform any action, or to indulge any appetite, which action or indulgence is a menace to the physical or moral safety or life of the community in which he lives.

It cannot be too strongly emphasized that whenever and wherever the prohibition law is well enforced the results are admittedly beneficial. Why, then, is there not universal observance and enforcement? Not because good results do not follow strict enforcement, but because selfish men want to drink intoxicants, and selfish men want to make money by the traffic in intoxicants, and so appetite and covetousness—both products of selfishness—resist the demand of human brotherhood to prohibit the traffic in intoxicants for the good of society.

The present duty is plain:

First: There must be continued education in the schools and colleges, by the pulpit, by the daily, weekly and monthly press, by tracts, by charts, by moving pictures concerning the evil effects of alcohol upon body, mind and morals; concerning the historic, persistent, unwavering lawlessness of distillers, brewers and saloonkeepers as a class in pre-prohibition days, and concerning the fact that as the Supreme Court declared the liquor traffic was the most prolific source of poverty, misery, insanity, vice and crime, and concerning the debauchery and domination by the traffic of the political life of the nation from town councils to Congress itself. Our children must be taught the facts concerning the days when the open saloon was at every crossroads, and on every corner, and be shown the tremendous benefits which have followed its abolition. In the words of the Episcopal Address, "There must be continued, ever-increasing emphasis upon the educative process in the press, in the pulpit and in the school."

Second: "The industrial, social, educational, moral and religious forces of the nation which overthrew the legalized liquor traffic and secured national prohibition must unitedly fight with equal vigor and persistence the outlawed criminal traffic, and the would-be nullifiers of the law." (Episcopal Address.) These nullificationists are led by men like Governors Smith and Ritchie, who have stimulated liquor lawlessness in New York and Maryland by opposing any co-operation of State officials with the Federal Prohibition Department, and who are, therefore, personally responsible for the conditions in those States. In the cities "wet" before National Prohibition, such as New York, Chicago, Baltimore, whose liquor dealers, by their defiance of the laws of neighboring "dry" States, compelled the "dry" States to protect themselves by National Prohibition—in these cities, the "wet" newspapers have determined to force the will of these wet foreign-born populated cities upon the entire nation. They utter no word in favor of law enforcement. They appear indeed to exult in the lawlessness of their citizens; instead of denouncing the bootleggers, hijackers, smugglers and sellers of poisoned liquors, they denounce the law, the Federal enforcement officials as incompetent or grafters, the "dry" members of Congress as hypocrites or servile sycophants; the Anti-Saloon League officials as tricksters, fanatics, or wild hair-brained enthusiasts, and the great church bodies which endorse prohibition and demand prohibition enforcement as impractical, misguided idealists. Had these newspapers accepted the law in 1919 in good faith, as the will of the country expressed by regular constitutional methods, and had they given as much ability and space in upholding the law and in denunciation of lawlessness as they have given to fighting the law, their own communities would be far more law-abiding, and would be enjoying the benefits which always have followed the observance of the law. As it is, these papers are largely responsible for whatever lawlessness there is in their cities.

But this aggressive, contemptuous flaunting of the Constitution by these metropolitan dailies, dominated by their thirsty foreign-born constituency, must be answered by a positive demand by all the moral forces of our country for better law observance, and for the strengthening, not the weakening, of the Vostead Act, to make evasions more difficult and law enforcement more effective. If the Prohibition Law is not strictly enforced, it is declared by its enemies to be a failure (and with some degree of truth). If it is enforced, it is denounced as a tyrannical invasion of personal rights abhorrent to free government. But as wherever and whenever the law is stritctly enforced, great benefits have followed, every pulpit, every newspaper which stands for law and order, for clean politics, with continued freedom from saloon domination, for sober men and for happy, prosperous homes; every citizen who loves his country, every parent who loves his children, and every Christian who believes that they "which are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak," should unite in the demand for the observance of the Prohibition Law, and where not observed willingly by some, for its effective enforcement at whatever cost of men and money—even in those cities whose newspapers continually criticise and denounce the officers of the law more than the bootleggers and their patrons, and even in States like Maryland and New York, despite the indifference of Governors Ritchie and Smith to their oath of office to enforce the Constitution of the United States.

As the enemies of the law exultingly proclaim that millions of gallons of industrial and medicinal alcohol are diverted annually for beverage purposes, all manufacturers and handlers of medicinal and industrial alcohol, including physicians and druggists, should operate under strict regulations and close continuous inspection with absolute certainty of revocation of permits upon violations of regulations, so that evasion of the law from these sources may cease.

The manufacture of beer of high percentages, supposedly to be converted into beer of not more than one-half per cent, has resulted in continuous evasions of the law by the brewers, and should be prohibited. Indeed, owing to the apparently chronic ineffaceable lawlessness of most brewers, it may be necessary to prohibit the manufacture of all malt liquors. The law should be further strengthened by requiring all persons possessing stocks of beverage intoxicants of every kind, to make annual reports of the same, subject to inspection by government officials, and if it shall be found necessary to prevent continued evasions and violations, a time limit should be fixed, after which it would be unlawful to possess any intoxicants for beverage purposes, even though purchased prior to 1920.

In short, those provisions of the law which are now clearly recognized as most fruitful of evasions should be so changed as to remedy the evil. The National Prohibition Law is worth too much to the nation, and has cost too many years of strenuous sacrificial effort, for it to be nullified or weakened because of the clamor of people who care more for selfish gratification of appetite than for the "general welfare," and who moreover would themselves be benefited by the strict enforcement of the law in their own cases.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union, now over fifty years old, and the Anti-Saloon League of America, over thirty years old, are the two great interdenominational, national agencies which have led successfully the fight against the liquor traffic in the past, and we confidently depend upon their leadership to-day.

The notorious Mencken, the idol of the sensual, profane and lawless elements of our country, has recently declared that the "blots" on American life are the Baptists, Methodists, Y. M. C. A., and Anti-Saloon League. That bitter unfair "wet" newspaper, the New York World, says that "If the United States wants light wines and beer, the Anti-Saloon League must first be put out of commission. The way to do this is to close the doors and the pulpits of the evangelical churches against representatives of the League, thereby cutting off their moral nad financial support." No greater tribute could be paid to the League than these vicious attacks by these defenders of liquor lawlessness, and the demand by this arch enemy of prohibition, that evangelical pulpits be closed to the League, should open all of them wider than ever before.

It is exceedingly gratifying to all of the friends of the Anti-Saloon League that after combing thoroughly the "private," not "secret" records of the Executive Committee of the League for the past ten years, to find something discreditable to the League, the extracts recently published in the Hearst papers proved that the League officials have been loyal to the trust committed to them, and had in every proper way tried to secure the passage of prohibion legislation, the election or appointment of officials who would effectively enforce the Prohibition Law, and the defeat of every candidate whose record was hostile to prohibition. The League has not done its work in a corner, and while, like every other human organization, it has made mistakes, it has nothing in its record to hide. Its efficiency is the cause of the hatred of such men as Hearst and Mencken, whose enmity is a badge of honor in itself.

EUGENE L. CRAWFORD, Secretary.

FROM THE GRENADA DISTRICT.

We are making some distinct progress within the Grenada District. Four young men have been recommended from this district for admission on trial at the next Conference. Three have been licensed to preach. Three new churches have been built since the last Annual Conference; one at Ashland, where Rev. R. B. Pearson is pastor; one at McAdams, in Attala County, the seat of the County Agricultural High School; and the other is Raper's Chapel, on the Paris circuit. All are nice, well arranged churches and will mean much to our work in these communities. Plans are being laid to build a new house of worship at Pine Flat, about ten miles out from Oxford. J. A. Brody is pastor here. Rev. J. R. Murff is pastor at McAdams, where the other new church is located. Brother Murff has made the house at Sallis look as good as new, being painted inside and out. The church at Vaiden has been greatly improved on the inside, having electric lights now, and at the parsonage also, just across the street. A new parsonage has been projected at First Church, Water Valley, and a new church at Grenada, and a new educational building at Winona, and a new church at Coffeeville are the dreams of the respective congregations. They must be, and they will be, by and by. Our congregation at Oxford will be compelled to make some shift right away to take care of the growing work there. We have eighty freshmen there, and when all the upper class people arrive we will have something like 400 Methodist young people there. We have secured Rev. Jeff Cunningham, of Corinth, as student pastor. He is the son of Rev. E. H. Cunningham, of the Corinth Ditrict.

E. S. LEWIS, P. E.

A VISIT TO THE PIEDMONT SECTION.

By Rev. Carroll Varner.

At the request of Rev. W. Y. Cooley, of the Upper South Carolina Conference, I have just held a meeting at Duncan, S. C., in the famous Piedmont section of that State. It gave me a two-fold pleasure to hold a meeting in this particular section, since my father was born and grew to young manhood in this county, Spartanburg, and it had been my privilege to attend Wofford College some years ago. I was not prepared, however, to expect so great an advancement along material lines as has been made here within the last few years. There is every evidence of prosperity on every hand, despite the fact that the farmers in that section have been hard hit for the past three years. Of course most all of this has been brought about through the rapidly increasing number of cotton mills springing up all along this Piedmont section from the northern part of North Carolina all the way down to Atlanta. Spartanburg County alone has thirty-five of these mills, and new ones contemplated! They have over eleven thousand employees and turn out annually over forty million dollars' worth of manufactured goods! One can travel all day in an auto through this part of those two States and hardly be out of sight of a mill at any time, and much of the time can see several large mills at once. From Charlotte, N. C., on down beyond Greenville, S. C., for a distance of near 150 miles, it is almost one continuous town, so numerous are the cotton mills and so rapidly has the population increased. This is along the line of the Southern Railway, which is double tracked from Atlanta to Washington, and also along the line of the National Highway, over which autos are passing like shuttles from southern to eastern points. In addition to this, there are electric railways traversing much of this territory, while there is a regular network of high-powered lines feeding this entire section with electricity. The cities and towns along these lines are growing rapidly and steadily, and altogether there is an atmosphere of healthful prosperity over it all.

With all this, it is a little surprising to see the farmers of this section still holding on to the one-crop idea; there has not been very much diversification, and cotton still remains their mainstay. The homes and farms, however, give every appearance of being well cared for and bear evidence of much thrift. I have not seen a better system of highways anywhere in our country than is to be seen through here; start out in most any direction you wish and you are sure to find a good road and well kept, and one which can be traveled any time of the year. We have in our own State a much finer farming country, much richer soil and far more diversfication, but we cannot touch them in the matter of roads. Some day Mississippi will awake to the fact that about the most unsatisfactory business she ever got into is the building and trying to maintain gravel roads. Unless a binder of some sort is put on top of them, they will never be of much satisfaction. It was a real pleasure to ride over the roads of upper South Carolina.

The question very naturally arises, will the Piedmont section keep pace with its moral and spiritual development with its rapid material growth I put this question to several, and it is gratifying to know that the church realizes, in part at least, that it has here an increasing responsibility and is endeavoring to meet it. Churches and church schools are very much in evidence throughout this entire section, and the mill owners and operators in many instances are doing about everything they can to forward the work of the church. The living and working conditions of the thousands of operatives have greatly improved within the last several years. I saw one mill village which was a thing of real beauty. In our own church the Upper South Carolina Conference boasts some very strong and able men, and it goes without saying they will not be found sleeping at the switch. Then, too, it is naturally a conservative people, and Modernism and Radicalism will not find here a favorable soil in which to grow.

It was of course a very great pleasure to visit once more my Alma Mater, Wofford College, at Spartanburg, and to look again into the faces of my former tutors. The campus, a very beautiful one indeed, remains about as it was when I was there, but several new buildings have gone up, which change the appearance of things on the whole. Dr. Snyder has been president of Wofford now a quarter of a century, and during that length of time has doubtless done a great work there. He is a great teacher, an exceptionally interesting speaker, and a great college president. From time to time he has been offered the presidency of other institutions, but has elected to remain with Wofford; in this respect he has followed the precedent set by his predecessor, Dr. Carlisle. He is in much demand as a speaker throughout our church and for special occasions at other institutions of learning. But to one who had the pleasure of knowing him, Wofford will be indelibly associated with Dr. James H. Carlisle, for it was he who gave the school its high moral standard and its greatest reputation. For a half century he served as its president, and was connected with the faculty much longer than that. It is given to very few men to make so lasting an impression upon the lives of those with whom they come into contact as did Dr. Carlisle. In his work as a teacher of young men he deserves, I think, to be placed alongside of Arnold of Rugby and Hopkins of Williams. Dr. Charles Foster Smith always referred to him as the most Christ-like man he ever knew. I fear it will be a long, long time ere we shall see his like again.

A FORGOTTEN OLD MAN.

The News is in receipt of a letter from an old, old man; a retired preacher, in which he expresses his appreciation of the News under former managements, but says he is well nigh penniless and cannot afford to pay the pitiful sum of $1.50 a year for the paper, though he greatly enjoys it and will miss it. The present management of the News will not let him miss it, as far as that goes, but that is not the point we care to discuss.

The point is this: there is something wrong with church management when it allows its old and worn out preachers to come to penury and want in their old age. Of course this faithful old preacher and pastor is not forgotten. There are scores, hundreds, mayhap thousands, who love him for the faithful ministrations to them and their loved ones; for his pastoral visits when they were heavily laden with sorrow; for comforting words spoken at the bedside of their loved ones who were passing away; for the good cheer and admonition to their children. They still love him in their hearts and no doubt many of them remember him in their prayers. But he feels that he is forgotten because he is old and feeble and lonesome and poor—and that ought not to be.

The Federal Government pensions its old soldiers and provides homes for them and their widows. The Southern States, without exception, pension their old soldiers and in some instances provide homes for them. The railroads and other large corporations pension their faithful, worn out employees. The National Printers' Union has, out in California, commodious quarters and large and beautiful grounds for the old and sick and needy of their craft. In Florida, near Lakeland, there are hundreds of acres of ground and scores of houses for old mechanics and joiners. But when it comes to caring for old and worn out servants of the Lord of Lords, they are given a bone and a crust of bread and sent into a wilderness of lonesomeness and made to feel that they are "failures," and are "forgotten."

It is bad business management upon the part of the churches that such condition is permitted to exist. These faithful old servants, without whom the gospel of Jesus could not be spread; without whom Christian civilization could never have reached or near reached the pinnacle of world influence it has, should be cared for, and well cared for; not as mendicants, but as reward for faithful and efficient service; service to their pastorates, and service to the world.

They should be the first charge upon the church. The pastor in charge, young and resourceful, can better afford to hustle and make ends meet somehow, than that the enfeebled old, worn-out pastor should suffer. Missionaries, home and foreign, should come after provision has been made for the old preacher fund. New edifices should wait for the money, fewer churches should be built, first service, first provision, first of everything should be given to the faithful ones who through hot broiling suns and winter winds and dark nights, have answered the cry of distress from palace to hovel alike. Whatever collections fall short or fail, the "old preachers" fund should be ample and unfailing.

The churches, all of them, collect plenty of money to do this. There is something wrong in church business management, when they fail; and their failure is a reflection upon the church—not the congregation or the denomination but the church of the Living God.—An editorial in the Williamson County (Tenn.) News.

SPIRITUAL REBIRTH OF METHODISM.

By Rev. J. L. Greenway.

A short time since the bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church met in conference in Warren, Pa. A paper was read by one of the bishops under the head of "The Bishops and Spiritual Rebirth." This paper was endorsed by the Board of Bishops and given for publication. It is their message to the church.

The deliverance was a notable one, and shows the bishops' deep concern about the condition of the church from the standpoint of the spiritual. In view of conditions, the bishops set a most worthy example to the church in that they gave an entire day to deep heart-searching, to unreserved surrender of themselves to the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and for the enduement of the power of God. They expressed the need of real spiritual conviction in the following words:

"The bishops are unanimous in their conviction that a piercing sense of the appalling spiritual need in the church can come only through the convicting power of the Holy Spirit, and not by any attempt to discover some new human mechanism, or to rely upon some cleverly conceived evangelistic method."

The Board of Bishops pledge themselves as not only willing to co-operate, but to lead in an evangelistic movement looking toward this new birth in Methodism. This call and example from the heads of the church should meet with a ready response from preachers and laymen.

This deliverance of the bishops will apply not only to the Methodist Episcopal Church, but to our own, for we have like problems. Is there not a pressing need among us for a spiritual rebirth? We have prayed and waited long for God to come with saving power to redeem Israel from her worldliness. The Lord delays his coming.

There never was a time when there were as many preachers, or better preaching. We have a multitude of well trained men, men who are second to none in public speaking. We have to-day, what the heads of the church have long been asking for, an educated ministry. The man who can pass a creditable examination in the four years' course of study as required by our church cannot rightfully be called uneducated. With all this, the need of the times is not met and the church of Christ is not triumphant as she should be. We need an educated ministry, and may God give us more men with trained minds. But let us never forget that God's method for saving the world is not simply by scholarship. "The world by wisdom knew not God." Logic is ice. Religion is fire. The need is to set the cultured, intellectual preacher on fire of the Holy Spirit.

When we look into the New Testament, we may well be startled by the contrast between its boundless wealth and our poverty of power in connection with preaching. In the first three gospels the word "power" in connection with preaching is used twenty-five times. "His word was with power." When we read of the New Testament preachers, and the irresistible power of the gospel, by which sin was shattered and men saved, we feel that it was something special, which is denied us to-day. That was the thought one time of John Wesley, for he wrote in his Journal about a month before his "heart was strangely warmed": "This I grant, God wrought in the first stages of Christianity; but the times are changed. What reason have I to believe that he works in the same manner now?" God's answer was at the door, and in a short time Wesley was going over to England preaching the gospel with Pentecostal power and saving results. The same sources of power are open to us to-day if we meet conditions and seek until we find.

Some one has defined preaching as persuasion. If we are to persuade men to be reconciled to God, the man in the pulpit must be utterly persuaded of the verity of the gospel or he will fail. There must be no hesitation, no balancing of probabilities: "I am persuaded," said Paul; and therein lay the secret of his wonderful evangel. Until the supreme reality of religious faith commands the intellect and subdues the heart, no matter how learned or eloquent the preacher may be, there is no power of persuasion. In this day of insinuating doubt and perplexity, the preacher must be sure of his gospel.

Closely allied to this need is another, and that is he must know the Author of the gospel he preaches: not simply know about him as he is revealed in the Bible, or as a person who lived nineteen hundred years ago, but a present, living, loving Christ; to be able to say with Paul, "God revealed his Son in me," or to be able to say, "I know him whom I have believed." No man may hope to answer the vital questions of life and destiny until he has a personal acquaintance with the Author of life. No eloquence of tongue, no charm of manner can atone for a lack or loss of a vital inward experience of spiritual reality. Without this the pulpit may be able and useful, instructive and entertaining, but it is bereft of that power which breaks the heart and remakes the life.

In the lives of most soul-winning preachers as well as soul-winning laymen there is usually a golden year, a shining day, sometimes a never-to-be-forgotten hour which gives the key to their success and colors the rest of life. That memorable visit to the temple made Isaiah a preacher. Alone with God in Arabia did much for Paul. Pentecost was the day to which the Apostles looked back. People will not soon forget the golden year in the life of Phillips Brooks when his spirit bloomed and, as it were, the mantle of God fell upon him. Horace Bushnell never forgot the night when he leaped out of bed and with a great joy cried, "I have found it." D. L. Moody told of a wonderful hour as his personal Pentecost. Dr. H. C. Morrison tells of an experience which made him the soul-winner that he is. A study of the great preachers of Methodism reveals the fact of an hour when the spirit of power came on them.

If Methodism is to have a spiritual rebirth, must it not begin with the preachers? Could we do better than follow the example of the bishops and call a day of fasting and soul-searching, and wait upon God? We have been giving our preachers and chief laymen intellectual feasts and ministering largely to the head; why not let our chief shepherds call our ministers to some quiet place and point them to him who has promised all needed power? A Spirit-filled ministry would mean a spiritual rebirth in Methodism.

Laurel, Miss.

GOOD FOR ALL.

(The letter below was sent out by Rev. Robert Selby, presiding elder of the Meridian District, Mississippi Conference, to the officials of his district. It is so to the point that we are taking the liberty of publishing it—wholly without Brother Selby's knowledge—with the hope that it will inspire a larger group than the one to which it was addressed.—Editor.)

My Dear Brother: We are in the midst of the fourth round of quarterly conferences for the current year, 1926-'27. This means that we are very close to the end of the year. It is well for us to give some time to looking over the situation, and see whether or not we have been as faithful to the trust committed to us as we should have been. Suppose you do this?

This has been a strenuous year; and yet, to the conscientious preacher and layman, it has been a happy, and in many respects, a prosperous year. If, under the leadership of the pastor and officials of your charge, you are short of having paid all asssessments up to this time, I am asking that you make a thorough and manly effort to make these payments by the time your Conference meets. This will be easily done if you can secure the co-operation of those upon whom the Lord has placed this responsibility along with yourself. If we are fellow-laborers together with God; if we are God's husbandry, then we will do our best to meet every claim upon our time and purse.

I am hoping that it is not a burden to you to do your part in the work of our church. If it is, what shall I say to aid you in appreciating your obligation? May I say that you can afford to lean more heavily upon his wisdom and might? It will help you to better see the way he is leading. Do not forget that your task may be properly done only by his help and direction. If he is your helper, you need not fear the outcome. His glory will be manifest.

Allow me to say that I shall not be satisfied until your charge has done its best in every respect. It can do what is expected of it in the matter of paying the assessments. This is the least that you should demand of yourselves. Do not think for a moment of sending your pastor to Conference without a clean sheet. To do so, will disclose a willingness on your part to do less than your best. As a church, we are in business for our King and we cannot afford to be indifferent to it.

I am expecting you to be present at your fourth quarterly conference, to be held at place and time as indicated.

Note the special questions to be answered at the fourth quarterly conference. Please have the answers in proper form. Let the stewards have their reports in hand. Let the trustees have their reports in agreement with the requirements of our Church Discipline. God greatly bless you in all things.

Yours affectionately,

ROBT. SELBY, P. E.

FINDINGS OF CONFERENCE ON EVANGELISM, HELD AT LAKE JUNALUSKA, N. C., AUGUST 21-26, 1927.

Quickened by the glorious record of Methodism's evangelistic achievements in other days, and impelled by a sense of present-day needs, we have met at Lake Junaluska, N. C., in response to the invitation of the general committee on evangelism, to study how to best promote a revival spirit throughout our church. After six days of prayer and conference on this important subject, we beg to submit the following as our findings:

First. We believe the time opportune for another great awakening. The most glorious and fruitful periods of our history have been when the revival fires burned brightest upon our altars. The numerical and spiritual decline in church membership, the rising tides of unbelief and worldliness are serious enough to furnish proof that there is a desperate need of a great revival throughout our church and nation.

Methodism has found no substitute for the evangelistic passion. Whenever our concern for the lost about us has waned, our ministry has grown formal, our church cold and the world indifferent. A passionless ministry can never arouse a cold church, and a church lacking in genuine compassion for the sinner can never witness convincingly to an unsaved world.

We believe our greatest need to be a revival of praying, preaching, and personal testimony with the intent of reaching and winning the unsaved to a living faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. We believe such a revival will produce holy living, consecrated giving, and a victorious church.

We hail with delight the many encouraging evidences that such a revival draws near. Our pastors are giving themselves and calling their people to a faithful obedience to the great Commission laid on us by our Risen Lord when he said, "Go ye and disciple all nations...."

Our general evangelists have been abundant in labors, and under their ministry multiplied thousands have been won to Christ. Our Sunday School Board is setting the pace for all the denominations in the matter of Sunday School evangelism. Our Epworth League is already daring to talk of the coming revival. Our Board of Education is busy with an evangelistic program among the students of our colleges and universities; the women of the Woman's Missionary Societies are organizing for a worthy share in this forward movement. The General Board of Missions has for its objective a revival on every mission field, while the laymen are binding themselves together as never before for the salvation of their fellows. Thus it is seen that the call of our last General Conference to make this a quadrennium of revival power has not gone unheeded. The tents have been struck, and Methodism is on the march.

Second. We most heartily commend the general committee on evangelism and its secretary, Dr. J. W. Perry, for its efforts to promote a church-wide revival. We are pleased to note that this committee contemplates holding during next year four group conferences on evangelism, two east of the Mississippi and two west of the Mississippi, which have for their aim the bringing together of bishops, presiding elders, pastors, evangelists, and laymen to take counsel together on how best to challenge the whole church with the task. We most enthusiastically commend the idea and pledge co-operation.

Third. We would call the attention of all our people to the fact that the next three years mark the nineteen-hundredth anniversary of the public ministry of our Lord Jesus Christ, and we would urge them to give themselves with renewed consecration to the study of his life and to whole-hearted determination to bring the knowledge of our Lord and his saving grace to the multitudes that know him not. We would seize this as an opportune time to make these years particularly fruitful in the spiritual life of all our churches and in their ministry to the complex and confused life of the world. We recommend that all our people read the gospels of Matthew and John, a chapter each day during the months of January and February, and that as they read, to pray for a spirit of true repentance and the witness of the Spirit in the hearts of all Christians.

We recognize the power and wide-spread influence of our church organs and of the secular press. We respectfully ask them to give wide-spread publicity to these plans, that our people may be united in this crusade for a deepened spirituality and a mighty offensive against sin—man's greatest foe.

In conclusion, we call our people everywhere to prayer. The thing of supreme importance is not mechanics, but dynamics. All the mechanics will avail nothing apart from divine power on high. "It is not by might nor by power, but by spirit, saith the Lord."

TO THE AUXILIARY "LEADERS OF SPIRITUAL CULTIVATION," OF THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Dear Sisters: I have been afraid that the choice of a Conference Leader may have been a mistake, since I have been forced to be out of the State so much this summer. Our work has been delayed no doubt, but fortunately it is never too late to "grow in grace and a knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ," or to help some one else to the Light. If you feel you are lagging, take courage, and press on. This should be one of the greatest movements of the church, and surely there was never a time of more need of the prayer life in the individual, with a deeper consecration.

I have tried to get the Jubilee literature to every president of an auxiliary, that she might pass it on to the leader she has selected. In some cases, I have failed on account of not having right addresses, for several letters have been returned from the Dead Letter office to me. The plan of procedure is in the leaflets sent out, and covenant cards may be had from Mrs. B. W. Lipscomb, Nashville, Tenn., who has charge of this work.

Get a copy of "The Voice" each month and have all matter on this subject read at your monthly meetings. Read your Bible daily and "pray without ceasing," and spiritual growth will set in, and as it does you will want to tell others. If the women are faithful in this undertaking, the revival fires will surely burn and many souls be brought to the kingdom.

This opportunity brings to you a responsibility. If any have failed to receive leaflets, "Spiritual Cultivation for the Jubilee Celebration," containing the objective of the Jubilee, please write me, and I will be glad to send at once. Always give your address very plainly.

With a prayer for your uplift in this work, I am,

MRS. S. L. POPE,
Conference Leader of Spiritual Cultivation, North Mississippi Conference.

"MISSISSIPPI HEADQUARTERS, ETC."

By Rev. W. H. Saunders.

In last week's Advocate there came an article from one of the bright young men of the Mississippi Conference referring to this matter, and I wish to refer to the subject again and say that a joint board, composed of the chairmen of all the boards, should constitute a board to have charge and direct the affairs of this establishment for both Conferences.

Now, let me say that if we are to stand back on the matter of the cost of the thing, we will never get anywhere. Our Baptist brethren are doing it, and that is enough to say we can, if we realize the importance of it, and want to.

More than thirty-five years ago, the first time I ever spent any time in the city of Jackson, I walked into an establishment on Capitol Street. One of the Mississippi Conference preachers was in there, and it was headquarters of our church.

Now let me hear from you, brethren, and let us plan to have one during the next year at furthereest.

The announcement in this week's Advocate of the dates of Bishop Candler in the interest of the school to be considered for the Seashore Camp Grounds means much for the church in these parts, and I believe our people will rally to this enterprise. If this project is realized, and it will be, I am taking the liberty to suggest that the young people, the Sunday schools and Leagues of the interested Conferences begin as soon as possible to plan for one building, to be used all the year round for the school, but especially, as an assembly hall, during the summer, when this shall be a place of instruction, recreation and training for many of our young folks.

Now, my brethren, both lay and clerical, let us look for just a moment at ourselves. The papers announce the beginning of a hundred thousand-dollar building on the campus at Blue Mountain, by our Baptist folks. Yesterday morning I was driving around in the eastern part of the city of Jackson. The Presbyterians are working both a day and night force to rebuild Belhaven, recently burned.

They provide the means to do this work. Now we have the means in the hands of the Methodists in the States interested, or that should be interested, and we must see and feel this need and supply it. We need this school.

ANNUAL REPORT OF CENTRAL AND WESTERN DISTRICT, BELGIAN MISSION, 1926-27.

Made at the Annual Mission Meeting in Brussels, June 28.

By W. G. Thonger, Superintendent.

(Note:—Dr. Thonger, superintendent of this district, is supported as a special on the mission field by the First Methodist Church and Sunday school of Shreveport, La., Rev. Robert S. Goodrich, pastor.)

The Central and Western District of the Belgian Mission was formed at our last mission in September, 1926, by the union of the two districts of Brussels and Ghent, with the exception of one charge which was attached to the Northern District.

The following figures will give an idea of the progress made during the last ten and one-half months:

	Sept. 1, 1926.
Charges	11
Places of worship	14
Preachers in charge	10
Exhorters	..
Members	446
Contributions	38,344.75 francs
	June 15, 1927.
Charges	11
Places of worship	18
Preachers in charge	9
Exhorters	12
Members	590
Contributions	40,273.72 francs

The increase in places of worship has been made not only without increase in number of preachers, but in spite of a decrease in this number. The increase in membership would have been considerably higher if we had not made a serious revision of our rolls and in the acceptance of new members manifested a prudence which to some people might have seemed extreme.

We rejoice in the progress which is being made in the way of financial contributions. Every one of the churches of the district has sent in on time and paid in full its assessments. Several churches have actually sent more than asked for. They are: St. Gilles, Dunkerque, Comines, and Ypres.

The church at Liege has started a building fund, looking toward the erection of a beautiful church building, which we hope to have before very long in that great city.

If one considers that our Conference year has been only ten and a half months while the year before was of fourteen months, and that during the past winter Belgium went through the most serious economic crisis and period of unemployment probably in its whole history, one can certainly rejoice in the financial report of this district.

THE WORK OF THE GENERAL EVANGELISTS.

The reports of our General Evangelists for the first quarter of the present year show 121 meetings in which they assisted, with 9941 professions of faith, 3666 accessions to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, from these meetings, and 1959 uniting with churches of other denominations. The figures for the second quarter show 114 meetings held, 7861 professions of faith with 3898 accessions to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and 857 to other churches. The total for the first six months of the year are 235 meetings held, 17,802 professions of faith, 7564 accessions to our church and 2816 to other churches. The reports also show financial receipts, which are not nearly so large as many suppose; very few have received more than the pastors of our ordinary city and town churches and none above the largest salaries paid to pastors. Thirty-three have reported. Some have been hindered by sickness, a few have been doing special work; but most or nearly all have made full use of their time in the work to which the church has appointed them. The reports show fine work done.

JACKSON, MISS., TO BE HOST TO MISSIONARY COUNCIL.

By Dr. Elmer T. Clark.

Approximately 100 leaders in Southern Methodist missionary work, including all the bishops of the church and representative missionary leaders from each of the thirty-eight Annual Conferences in the United States, will gather at Jackson, Miss., Dec. 13, 14, to attend the second annual session of the General Missionary Council of the church. The first Council meeting was held in Louisville, Ky., in December, 1926.

The meeting at Jackson will be the greatest general missionary gathering of the entire year, and decisions made here will affect missionary interests not only in the United States, but in the eleven foreign fields in which the denomination maintains mission work.

The General Missionary Council was created by action of the General Conference of the church in 1926. The special work of the Council is to promote the missionary work of the church and its extension throughout the connection. Dr. W. G. Cram, General Secretary of the Board of Missions, is chairman of the Council, and Dr. F. S. Love, of Elizabeth City, N. C., is secretary.

"World Evangelization" has been selected as the general theme of the Council meeting, and discussions will be led by outstanding leaders in missionary work throughout the country. Interest will center in plans for the promotion of the world evangelistic campaign in the spring of 1928 that is being sponsored by the Board of Missions.

Dr. Cram, as General Secretary of the Board of Missions, has recently issued a call for an international evangelistic advance in 1928, emphasizing the fact that the time has come for widely extending the borders of the church. "Especially in our foreign fields should we plan for definite and sustained efforts at preaching the Word to the hungry multitudes," says the call. "The spiritually hungry masses are waiting on us everywhere."

During the approaching Council meeting plans will be laid for the church-wide revival that is to sweep throughout the entire territory of the church. The Home Department of the Mission Board will have charge of the evangelistic work in the home field, and the Foreign Department of carrying out the evangelistic program throughout Mexico, Cuba, Brazil, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Poland, White Russia, China, Japan, Korea, and Africa. Missionary leaders declare that the difficulties that confront the church to-day can be overcome only by an outpouring of the evangelistic fire.

Rev. J. L. Decell, presiding elder of the Jackson District; Rev. T. M. Brownlee, pastor of Capitol Street Church; Rev. H. S. Spragins, of Galloway Memorial; Rev. W. A. Terry, of Grace Church, and Rev. T. O. Prewitt, of Millsaps Memorial, all of Jackson, are co-operating with local Methodists in plans for the meeting.

Official members of the Council are: the secretaries and treasurers of the General Board of Missions, the members of the Departmental Committee on Education and Promotion, the chairmen of Annual Conference Mission Boards, and the Conference missionary secretaries.

Mission Board chairmen and secreatries from Mississippi who will be present are: Mississippi Conference—Rev. C. C. Evans, Natchez, and Mr. W. D. Hawkins, Meridian; North Mississippi Conference—Rev. R. A. Tucker, Columbus, and Rev. E. N. Broyles, West Point.

Louisiana will be represented by Rev. J. G. Snelling, of New Orleans, who is chairman of the Mission Board and missionary secretary for the Louisiana Conference.

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

As one lives through the passing years, and endeavors in some measure to keep abreast with currents of thought we call progress, nothing is more true than that old things have passed away, and many if not all things become new. Fifty years ago science meant the study and knowledge of the deep, hidden, mysterious things of nature. We then deemed science "knowledge, classified and made available in work or life, or the search for truth; comprehension, profound or philosophical knowledge." Chemistry, Physics, Astronomy, Medicine, Psychology—things about which the ordinary man knew little then—were called science. There has been a change of viewpoint as well as definition of the term. Everything in human learning, from a kindergarten to the university; all human activities, from sewing a seam to tunneling a mountain, from shoeing a horse to raising a skyscraper, are dignified by the name of science.

The old distinction between an art and a science seems to have been lost, or so confused in the popular estimate that the one is merged in the other. Now this is not written as a criticism; nor am I sitting in the seat of a censor. I am only marking a change. Now since all human activity, labor, nature study of all kinds, inventions, discoveries, and the application of those to human use, surely religion comes in somewhere in the wide, wide realm of science. So instead of there being a conflict between religion and science, religion is really and properly the science of the spirit and spiritual things. To know about God and human souls, their nature, their destiny, what they are and what they may be as the future unfolds itself, is undoubtedly the greatest of all the sciences. More people are concerned and vitally interested in this than in the discovery of a new planetary system or in chasing moonbeams over misty oceans. "Be still and know that I am God," means infinitely more to me than all that Darwin has written or Edison invented. If I am a votary to any department of science, I shall choose the greatest as my chief delight and devoted study. That does not mean I am not interested in these other things, but that I am a student matriculated in the great old world's university, and I choose the science of spiritual things as my special. If you agree with me, join me in this great school, for I like good company.

The glory of life lies in its accomplishments, not in merely living. Civilization is the accretion of the thoughts and deeds of men who have passed on before this generation, but whose influence is projected over subsequent ages. Sometimes in life, sometimes even in dying, a heroic deed or revelation of surpassing love and mercy flashes like an electric shock over the trails of time and electrifies the world. Its power for good ceaseth not forever. Si Stephanus non orare, Paulus non praecare, wrote the old Latin father. Stephen's setting star was doubtless a harbinger of a new day in Paul's life. Calvary wins its way into the hearts of men, by its undaunted courage, facing unblemished the powers of hell and death, as well as by the unparalleled revelation of love and mercy. When the crusader went forth to win the sepulchre of his risen Lord from the infidel, no doubt but that he regarded the Christ as the knightliest among the knights, the supreme expression of glory, honor, courage, and valor. Passive virtues count for little, they are too static; the things that move the world must be alive, must have moving power per se. The seeming useless sacrifice of life, and the daring courage shown by the argonauts of the air, point a way for winning the greater kingdom of heaven in the earth. Counting all things lost for the excellency of Christ is the old way, but the sure way of espousing him. Richard of the lion heart, Tancred and Godfrey are but historic figures, belonging to an age of romance; yet their deeds still stir the hearts of men, for there is a responsive chord therein. True, brave, loyal knights of the cross are still in demand.

THE FIRST LAMBUTH MEMORIAL DAY SERVICE.

On August 30, 1927, the presiding elder, with pastors and members of several charges over the Jackson District, came together at Pearl River Church, on the Madison charge, the home church of the Lambuths, for the purpose of organizing the First Lambuth Memorial Day. It was with difficulty that the church was reached, because of the quarter of a mile of dirt road, which had been made almost impassable by the hard rains; but Ford cars with chains soon made it possible for all to get together in the church, where the following well arranged program was rendered.:

10:30—Song and prayer service, Rev. J. L. Decell.

10:45—Statement of the purpose of Lambuth Memorial Day.

11:00—Sermon, Rev. W. G. Cram, D.D., Missionary Secretary.

12:30—Luncheon.

2 p.m.—Devotional, J. L. Decell. Prayer, E. M. Allen.

The afternoon service consisted of a splendid address by Rev. H. G. Hawkins; "Our General Work and Why Pay the Assessments," J. L. Neil; "Our Conference Work and Why Pay the Assessments," L. L. Roberts.

At 3:15 Rev. J. L. Decell proceeded to organize the Lambuth Memorial Association. J. L. Neill was elected temporary secretary. The pastors of the Canton, Madison and Fannin charges, with a lay delegate from each of these to be elected at the fourth quarterly conferences, were named an executive committee, with the presiding elder of the Jackson District as chairman, the pastor of Madison charge as secretary. Seventy-five members were enrolled at this first meeting.

It was suggested that as the Jackson District had no camp ground, the ten acres of land belonging to this church be made into a park on which a nice tabernacle be erected, and cottage space be arranged for all of those who would like to build. After some discussion, the proposition was referred to the executive committee for them to decide, also the date for this annual Memorial Day.

The meeting then adjourned with the benediction by W. A. Terry.

The body of women and men that made up the congregation on this the first Lambuth Memorial Day, were well repaid for the effort made to attend. The following former missionaries were present: Rev. H. G. Hawkins, Rev. and Mrs. J. L. Neil and daughter Nellie, Mrs. Frank Star Williams, Rev. Gayle Beanland and wife of the Southern Presbyterian Church, Rev. Mr. Kim, a native Korean who is attending Millsaps College and expects to return as a minister to his people.

Dr. Cram, our Missionary Secretary, who gave a number of years to the missionary work and who was well acquainted with Bishop Lambuth, was a distinguished visitor. To say Dr. Cram's message was a great inspiration to those present that morning would not be misrepresenting the facts. He had somewhat to say about the small church, and how that particular church had touched the world, paying a beautiful tribute to the Lambuth family.

The Home Circle

MY ROVER.

When my upper lip is trembly,
And a lump gets in my throat,
And the fellows that I'm scared of
Have tried to "get my goat;"
And I'm feeling kind of lonesome
And I'm losing all my sand,
It's great to have my Rover
Come up and lick my hand.

For Rover is my buddie,
And I'm happy as can be
For I know there's simply nothing
That he wouldn't do for me;
For he loves me, and I know it,
And though other friends may fail
This world looks good, I tell you,
When Rover wags his tail.

You couldn't keep discouraged;
You couldn't long be blue
If you have a friend like Rover,
And know he's loving you;
For he rushes out to meet me;
When I'm coming through the yard;
He wags himself all over
'Cause he's loving me so hard.

JIMMIES'S BIRTHDAY BROTHER.

By Alice Wetherell

"Hello! H've you got a mother?"

Just behind a big iron fence rail, huddled in the snow beside a snowy bush, Jim caught sight of a tiny lad of five years or so, with big blue baby eyes.

"'Course I have," said Jim proudly. "Why, haven't you?"

"Nope," said the owner of the red head, "but I wish'd I had, cause to-day's my birthday." Then the blue eyes looked as if they were going to cry.

"That's queer," said Jim, "for to-morrow's mine. Say, I'm late for school already. Can you be here after four?"

"We're playing hide and seek. They've lost me. P'raps I can get lost then, too."

That was the first time Jim had ever spoken to any boy from that big building called an orphanage. He always thought that orphans were a little different from other little boys. They had their hair cut shorter. They walked in rows. And sometimes they were all dressed in little suits so much alike that you could hardly tell one from another. But this little fellow wasn't different at all, except that he hadn't any mother.

That afternoon when Jim and Sammy met again, they soon became fast friends.

"You look so like our Buddy who died last winter," Jim told him after they had talked awhile over the iron fence. "I think my mother'd like to see you."

So it was that Jimmie coaxed his mother to put his birthday dinner one day early, so that he and Sammy could celebrate together.

Almost as soon as Sammy had his big coat off he was gathered up in Jim's mother's arms. Jim noticed that she, too, noticed how much the little fellow looked like the child that she had lost.

"Tell me about your mother, dear," she said, as soon as she had him on her lap, sitting beside the big wood fire.

"It's awful when a fella's going to bed. The day time isn't bad," said little Sammy, "but at night I miss my mommy something awful."

"But there are lots and lots of other little boys to keep you company," Jim heard his mother say to try to cheer the little fellow.

"Even the biggest boys of all say they wish they had their mothers back to tuck them in at night." And a little tear rolled down the pink chubby cheek.

"You precious darling," said Jim's mother, hugging the wee boy close. Then with a little start she said:

"This isn't getting dinner. Jimmie, dear, you may light the big blue candles, and Sammy here may light the tiny ones that come later on the cake."

As they sat down to eat, those big blue baby eyes settled themselves on two blue candles, and wouldn't look away. Sammy clapped his little hands and cried with delight:

"See the p'etty blue sticks all burning on the top."

Blue had been the color little Buddy loved, and Jim saw his mother watching Sam as if she wanted to hug him again. Then, when it came his turn to light the "baby sticks," little Sam was so excited that Jimmie had to hold his hand to make the match go straight.

But after dinner was the best of all. Jimmie's mother brought down Buddy's toys. Then, without a word, daddy and Sammy were on their knees building a fairy castle out of blocks. Mother looked on with such a happy face as Jimmie had not seen since Buddy had gone away.

When the telephone rang a little later Jim's mother jumped up quickly.

"Time for Sammy to go home," she said, on coming back.

"Nonsense," said daddy, "we've only just begun to play."

"This my home," said Sammy, with a little mischief in his eye.

"I shouldn't wonder if it is," said Jimmie's mother, as she pushed Sam's quite unwilling arms into his woolly coat.

It wasn't till the next day Jimmie understood what mummy meant. In the evening the doorbell gave a sudden clang.

"You'd better go, Jim," said his mother.

Jim opened the door with a sweep. As he did so something tiny ran and hid itself behind the tall dark lady who was standing on the step.

"I brought you a birthday present, Jim," the tall, dark stranger said.

Before Jim knew what had happened, wee Sam had rushed from behind the lady with a "whoop" and was tangled up already in Jim's legs.

As Jim looked about quite dazed, his mother came out, too.

"A birthday brother, Jimmie. Daddy and I have settled it all with the matron. I think we wanted Sam as much as you as soon as we had seen him once."

And when the boys at school were curious, and asked Jim who Sammy was and where they got him, Jim would always laugh and say, "Why, he's my birthday brother." More than that they never learned.—Selected.

MARIAN'S DISHWASHING.

"How does it happen, Marian," asked Mrs. Tucker, coming into the kitchen very early one afternoon and finding her daughter already washing the dish-cloth, "that you always finish the dishes at least ten minutes earlier than Maude?"

"Oh, I don't know," replied Marian with a sunny smile, "unless it is because I am happier over the work than Maude is."

"I don't see how she ever manages to do it," put in Maude, who had come languidly into the kitchen while her mother and sister were talking. "I should think it would take longer for her to do them, for she spends most of her time looking out of the window."

Then, with a sudden thought, she added: "I bet her dishes aren't washed and wiped as clean as mine are!"

"But they are, Maude," asserted Mrs. Tucker emphatically. "In fact, I have had it in mind to speak to you for several days about the slip-shod manner in which you have lately been doing your kitchen work. Only yesterday I had to wash three plates before supper, for when I took them down from the closet I found them rough and almost sticky where you had improperly dried them."

"Perhaps, mother," suggested Marian quietly, "Maude has found the reason. Perhaps it is because I look out while doing my work, and she looks in. The sink and kitchen in general are not very conducive to happy thoughts right after dinner, when soiled dishes and kettles and pans are everywhere in evidence. If I allowed myself to just look at them as I worked and be conscious only of the kitchen clutter, I should hate doing dishes, and I know I'd drag out the time it took me to do them and slight them and—and everything."

"Huh!" grunted Maude. "I'd like to know how one can help but look at the mess and hate the dirty old work."

"Why, it's the easiest thing," laughed Marian. "There's a window right over the sink and I look out of it. It's always clean and orderly up in the air!"

Maude laughed derisively.

"It must be fun to do dishes with your head stuck up in the air. What do you watch, the little clouds go by?"

"Why, yes, sometimes," admitted Marian. "Mother, you don't think me silly, do you?"

"Silly, child? Why, no indeed. I'd like to hear more about what you see that makes you such a cheerful, efficient worker."

"Oh, I see lots of things, mother. I've actually grown to look forward to my day at the dishes because I am so interested in watching that pair of flickers feeding their young in that partly dead tree in the yard. I feel as well acquainted with that flicker family as I do with any of my chums at school.

"There's always something interesting to watch. In summer it's the birds nesting; in the fall, the leaves changing from day to day and fluttering down till the limbs of the trees are bare. Sometimes in winter there are little birds hopping cheerily around. Last winter I spent days watching a great grey owl—a day hunting owl—flying low over the pasture seeking for mice and rabbits. I never saw it swoop to the ground, and I often wondered when it ever did find anything to eat. It always came to the pasture right after dinner, and I used to count the times it returned to its resting place, or perhaps it was its lookout, on a certain fence post, and try to reduce my minutes at the dishpan by a certain number of those rests. In the spring it was always interesting to watch the progress the swelling buds and the baby leaves on the trees had made and look for new bird arrivals from the Southland. Even though there is nothing in particular to watch, there are always the blue sky, greyed with storm clouds, the passing of the wind or the pattering of raindrops or gentle falling of snow.

"Of course, my mind has to be on the work I am doing, but my eyes are not needed in the sink all the time. By letting them rest on pretty orderly things—the works of God, unharmed by man—my fingers work fast, and the work that might be drudgery becomes just a pleasure."

Marian had completed her work and set the kitchen to rights. Her mother had taken up her kitchen sewing basket while she talked and was sitting by the low window darning stockings. Maude, not finding the conversation to her liking, had withdrawn.

Mrs. Taylor watched her daughter moving so happily about the room. Finally she spoke:

"Marian," she said, "you have found one of the greatest truths in life there is—that if we will look upward and outward, we'll always find something to make us happy. It is the people who continually look inward and downward who find life dreary and all work drudgery. If you can take that attitude, that habit of looking up and out, into life with you, you will not only make yourself happy, but brighten the days for all those about you."

Marian stopped to put her arms about her mother's neck and kiss her soft, slightly grey hair.

"I'll try, mother," she said. "One thing is certain, I shall never forget this lesson I have learned over the dishpan."—Margaret A Bartlett, in Canadian Baptist.

MEETING OF THE PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

The Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate will meet in regular annual session at the Advocate office, 512 Camp Street, New Orleans, La., Thursday, Oct. 13, at 10 o'clock a. m. A full meeting of the Committee is desired.

W. WINANS DRAKE, Chairman.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

According to the "Big Brother," a new parsonage is in prospect at Greenville, Miss.

Rev. E. R. Smoot, general evangelist, of the North Mississippi Conerence, is engaged in a meeting at Poteau, Okla.

Rev. J. O. Hanes, general evangelist, has recorded twelve revival sermons on Paramount records. These records will soon be on sale.

Mrs. J. B. McFarland, Aberdeen, Miss., in renewing her subscription to the Advocate, says: "I feel that it is an old friend, I have been a subscriber so long."

At the recent session of the Missouri Conference, Dr. M. N. Waldrip was transferred from the Southwest Missouri Conference and appointed pastor of Broadway, Columbia.

Mansfield College, Mansfield, La., has had a good opening and work is progressing nicely. Grenada College and Whitworth College also report good openings for the new session.

Dr. F. N. Parker, dean of the Candler School of Theology, Emory University, spent last Sunday in New Orleans, preaching at Carrollton Avenue Methodist Church in the morning to a large congregation.

Brother R. E. Wilburn, Lexington, Miss., in renewing his subscription to the Advocate, states that he has been a subscriber to the paper since 1883—forty-four years—and he expects to take it to the end.

Mrs. (Rev.) M. A. Bell, of Belzoni, Miss., in renewing her subscription to the Advocate, writes: "I am a long-time subscriber to the Advocate. I have enjoyed reading it, and value it as an old and true friend."

Mrs. R. S. Westbrook, Prairie, Miss., writes: "Find enclosed check for $2, renewal for the New Orleans Christian Advocate, which has been taken and read for twenty-five years. I find it a very helpful and instructive companion."

The Business Office of the Advocate would like to have the address of Mrs. H. O. Zeigler. A check on a bank at Lexington, Miss., was recently received from her, but our files do not show her name as a resident of that city.

Rev. S. N. Young, our pastor at Montrose, Miss., paid the Advocate office an appreciated call on Friday of last week. He gave a good account of the work under his care.

The September number of the Sunday School Executive has a full write-up of the Sunday school of the First Methodist Church, Memphis, Tenn., of which Mr. John R. Pepper has been superintendent for nearly forty-seven years. The article is illustrated with many pictures.

Rev. Robert A. Cross, Jr., pastor of the Washington circuit, Louisiana Conference, has been released from his work that he may resume his studies in the Candler School of Theology, Emory University. Brother Cross paid the Advocate office an appreciated call one day last week.

Rev. J. W. Dorman will preach the sermon before the Historical Society of the North Mississisippi Conference, at Clarksdale, Miss., on the night of Nov. 1. Brother Dorman has been a Methodist preacher for fifty-eight years. He is now retired and makes his home at Water Valley, Miss.

The many friends of Rev. P. A. Sowell, a superannuate member of the Tennessee Conference, whose home is at Lawrenceburg, Tenn., but who has spent several summers on the Seashore Camp Ground, will be sorry to learn that he is in a very weakened condition as the result of an attack of influenza.

The Broad Street Methodist Sunday school, Lake Charles, La., has recently organized an Intermediate-Senior Department, with Mrs. R. H. Wynn as superintendent. In connection with her birthday and in appreciation of her services, Mr. A. M. Mayo, superintendent of the Sunday school, presented Mrs. Wynn with a beautiful box of candy.

Rev. H. Bradford, Motor Route C, Dallas, Tex., sends greetings to his friends in Louisiana and Mississippi. He was at one time a member of the Mississippi Conference, transferring later to the Texas Conference. There he entered the local ranks and took up temperance work. Brother Broadfoot would like to have information as to the whereabouts of any of the members of the family of the late Rev. D. P. Bradford or of T. C. Bradford.

Rev. Claude P. Jones, Mississippi Conference evangelist, writes: "Due to change in some dates, I have the month of October open and can give it, or any part of it, to any of the brethren desiring my services for revival campaigns during that month. I can come with or without a singer. Write or wire me at 103 Fourth Avenue, Hattiesburg, Miss." Brother Jones was with Rev. C. H. Strait in a fine meeting at Decatur, Miss., at the time he wrote.

The many friends in Mississippi of Miss Louise Preston, who was so active in Epworth League work, will be interested to know that she has been appointed Life Service Superintendent for the Arizona Conference Leagues, though they will be sorry to know that she has to conduct all her work by correspondence, being still confined to bed by the illness that necessitated her removal to Tucson. Miss Preston is a wonderfully consecrated and efficient Christian worker.

General Evangelist Mark Terrell has just closed a very successful revival at Benton, La., where Rev. A. M. Wynne is pastor, which created a community-wide interest, resulting in a very decided increase in strength to the church. Dr. Terrell has an open date beginning Sept. 25, due to the postponement of a meeting in Arkansas. He may be reached at Fayetteville, Ark., where he is making his headquarters, until December. This was the second meeting that Dr. Terrell has held for Brother Wynne.

Dr. S. H. C. Burgin, pastor of Trinity Methodist Church, Miami, Fla., has received more than six hundred members into the church during the first year of his pastorate. Recently the congregation celebrated, all in one, the first anniversary of Dr. Burgin's pastorate, his birthday, his thirtieth year in the ministry, and Mrs. Burgin's birthday. The exact anniversary of all these events did not fall on the same day, but they came very close together. The congregation presented Dr. and Mrs. Burgin with a modern radio set with a silver plate, appropriately engraved, attached.

Announcement has been made of the marriage of Miss Jennie Thomson, of New Orleans, to Rev. W. B. Van Valkenburgh, pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, Texas City, Tex., on Wednesday evening, Sept. 21. Miss Thomson is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Thomson, and has been an active member of the Louisiana Avenue Methodist Church, this city. Brother Thomson for many years was prominent in the work of our church, having been a lay delegate to four General Conferences. Brother Van Valkenburgh has many friends in Louisiana. The Advocate extends all good wishes to this fine Christian couple.

BOARD OF EDUCATION, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The members of the Board of Education of the North Mississippi Conference are called to meet in the Library of Grenada College, Grenada, Miss., on Tuesday, Oct. 4, at 10 a. m., for a pre-Conference session of the Board. Members of the Board will kindly meet promptly at 10 o'clock, since we want to finish our business that day.

J. TILLERY LEWIS,
President Board of Education.

THE DUAL SPECIAL IN LOUISIANA.

Dear Brother Carley: Please let me pass on to our brethren the good news they are making for our part in the Dual Special. I give here a copy of the last letter from the treasurer:

"Dear Brother Mayo: I am enclosing receipt for the fine check that came to hand this morning on Dual Special receipts for August. You are keeping up most excellently with your contract, and it is a constant source of pleasant surprise to me the way the Louisiana Conference keeps up her end of the work in view of the handicaps against which she is constantly working. I am sure the Lord will continue to bless such efforts as you and your fellow-workers are making.

"Yours sincerely,

"A. L. DIETRICH."

Let me again urge the treasurers of the local Sunday schools to get their funds to me before the 11th of the month following the offering. I remit to Nashville on the 10th. Over $80 came in the 12th and 13th of this month that lies over until next month.

Thanking you for this space, I am,

Yours sincerely,

A. M. MAYO.

DECLARATION BY THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

In view of the fact that we are approaching the season when the several political parties will convene in the respective national conventions for the purpose of nominating candidates for the offices of President and Vice President and of writing their platforms, the board of directors of the Anti-Saloon League of America, assembled from all parts of the country, having taken under consideration at its session held at Winona Lake, Ind., Aug. 15 and 16, the question of its responsibility and duty in determining what course the Anti-Saloon League of America should take under the circumstances, sets forth the following declaration:

1. The American people have settled the liquor question in the most emphatic, thoroughgoing and permanent way open to them, namely, by placing in the Federal Constitution with the largest majority ever given a Federal constitution amendment, an amendment prohibiting the manufacture, sale, transportation, importation and exportation of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes.

Congress has interpreted the will of the people as thus expressed by passing an act to make effective this amendment and by providing for its enforcement.

The Supreme Court of the United States has passed favorably upon the constitutionality of the several steps taken by the people and by Congress.

2. We must assume that no political party which stands for the American form of constitutional government by law will bid for the votes of the American people on any other basis than that of respect for and loyalty to the laws of the land, both constitutional and statutory. We shall take it to be the policy of all parties if and when placed in power to stand for the enforcement of the prohibition laws as of other laws.

3. It would be inconsistent in any party which either implicitly or explicitly places itself before the public as standing for law and order to put in nomination for the chief law enforcement officer of the Nation, namely, the President of the United States, a man who cannot be relied upon to keep his oath of office to uphold the Constitution of the United States and to enforce its laws.

4. In view of the organized effort which is being made to nullify the Constitution, we assume that no party will put in nomination for the office of President or Vice President one whose attitude on this question is known to be doubtful or antagonistic.

5. It goes without saying that the Anti-Saloon League of America will do all in its power to defeat at the polls any candidate of any party who is opposed to the broad American principles announced herein.

ON MAKING APPOINTMENTS.

Some Problems Which Keep a Bishop's Life from Becoming a "Saint's Everlasting Rest."

By Bishop Ernest G. Richardson.

The making of appointments is a very much more difficult matter nowadays than it used to be formerly. This is due mostly to two causes: First, the results arising from the area system of episcopal supervision increase the difficulty. The area system gives to the bishop a very much more intimate knowledge of the great mass of preachers than he could possibly have had under the former system of supervision. His more intimate knowledge of men and their families makes the appointments a much more personal matter than it used to be. Also, under the area system the bishop in most cases stays with the appointments. He does not make appointments, then go away, and knows little or nothing of the result of the appointment. For these two reasons connected with our present area system, appointments have a personal relationship that they did not formerly have. This personal relationship adds to the seriousness of making the appointment.

The second great cause that increases the difficulty of appointment making is the growing spirit of congregationalism and democracy in our church. As a result of this growing spirit, the churches make many more requests than they used to do. The ruling of the General Conference adopted only a few years ago, to the effect that negotiations between churches and pastors should not be made prior to Conference sessions, sounds already archaic and even antediluvian.

Both of the causes mentioned above that tend to make appointment making more difficult are good in themselves. The area system of episcopal supervision is infinitely superior to the former method. We will never have a reversion to the system of the older days.

All the "Autocracy" Not on the Bishop's Side.

To get the benefits out of the improved conditions without suffering serious damage, it is necesasry that everybody concerned shall play the game. Autocracy in making appointments is not wanted. When this is said, it practically always is said applying solely to the bishop. It does apply to him. A bishop is unworthy of his office who would habitually make appointments autocratically. But unless we are to have very serious difficulties, the absence of the autocratic spirit must be understood to apply to everybody concerned in the making of appointments. If the bishop ought not to be autocratic, by what right does the individual pastor or local church claim the privilege of being autocratic? Yet this autocratic spirit on the part of individual pastors and church committees adds very greatly to the difficulty in making appointments.

Preachers sometimes absolutely refuse to accept any one of a number of appointments that are offered to them. Committees from churches often positively decline to receive any one of a number of pastors that are offered to them. Why does not the rule against autocracy apply to the individual pastor and the church committee equally as it applies to the cabinet? If our system is obsolete, let it be scrapped. If our system is not so bad that it should be scrapped, but it should be tinkered, let it be amended. If we are going to stand by our present system in appointment making, let all those concerned play the game. Let the bishop, the pastor, and the individual church all understand that in a very democratic spirit they must all give and take.

When Preachers Gossip.

There are other matters which interfere greatly in appointment making. One that adds greatly to this difficulty is the habit of gossip. On the part of preachers there is a quite common, though sometimes unwitting, criticism of other preachers. These criticisms are heard by the laity, and are often the reason for their being unwilling to receive a pastor. There are also laymen who claim to have a very wide acquaintance with the foibles and shortcomings of pastors. By their gossip they are very liable to poison the minds of other laymen against certain preachers. This word must not in any way be understoood to be an appeal for concealing facts that should be known. Very frequently, however, if the remark was tested by whether it is necessary for it to be made or not, we are sure it would not be made. Nor are we pleading that every brother minister should be boosted regardless of the facts. But that every one should not be knocked is just as true as that everybody should not be boosted.

The Lazy Preacher Who Palms Off the Same Old Sermon.

The preachers also have much to do with the ease or difficulty in the making of appointments. Sometimes, of course, excellent men, against whom no words of just criticism can be made, find themselves in a "squeeze." Sometimes such men suffer in the appointments. From the standpoint of ten years' experience in helping to make appointments, I wish to say, however, that quite frequently difficulties in making appointments are due to the fact that men who have not made good demand that they should be taken care of. Sometimes the failure to make good has been due to the lack of a friendly and sociable spirit. Many complaints come to the cabinet that the preacher does not mingle with, and so does not know the needs of, his congregation. Sometimes the complaint is that he is, in plain English, lazy. Quite frequently those who object to the preacher say that his sermons manifest no new quality. They are evidently infirm from age. All of the quotations, allusions, figures of speech, and illustrations are taken from bygone years. It is difficult to maintain the grade, as the saying is, for such a man. Yet very often the man about whom these things are said is the man that makes the greatest demand upon the cabinet and creates the greatest difficulty. If preachers are lazy and indifferent and unsociable, honest appointment making should not be held responsible for any losses that may come to them.—Methodist Episcopal Press.

THE SOCIABILITY OF JESUS.

Jesus came to open up unsuspected capacities. He came to liberate Heaven in man. Christ believed he could reach men through eating and drinking. Some think that men can only be reached by praying and preaching. The Approachability and Sociability of Christ was a wonderful thing. Sir Walter Scott talked to those with whom he came in contact as if they were blood relations—no patronage, no superior airs. And Jesus said to Zacchaeus, in modern language, "Come down, old chap; I am staying with you to-day." It's a dangerous thing to invite yourself as a guest sometimes; it might be "the turning-out" drawing-room day, or it might not be baking day till the next day, and the kitchen arrangements might not be ready—but Zacchaeus took the risk of a scolding from his wife in the kitchen, and went along home with Jesus joyfully. Christ never went for a man at right angles. If you want to get on a bus you run by the side of it; then you get up steam and jump on.—The Rev. Cecil H. Wright.

THE PESSIMIST.

Nothing to do but work,
Nothing to eat but food,
Nothing to wear but clothes
To keep one from going nude.

Nothing to breathe but air,
Quick as a flash 'tis gone;
Nowhere to fall but off,
Nowhere to stand but on.

Nothing to comb but hair,
Nowhere to sleep but in bed,
Nothing to weep but tears,
Nothing to bury but dead.

Nothing to sing but songs,
Ah, well, alas! alack!
Nowhere to go but out,
Nowhere to come but back.

Nothing to see but sights.
Nothing to quench but thirst,
Nothing to have but what we've got;
Thus through life we're cursed.

Nothing to strike but a gait;
Everything moves that goes,
Nothing at all but common sense
Can ever withstand these woes.

MRS. FRANCES NALLY BALL.

Mrs. Louis E. Ball, nee Miss Frances M. Nally, died Aug. 7, 1927, at the home of Mrs. W. H. Borron, Pineville, La. Mrs. Ball had been in very good health for more than a year, and her death came rather unexpectedly. Mrs. Ball united with the Methodist church in early childhood, and continued a faithful and consistent Christian until the end of her earthly pilgrimage. She was married in 1877 to Lewis E. Ball, who preceded her in death by twelve years. Mrs. Ball was the mother of eleven children, seven of whom are living. The following are the surviving children: Mrs. Eva Ball Wallis, Baton Rouge; S. C. Ball and O. H. Ball, of Marshfield, Ore.; Mrs. C. Carl Myers, Alemeda, Calif.; R. J. Ball, Wilmington, Calif.; John M. Ball, Longview, Wash.; Mrs. J. P. Alexander, Portland, Ore. Mr. and Mrs. Ball had their home for many years in Rapides Parish, Louisiana. Here was maintained a beautiful Christian family life. The children were all brought up in the "nurture and admonition of the Lord." At the time of her death Mrs. Ball was a member of the First Methodist Church, Baton Rouge. The last several months of her life she made her home with her daughter, Mrs. Eva B. Wallis. A good and useful woman has ended her earthly career and has gone to her heavenly reward.

MRS. LORRAINE PORTER.

Mrs. Lorraine Porter departed this life, Sept. 5, 1927, in Memphis, Tenn., at the Methodist Hospital. Her death was the result of a fall a few days prior to her death. She was Miss Lorraine Johnson, and was married to Mr. John W. Porter, March 12, 1878, who survives her, also three sons and a daughter. She was converted in early life, and was a lifelong member of the Methodist church, and walked with her Master always. I as her sister-in-law can truthfully state that she was one of the most consistent Christians I ever knew. Often at the close of a perfect day when the sun sinks below the horizon, it leaves a radiant glow behind that is reflected so that all nature seems brighter and more lovely and beautiful; and it is so with some people—their lives have been so full of good and noble deeds and acts of kindness, their influence for good has extended so far, that even after they have passed away, they leave the world happier and better for having lived in it. Such a life ended when the sweet spirit of Lorraine Porter passed to the great beyond. If 'tis true that those who lead the most perfect lives here attain the greatest felicity in the hereafter, then those who are sorrowing for her can have no conception of what she is enjoying in the beautiful beyond. Besides her grief-stricken husband, sons and daughter, she leaves three sisters and a brother, who have my deepest sympathy in this their sad hour. Farewell precious sister, we will meet again some glad day where farewells are never spoken.

AN APPRECIATION.

The name of Maria Layng Gibson is indelibly fixed into the history of Scarritt College. From the first plans that were made for the institution she has been a large part of its inspiration and success.

She was the first principal of the college, and continued in that position until increased age made it necessary for her to give up such a heavy responsibility.

Her association, however, was not broken, and she continued to have a part in the life and work of the college up to the time of her death.

Through the graduates of the institution, as well as through her own life, she has exerted an influence that lives on in many nations and touches countless thousands of lives.

The trustees of Scarritt College recognize in the death of Miss Gibson the great loss the college has sustained. They wish to express sincere appreciation of her loyal service and strong Christian character.

It is impossible to estimate the contribution her life has made and will continue to make in the life of the college and the missionary history of the church.

To the members of her family we extend sympathy and pray that the blessing and comfort of God may sustain them in their grief.

To her college daughters living and serving in many lands and in various parts of our own country, we express mutual sorrow at her going, and earnestly hope that we all may be inspired by her noble life to follow faithfully the Christ who guided her through the years and into the eternal home.

FROM PINEVILLE, LA.

Dear Brother: The work in Pineville is moving along nicely, and more has been accomplished this year than any year in all the history of Methodism in this town or community. I held my own revival, which resulted in fifty-three additions to the church, and many reconsecrations, which means much to the church here. The Sunday school is doing better, and every department of the church has increased since we entered the beautiful new church building which is nearing completion.

I have just closed a revival for Brother F. C. Cady at Melder, La. The people said there it was the greatest revival ever held in that community. The results were twenty-three additions to the church, with more than 200 reconsecrations. I also baptized six infants. I preached to packed and overflow crowds at every night service. I will begin another revival on the same work at Fellowship church, at Hineston, La., on Oct. 3. Then following that revival, I will hold one for Rev. H. B. Thomason, at Boyce, La.

I have at this time six invitations to help the brethren which I will be unable to fill. I take this means of thanking them for their invitations, and wish that I could help them all, but it will be impossible.

Your brother in Christ,
CLAUDE K. SMITH.

A GOOD MEETING AT OBERLIN, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: We just closed a meeting at the Hopewell Methodist church, with Rev. C. B. White, of Marksville, doing the preaching. Brother White is a wonderfully gifted young man, who is destined to do a great work in the evangelistic field of the State. As an evangelist, I believe he is one in whom God is well pleased. I bespeak for him a great future. Brother White loves God with all his heart, the church because of her mission and commission, and his fellowman in spite of their sins. Of a truth, he is a friend of the pastor. We appreciate very much the splendid work he did among us. God give him strength and courage to march on with the saints of God, holding high the banner of the Lord, for by this sign alone we conquer.

There was a splendid manifestation of reconsecration to the Lord and his service on the part of the congregation. Ten persons pledged themselves to pay tithes unto the Lord. The Epworth League was reorganized and has gone to work again, after having rested for the summer months.

Though nearly everybody is a member of some church, we received three on profession of faith, that is, in Jesus Christ. One came to us by letter from the Baptist church, who was already a follower of the Lord Jesus.

The Lord blessed our efforts and encouraged our labors. Praise the Lord, for to him belongeth the honor and glory forever. Amen.

E. V. DUPLANTIS, P. C.

FROM LAKE PROVIDENCE, LA.

Dear Brother Harper: I have been reading your editorials and enjoying them.

This has been a great experience to us here in the Delta-Black Belt section. Then the high water, with its excitement and danger, has been new to us.

I have not missed a preaching service and have had no one to preach for me except Doctor Joyner.

We had a twelve-day meeting which closed last Sunday, Aug. 28, with our beloved presiding elder, Dr. N. E. Joyner, doing the preaching, and the singing led by myself. It was a very fine and helpful time. The church was awakened. Nineteen joined the church on profession of faith, ten being baptized. The whole community was helped and everybody is shouting praises of Dr. Joyner and his sermons.

Mrs. Selfe and I leave to-morrow by auto for Jackson, Mich., to visit my mother, who is in her eighty-seventh year; my sister, and Mrs. Selfe's sister, and our son, Maurice, at Detroit. During my absence Brother H. W. Rickey, of Winsboro, will preach on Sunday, the 11th, and Rev. Byron F. Roberts, of Tallulah, a student of Asbury College, on the 18th.

Hoping you and yours are well and that Conference will find us all answering "roll call," I am,

Your friend and brother,
JAS. E. SELFE.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

"No one is useless in the world who lightens the burden of it for any one else."—Dickens.

TO THE MISSIONARY WOMEN OF MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

My Dear Co-Workers: I want to express my appreciation of the splendid work that was done throughout our Conference during the second quarter of this year. The reports reveal the gratifying fact that the Mississippi Conference has made a substantial gain for this quarter over the second quarter of 1926.

I take this method of making immediate acknowledgement of the splendid achievement of our women, especially those in the two districts where the floods have wrought such havoc.

We had just cause for joy and thanksgiving when the tabulated reports revealed the fact that those areas which had suffered from floods had no shortage in their missionary giving. Their heroic example should greatly stimulate the efforts of every district throughout the bounds of our Conference.

The officers of our Conference are feeling the deepest appreciation of the work of all the district and zone leaders. These splendid group meetings, in which all our women have participated, have brought about this great result, and we see in it the earnest of a total for the year that will be sufficient to meet every obligation to Council.

The goals for our Jubilee have been kept continuously before our women, the Jubilee having had outstanding place on all programs. We have launched our plans for realizing two goals of the Jubilee, that of Spiritual Cultivation and the Historical. It is time for us to be thinking of the third goal, which is that of Extension. Plans are now being outlined by our secretaries for use in reaching the Extension Goal.

Miss Rosa Elise McNeil, our missionary to Africa, will sail the 12th of September. Your "love gift" to her even exceeded our expectation, and was very warmly appreciated by her. Let each of us be much in prayer for Rosa that she may have a safe journey and be mightily used of God as she begins her work in the African field.

May we as individuals work to the end that this may be the best year in the history of our Conference.

With grateful appreciation of your splendid co-operation, I am,

Very sincerely,

MRS. L. W. ALFORD.

ZONE MEETING, KEITHVILLE, LA.

The quarterly meeting of the Grand Cane zone of the Methodist Woman's Missionary Society was held at Keithville, Aug. 30, at 2:30 o'clock.

Logansport was proud to be so well represented, twenty-five members and visitors attending from here.

The meeting opened with song, and Rev. Don R. Dulaney, of Bossier City, gave the devotional, using the first chapter of Second Epistle of Peter. Rev. J. B. Grambling, pastor of the Keithville church, led in prayer, and was followed by an exquisite violin solo by Miss Fay Motley, of Logansport.

After the reading of the minutes of the Stonewall meeting, Mrs. Hendricks, of Keithville, welcomed the visitors.

Misses Almeda Gaynor and Gladys Fite sang a beautiful duet. Mrs. R. S. Walton, zone leader, expressed her appreciation of the young people for the part they so willingly take on our programs.

Mrs. John Richardson, of Grand Cane, fully explained the work of the Epworth-Junior Societies, and Brother Grambling, who has the Epworth League work so at heart, explained the merging of the Junior Missionnary Societies and Epworth Leagues.

Mrs. R. S. Craig, of Longstreet, gave from her own experience the need of missionary training for children. Grand Cane, Keithville, Mansfield and Logansport reported Epworth-Junior Societies, and Longstreet, Keatchie and Naborton ready to organize. Mrs. Walton made a plea for Christian training of the children.

After a brief intermission, when refreshing fruit punch was served, the meeting reassembled, singing, "Can the World See Jesus in Me." Mrs. M. Denham, of Naborton, spoke on, "Why Have Mission Study?" and Mrs. B. H. Bennett, of Logansport, on "The Essentials of Success for the Missionary Societies."

Mrs. Dowell, of Mansfield, spoke of the "Jubilee Year" which will be celebrated in Nashville in 1928.

Naborton was selected as the next meeting place in November.

An offering was made to defray expenses of the zone meetings, the balance to be sent to the Conference treasurer for rural work.

The Council consecration hymn was sung, and Mrs. M. Ballard, of Logansport, dismissed the meeting with prayer.

ZONE MEETING AT BUDE, MISS.

The third quarter zone meeting of the auxiliaries of the Southern zone of the Brookhaven District was held, Aug. 30, at Bude, with Meadville cohostess. The meeting was called to order at 10:30 by the leader, Mrs. J. A. Boyd, of Wesson. Brother Lewis conducted the devotional from John 15.

Mrs. Lewis, of Bude, representing the hostesses, welcomed the ladies very graciously, Mrs. Boyd responding.

The advantages of a Missionary Society to "An Individual," "A Pastor," and "To the Church" were discussed by Mmes. Clarke and Bowen, of Brookhaven.

Our Conference President, Mrs. L. W. Alford, brought us a very inspiring message of the Jubilee, stressing Spiritual Cultivation that our lives and work may be more effective; also urging that each auxiliary send to our "Historian," Mrs. B. F. Lewis, Jackson, Misss., items of special interest from their auxiliaries.

District Secretary, Mrs. Frank Decell, gave much information on our work, and urged new auxiliaries to use "Life as a Stewardship" for their mission book.

This being the time for election of leader and secretary, Mrs. McGehee, of Bude, was elected leader, and Mrs. McWaters, of Brookhaven, secretary.

Meadville Juniors gave a very pretty pageant. Brookhaven was selected for the next meeting.

After Mrs. Hartley very sweetly sang, "Rescue the Perishing," Brother Lewis pronounced the benedition.

A lovely plate luncheon was served.

ZONE MEETING, TALORSVILLE, MISS.

The meeting of zone No. 1, of the Hattiesburg District, was held at the Taylorsville Methodist church Sept. 13.

The meeting was presided over by Mrs. Evans, zone leader, of Mount Olive. Mrs. Cargile, of Taylorsville, conducted the devotional. The welcome address was given by Mrs. Jackson, of Taylorsville, and the response by Mrs. D. A. McIntosh, of Collins.

Interesting papers were read by Mrs. Carter, of Mount Olive, and Mrs. Grissom, of Taylorsville. A splendid talk was made by Mrs. Walters, district chairman, of Magee.

A round table discussion on "What Do We Get from Our Zone Meetings" was very inspirational.

The following officers were elected for another year: Mrs. E. L. Walker, of Magee, president; Mrs. Reynolds, of Taylorsville, vice president; Mrs. F. L. Crump, of Collins, secretary, and Mrs. Archie Calhoun, of Mount Olive, treasurer.

A beautiful vocal duet was rendered by Mrs. Walker and Mrs. Elliot, and a violin duet by Mrs. Walker and Miss Myra Gatewood.

Delicious refreshments were served by the ladies of Taylorsville and a social half hour enjoyed.

The followning auxiliaries were represented: Magee, Mount Olive, Collins and Taylorsville. The next meeting will be held at Magee.

How to Reduce Varicose Veins

Rub Gently and Upward Toward the Heart as Blood in Veins Flows That Way.

Many people have become despondent because they have been led to believe that there is no remedy that will reduce swollen veins and bunches.

If you will get a two-ounce original bottle of Moone's Emerald Oil (full strength) at any first-class drug store and apply it night and morning as directed you will quickly notice an improvement which will continue until the veins and bunches are reduced to normal.

Moone's Emerald Oil is a harmless, yet most powerful germicide and two ounces last a very long time. Indeed, so powerful is Emerald Oil that old chronic sores and ulcers are often entirely healed and anyone who is disappointed with its use can have their money refunded.

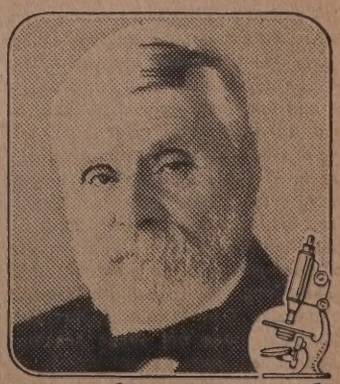
Old Folks Say Doctor Caldwell was Right

The basis of treating sickness has not changed since Dr. Caldwell left Medical College in 1875, nor since he placed on the market the laxative prescription he had used in his practice, known to druggists and the public since 1892, as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

Then, the treatment of constipation, biliousness, headaches, mental depression, indigestion, sour stomach and other indispositions that result from constipation was entirely by means of simple vegetable laxatives, herbs and roots. These are still the basis of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which is a combination of senna and other mild laxative herbs, with pepsin.

The simpler the remedy for constipation, the safer for the child and for you, and the better for the general health of all. And as you can get results in a mild and safe way by using Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, why take chances with strong drugs?

A bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin will last a family several months, and all can use it. It is good for the baby because pleasant to the taste, gentle in action, and free from narcotics. In the proper dose, given in the directions, it is equally effective at all ages. Elderly people will find it especially ideal. All drug stores have the generous bottles.



W. B. Caldwell M D
AT AGE 83

We would be glad to have you prove at our expense how much Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin can mean to you and yours. Just write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, and we will send you prepaid a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE.

Sunday School

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

It is not too late to observe Children's Week, but in two more weeks the time will have passed for this piece of work. Forty-nine have ordered literature for this purpose. Let us have one other school make the number fifty.

Mrs. F. W. Norwood, of Winona, Miss., has agreed to be Elementary Superintendent of the Grenada District. She can and will be of great help to the teachers who call upon her for literature and advice. We have a sufficient number of well qualified men and women in the Conference to do a vast amount of work in helping build the kingdom. It is not possible for the church to employ and pay a salary to all the people who render service. The larger part must be done by unsalaried workers.

The next forward step to be taken is to have a list of volunteer workers in each district who will do definite work in organizing and in teaching. Ten such workers in each district would make a definite and a large contribution to the work of religious education. A great deal of work should be done simply because it is all about us challenging us. We ought to do some things without being told to do them and without hope of money compensation.

What do you suppose gives the superintendent most trouble in the towns or in the country? He cannot get a sufficient number of teachers; and when he does have every place fillled, he has trouble in getting those teachers to come regularly and come on time. This disease cannot be cured with one dose of medicine, and it cannot be relieved over night. Ask yourself why are you faithful, what makes you interested, why are you always on time? It is because you have some conception of the importance of the work you are called to do. Put a book that bears upon the work the teacher is expected to do into her hands. Encourage her to read another, pray for her and pray with her, be patient, but keep on with book after book and you are apt to see an improvement You must get your teachers to read, study, pray. They act according to what they think and they think on what they have read. In other words, we must educate our teachers. John Ruskin, long ago gave his conception of the idea I am trying to present: "Education does not mean teaching people what they do not know. It means teaching them to behave as they do not behave. It is not teaching youth the shapes of letters and the tricks of numbers, and then leaving them to turn their arithmetic into roguery, and their literature into lust. It means, on the contrary, training them into the perfect exercise and kingly continence of their bodies and souls. It is a painful, continual, and difficult work, to be done by kindness, by watching, by warning, by precept, and by praise, but above all—by example." The task of the pastor and of the superintendent is to make teachers, teachers who know what they are about.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

By C. D. Atkinson.

Despite the continued heat, plans for fall are progressing in every quarter, with prospects of finishing the Conference year in Sunday school work in fine order.

Our week-end trip included visits to Shreveport, Ruston, and Monroe in the interest of Standard Training Schools at those places. Reaching Shreveport Saturday night, we had a full day Sunday with the various congregations, spending the Sunday school hour at First Church, in conference with the pastor, Dr. Goodrich, and the superintendent, Mr. W. A. McKennon. We enjoyed very much indeed attending the opening service of the Intermediate-Senior Department over which Mrs. R. E. Smith presided, and where the worship service was conducted in a splendid manner by a member of the student body of the department.

At 11 o'clock we had the privilege of bringing the morning message to the congregation at Noel Memorial, and had a short meeting with the leaders there. The Sunday school at Noel Memorial is, in many respects, the best equipped in the State, and has been blessed with some great "Sunday school pastors."

We held our "Set Up" meeting at 4 p. m., with the date for the school set for Oct. 16-21. All of our schools in Shreveport were represented, and voted to hold the sixth session of the school at Noel Memorial. Dr. W. W. Holmes, presiding elder, was elected Educational Director, with Mr. W. A. McKennon as chairman of the Board. The interest shown at this meeting indicates a splendid training school.

At the evening hour we visited Bossier City in company with the presiding elder, and had the pleasure of preaching to this fine congregation, whom the writer served as presiding elder in the days when they worshiped in the little old school house. It was a great satisfaction to witness their progress, and the fine things being accomplished by the pastor, Rev. D. E. Dulaney.

On Monday we visited Ruston and Monroe. Dr. Drake assured us that matters pertaining to his school were shaping up in fine manner. Dr. Monk has secured the fourth member of his faculty, in the person of Mrs. Jessie Wood Nance, of Westmoreland College, San Antonio, who recently taught in the Alexandria school.

We learned that Shreveport First Church has taken for its Forward Step the erection of an educational building; and Monroe is looking forward with practical assurance that 1928 will witness the erection of such a building for them. We trust that the forward steps decided on this fall will in many instances include larger and better equipment for the carrying on of this fine work.

Rev. H. L. Johns has issued a fine "challenge" to his people at Natchitoches, outlining the work to be accomplished in the ten weeks left of the Conference year, including a Standard Training School, Revival, Children's Week, Sunday School Day, and many other fine things. This might well be a challenge to each of us to concentrate our efforts on the work at hand in the Kingdom of God.

• • •

We are in receipt of a note of acknowledgment from Brother Arthur C. Tippens, assistant business manager and treasurer, thanking us for the exhibit we sent to Lake Junaluska, and assuring us that it formed a valuable part of the general exhibit.

• • •

We are glad to report the progress in the Columbia school, and to note that they are working on the B type.

• • •

The latest Sunday School Day offerings come from Mer Rouge, amounting to $17.50, and from Merryville in the sum of $5. We appreciate these gifts and bless the givers.

• • •

At a recent meeting of the Sunday school workers of First Church, Shreveport, a goal of $300 was set for Sunday School Day offering. This was the same goal reached at this church last year, and we are glad they intend to live up to it again.

• • •

Much interest centers around the organization of an Intermediate-Senior Department in Lake Charles during the week past, at Broad Street Church, under the leadership of Mrs. Robert H. Wynn. The American-Press gives a glowing account of this bit of work, and tells of the presentation to Mrs. Wynn by her co-workers of a fitting gift in commemoration of her birthday and splendid service.

We acknowledge with appreciation the receipt of bulletins from this church, which are filled with good Sunday school and church news, and special items.

A sub-district rally scheduled for the 19th instant at Leesville will present the following program:

Song; Bible Lesson; Prayer.

Object of meeting: Sub-District Organization and Permanent Training Camp.

"What Purpose Can Such an Organization Serve and What Help Can the Conference Sunday School Board Give Us," Rev. C. D. Atkinson.

"Is Such an Organization Advisable?" Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr.

"What Definite Advance Can We Take in Sunday School Training?" Mr. A. M. Mayo.

Presentation, "Enlarged Children's Week."

Round table discussion on "Training Camp."

"What Inducements Are Offered by Holly Grove?" Rev. R. T. Wright.

"What Inducements Are Offered by Lake Arthur?" Rev. R. P. Howell.

The Alexandria Standard Training School, which closed last Friday, was a fine success, and about forty-eight credits were issued. Several workers from the Christian Church took credits, and Pineville, Boyce, and Alexandria were the other co-operating schools. A detailed report of the credits is not available at this time, as the official reports have not reached this office. The faculty included Dr. Cleanth Brooks, pastor; Rev. A. K. McLellan, Dual Secretary; Mrs. Jessie Wood Nance, of San Antonio; and Miss Lemmons, of Atlanta. The spirit of the school was excellent.

Brother Frank B. Hill, pastor at Merryville, writes as follows in connection with a training school:

We are always glad to note interest in this matter of teacher-training.

THE TYLERTOWN CHARGE.

Dear Brother Carley: This is my third year on the Tylertown charge. All the appointments I have received in the Mississippi Conference have been good ones—far better than I deserved—but I believe this is the best place I have ever lived.

Soon after I returned from Conference last November I was given a "surprise party" by the Tylertown membership. About fifty of the finest people in the world drove up to my gate one evening and were singing, "There shall be showers of blessings," and marching right in on me before I knew what was up. They loaded the table down with all kinds of groceries and other things, and then one of the number sat down at the piano and they began singing, "How Firm a Foundation," and other great songs. There was happiness, joy, and peace written on every face, and I was too full for utterance. It was a great occasion.

I am glad to state that we have a good Sunday school, with one of the best men in the State as superintendent. We have three Epworth Leagues, all doing most excellent work, meeting every Sunday without a break during the hot summer months. Our prayer meetings are well attended, and the Sunday congregations have been much better than the average in years gone by. Our board of stewards expects everything to be paid in full by Conference.

China Grove is one of the greatest and among the oldest country churches in the Mississippi Conference. Last year she paid around $1,000 for all purposes, and will do the same this year. She has a membership of approximately 225, some of whom are the best livers and wealthiest farmers in South Mississippi. Some of the best preachers of the Mississippi Conference have gone out from this country church to bless the world; thousands of people have been gloriously and marvelously converted at her sacred altars, many of whom are living in various parts of these United States to-day. Old China Grove will still stand where she is as a beacon light and soul-saving station for many years to come.

Methodism in this section as well as in other rural sections of our State must revive; we cannot afford to turn over our work to others, who teach not and preach not as we do. So then we must take better care of our country churches.

Methodism must watch more carefully her doors—demand of our young preachers who knock for admittance that they have, above everything else, a rich, glowing personal experience. Efficiency, adaptability, and other qualifications should be required, but above everything else, preachers should know the Lord Jesus Christ and his marvelous power to save.

China Grove, as well as every other country community in Southern Methodism, needs an old-fashioned, heart-breaking, soul-stirring revival, regardless of what these upstart "Modernists" and shallow-brained critics may say about our "Old-fashioned" revivals of other days. God grant that Bishop Candler's prophecy of the near approach of "A great Continental Revival" will come true, and that God will water this nation with such a glorious revival as she has never experienced before.

ROMAN CATHOLIC ATTITUDE IN CANADA.

Bishop Fallon's address to the Ontario Educational Association in Toronto on Wednesday, April 15, 1925 (as reprinted in "The Bulletin," Father O'Boyle, editor), contains the following significant paragraph:

"The various Protestant bodies have sufficient in common to permit the drawing up of a quite comprehensive course of religious teaching which would suit the children of all these denominations.

"If every child cannot get religious instruction in school, the majority of children can and ought to get it. Minorities need not be proselytized or insulted. They need not be forced to be present; they may be sent to another room, or to a remote part of the same room. They need not enter till the religious exercises are over, or they may be dismissed before the religious exercises begin.

"For my part, I should be willing to see the Catholic minority remain in the woodshed in order to facilitate religious instruction for the majority—anything in the world rather than a system of schools from which training in the truths of religion has been eliminated, or where the law of God and the precepts of Christ are not the constant guide and the sacred illumination."—Selected.

DR. E. O. WATSON HONORED BY PRESIDENT OF GREEK REPUBLIC.

The President of the Greek Republic, Paul Condouriotis, acting through the Greek Legation at Washington, has just conferred the Cross of the Order of the Saviour upon the Rev. E. O. Watson, D.D., editor of the Southern Christian Advocate at Columbia, S. C.

This decoration has been bestowed in recognition of Dr. Watson's labors in behalf of the refugees who poured into Greece from Asia Minor and Eastern Thrace during the ill-fated years of 1922 and 1923. Always a profound student of the classics and feeling deeply the debt of gratitude which modern civilization and the Christian religion owe to the race which has done so much for the enlightenment of mankind and which, for so many centuries, was the bulwark of the Christian faith against the Papan East, Dr. Watson had a keen appreciation of the plight of the refugees and the effect which their arrival would have in Greece, their number equaling, as it did, fully one-third of the former population of that country.

While Secretary of the Washington office of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, Dr. Watson took a leading part in acquainting the Protestant churches and their constituency with the plight of the refugees and was of material assistance to the philanthropic organizations which were endeavoring to alleviate conditions in the refugee camps.

At a later date Dr. Watson became Secretary of the American Friends of Greece, and it was specifically for his work in connection with this organization that the honor has been conferred upon him,

DR. TORREY REPLIES TO AN OBJECTOR.

Why pray for a revival? Some of God's people believe that in these days revival is impossible. They say that we are in the midst of the apostasy prophesied in the Bible, and that it is to be followed by the Lord's second coming.

Recently a letter was written to the editor of one of the magazines that published Dr. Torrey's article entitled, "A Powerful Plea for Prayer for Revival," and the writer apparently objected to the article on the ground that we are now passing the period of apostasy which precedes the Lord's return, and that therefore revival cannot occur. Dr. Torrey replied in part as follows:

"You give no Scriptures for your apparent position that the present apostasy, to which I plainly refer in my article, is the final apostasy. It certainly looks as though it might be, but so in the days of Martin Luther it must have looked as if apostasy, so widespread, was the final one, and if Martin Luther and others had followed your line of reasoning, they would have been paralyzed, but, thank God, they did not.

"So also in the eighteenth century in the days of Wesley, the apostasy was more general, than it is to-day, and if Wesley or Whitefield and others had followed your line of reasoning there would not have been the great revival which saved for the time, civilization and the church.

"Just so in a later part of the same century, if Jonathan Edwards had adopted your line of reasoning and your assumption without Bible warrant that the final apostasy had fully set in, and therefore there could not be any great ingathering of the unsaved, he would not have sent out his plea for prayer, and consequent results would have been appalling.

"Just so in the early years of the nineteenth century, conditions were far worse in our colleges than they are to-day, and so were also conditions in the church, and in other matters, and if Timothy Dwight and others had followed out your line of reasoning, and your unwarranted assumption, the great revival that shook and transformed Yale College, Princeton, and swept over the country, would not have come to pass."

No Worms in a Healthy Child

All children troubled with Worms have an unhealthy color which indicates poor blood and as a rule, there is more or less stomach disturbance. GROVE'S TASTELESS CHILL TONIC given regularly for two or three weeks will enrich the blood, improve the digestion and act as a General Strengthening Tonic to the whole system. Nature will then throw off or dispel the worms, and the Child will be in perfect health. Pleasant to take. 60c.

A package of Grove's Liver Pills is enclosed with every bottle of GROVE'S TASTELESS CHILL TONIC for those who wish to take a Laxative in connection with the Tonic.

Let us be encouraged by the above reminder of God's gracious dealings in the past; let us lay hold upon his promise, "Call unto me, and I will answer thee, and shew thee great and mighty things, which thou knowest not" (Jer. 33:3); and with increased faith let us continue to pray for revival!

A PRODUCER OF PREACHERS.

Dear Dr. Carley: May I say these few words about Hickory Flat circuit, in the Corinth District, on the Frisco Railroad, about half way between New Albany and Holly Springs, on the Bankhead Highway? It is a four-point mission charge.

There have gone out from the bounds of this charge seven Methodist preachers and eight or nine Baptist preachers. The call to the ministry is certainly from God, but it is mediated through the agencies he has provided and through the influence of the church.

Satterfield, Geddie, Foster, Carson, Dreeman and others have been preachers in charge here.

Ask J. J. Garner, A. R. Beasley, W. C. Beasley, members of North Mississippi Conference, and John Duke, of the Memphis Conference, through what providential agency they heard the call to preach the Word. These brethren were born and reared in the community of Bethel church, seven or eight miles northwest of Hickory Flat.

It would be interesting to know what G. A. Baker, M. E. Scott and W. B. Baker, who are also members of our Conference, and are from Ebenezer church, some six or seven miles south of here, have to say about the Providential agencies and influences that caused them to hear God's call to the holy office of preaching the Word.

While talking recently to a steward of Bethel church about the number of preachers who have gone out from that community, I asked, what influence in the community did it, and he said, "The church."

I heard of a vessel that was once wrecked off the Irish coast. The sea was so calm and the night so clear and calm that an investigation was made to ascertain the cause of so needless a wreck. When at last the compass box was brought up from the wreck and carefully examined, there was found in it the point of a knife blade, broken off by accident and left by some sailor in cleaning the box. That bit of steel had wrecked the vessel, because it had deflected the needle from its path, had made it untrue to the magnetic pole, the center and rightful lord of its life and movements.

Just so self-seeking, worldly ambition, love of money or ease or power or pleasure deflect the decision of our young men in determining their vocation in life. The needle of their will does not settle along the clear line of direction, God's sovereign will for their lives.

May God keep us all true to the life that best commends his truth and grace to men, and keep us alive to the God "whose I am and whom I serve."

Sincerely yours,

G. D. BURT.

AFRAID TO EAT

Bloating Spells, from Indigestion, Put an Oklahoma Man in a Miserable Fix, But He Found Relief.

Swink, Okla.—In describing how he suffered from indigestion, Mr. S. T. Strain, of this place, says:

"I have been a user of Black-Draught for four or five years. I have been taking it for stomach trouble. I suffered after eating with bloating and a 'tight feeling'.

"I had spells when I could not eat much of anything. I had severe headaches. I would be nauseated and hurt a lot. I was in a pretty bad fix.

"I began taking Black-Draught. It seemed to help me wonderfully. I hadn't found anything that benefited me as Black-Draught did. I certainly can recommend it.

"There were times when I just did without anything to eat until I was too weak to go. I was just miserable, and when I ate, my system seemed clogged.

"I had very severe headaches. So I didn't know just what to do. I knew I couldn't work if I didn't eat. Seemed like what I spit up was bitter as could be. I took Black-Draught pretty regularly and got where I could eat, and I don't have to take it so regularly now." NC-177

HUSBAND DID THE WASHING

His Wife Confined to Her Bed by Ill Health

Because of his wife's frequent ill health, Mr. J. F. Gage was obliged to do the washing and cooking for the family.

One day when Mrs. Gage was confined to her bed, he brought her the newspaper to read. Among the advertisements she noticed a letter from another sick woman telling of the help she had received from Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"I'll try it," she decided.

Her husband brought home a bottle and only a few days after she had begun to take it she felt well enough to be up around the house. Gradually her general health improved until she is now able to do her own work.

In a letter which Mrs. Gage recently wrote, she said, "I have taken twelve bottles and feel like a new woman." She has told many women about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and one of her friends is now taking it. Her address is Mrs. J. F. Gage, Route 5, Brownwood, Texas.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been taken by women for more than half a century with very satisfactory results.

Purvis, Nov. 4, 7:30 p.m.

Let the pastors be ready to answer all the questions set in the Discipline to be considered by us at the fourth round of conference. They are as follows: 19, 20, 22, 23, and all other vital questions.

Please let everything be done for a full report on our benevolences.

Brethren, I am looking to you, pastors and laymen, for the fullest and most earnest co-operation on all things that come for our consideration.

The Lord lead and bless each one of you.

CROWD HEARS MISS WASSON.

An overflow meeting was held in the main auditorium of the First Methodist Church, Sunday evening, when Miss Julia Wasson and her student friend, Miss Tsar, a native Chinese, who had come with several other students to America in company with Miss Wasson as she returned from her missionary work in China, appeared before the Epworth League. The plan was for Miss Wasson and Miss Tsar to be present at and appear before the meeting of young people, in their gathering at 6:45, in the lecture room on the first floor.

Not only was every available seat taken, but standing room could not be obtained, and the windows were filled, and fully as many, who could not gain admittance, went up to the main auditorium where the evening service was to be held at 7:45. Miss Minnie Crowder had charge of the program, and after a brief devotional exercise introduced Miss Julia Wasson. Before she made her address she presented her friend, Miss Tsar, who is a graduate of McTyeire Institute, in Shanghai, China, where Miss Wasson has been a missionary and a teacher for nineteen years.

Miss Tsar spoke in choice English and enunciated clearly, to the pleasure and satisfaction of those who were her auditors. She told of the good work being done in the church and school where she was educated, and thanked the Christian people for making it possible for the young girls of China to have the splendid training which they were receiving in McTyeire. Her address was brief, but well received.

Miss Wasson spoke several minutes, and at the conclusion of the program of the Young People's meeting, responded to a pressing invitation by the pastor and congregation to appear before a crowded auditorium, where the largest attendance was registered in the history of the new church building, since its erection three years ago. The other churches of the city had come over to attest the interest in and wishes for Miss Wasson, who is a native of Attala County, and received her education in the public school of this city, and at M. S. C. W. at Columbus.

After the devotional services had been had, with special musical numbers by the choir, Miss Wasson again appeared on the platform, to the large overflow audience, and told of her work in China and why it was necessary for the church to call her, as well as most of the other missionaries, home on account of general conditions in China—not because religion had failed, or because China and the Chinese people did not want Jesus Christ, but because of various conditions which made it apparent that the work must be done, and perhaps more effectively, by native workers.

Miss Tsar then told of some of the customs in China and exhibited a number of articles of Chinese handiwork, and costumes worn by the people of her land, to the delight of the large audience that sat in breathless silence in the midst of the hot evening and crowded condition, to the few words she had to say.

The meeting was a distinct ovation to Miss Wasson and Miss Tsar, who brought messages from afar, and attested the interest of the people in the plans for missions and the work of religion in foreign countries, and what it could do, and was doing for heathen people. — Star-Herald, Kosciusko, Miss.

"EXCESS OF EVERYTHING EXCEPT RELIGION."

There is in the United States "an excess of everything except religion," according to Roger W. Babson, noted statistician and financial expert, who in an address on Saturday of last week before the fourteenth annual national business conference held at Babson Park, Wellesley, gave an analysis of the present business situation in the country and a forecast for the ensuing year. After indicating that we are in a period of declining interest rates, which have never been followed by a panic, and at the same time in a stage of declining commodity prices, which have never been followed by good times, Mr. Babson said, among other things:

"The reason for the above unusual situation is that there is to-day in the United States an excess of everything except religion. There is an excess of gold, which is the basic cause of present dangerous inflation; there is an excess of manufacturing capacity, which is the cause of present severe competition. There is an excess of copper, lumber, oil, coal, rubber, and other raw materials, which is upsetting commodity markets.

"We cannot expect a panic so long as money continues easy; nor can we expect better times so long as commodity prices continue to decline.

"Although 1928 should be a quiet year from a labor standpoint, with very few industrial disturbances, yet 1928 may have some real surprises for us. Whether these surprises will be in the form of great emotional uprisings, or will develop into campaigns for greater efficiency on the part of both management and labor, only the future can tell. Surely both sides are more intelligent to-day than ever before and I believe a more Christian spirit prevails.

"We are in a period when wise manufacturers, merchants, and investors will get out of debt and store up financial, physical, and spiritual resources. If enough men will do this, normal conditions could continue and such readjustment as is necessary could be so spread out over a long period as to do no one any harm. It is for this that I am working. On the other hand, economic laws are as heartless as are physical laws. We cannot fool nature in any form. Two and two still make four; while lying and stealing are still wrong. All past, present, and future legislation cannot change either the multiplication table or the Ten Commandments. To have the world recognize this basic fact is the great need of 1928."

In calling the attention of the country to the need and value of religion, Mr. Babson is rendering a high service.—Zion's Herald.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

ANOTHER PRIZE FIGHT.

All mankind must love a fight, if we may judge by the widespread interest taken in the recent combat at Chicago. That may be all right; it is all right if this interest is expressed in a praiseworthy way for praiseworthy ends.

For purely practical purposes and without any thought of the theological doctrines that might become involved, we like to think of every man as a champion, fighting a battle to a finish, either by a knockout or on points, against the challenger, the devil. Whether every man is a champion or not, the devil is certainly a challenger—and the value of the prize at stake cannot be expressed in terms of money.

Many a young man followed with intense concern all the details of the Chicago fight. He visualized the great throngs of onlookers; he thrilled at the recital of the incidents leading up to the entry of the combatants; his blood surged as the fighters took their places in the ring; and through the rounds, blow by blow, until the victor's hand was raised in token of victory, he hung upon the reports from the ringside as if matters of life and death were involved.

Yet this same young man is engaged himself in a fight that is just as thrilling, that is watched by a mighty throng, in which the issue is just as much in doubt, and upon which life itself does depend—and he may not even realize that the fight is on. It is a small matter whether Tunney retained the championship or Dempsey regained it; but it is not a small matter as to who wins in his fight. Men are fighting every day; God grant that they may fight the good fight.

ROGER BABSON ON THE CHURCH AND CHURCH PAPERS.

In a recent address before the National Council of Congregational Churches, Mr. Roger W. Babson, as reported in the September number of the Federal Council Bulletin, said, among other things: "The laymen of America are behind the churches and are backing them to the limit. Statistics in all denominations show that more money is being spent for preachers and church workers, gifts to missionaries are larger, expenditures for new churches, parish houses, and so forth, are constantly increasing, and that the 'church industry,' so to speak, is statistically prosperous. Laymen have not only backed the church financially, but also with their goodwill. This has resulted in a constant gain of members. In my own denomination (Congregational), the past year—even after careful weeding out of inactive members—shows a gain of over 13,000, bringing the total membership up to 914,698. There is nothing in current reports that the church as an industry is running behind. On the contrary, it is statistically prosperous."

In connection with his address, Mr. Babson proposed several questions for the consideration of those who heard him. Among these questions is the following: "Should not we laymen get behind church papers and see that they are supported, subsidized, endowed, and be willing to spend on advertising the churches and their work?"

We think Mr. Babson has put this question in a striking and significant way. As far as we know, practically all church papers have a hard time financially to exist. Mr. Babson's position in the business world is too well established and too well known for him to need an introduction; and his views always command the attention and respect of the business leaders of the world. His question indicates—what he evidently believes—that the laymen should get behind church papers and see that they are made financially able by increased subscription lists, subsidizing, or endowment, to render the most efficient service. If only the laymen would get behind the church papers! To make the case concrete, if the laymen of Louisiana and Mississippi would "get behind" the New Orleans Christian Advocate, they could very quickly and comparatively easily put it on a solid financial foundation and give it a circulation that would enable it to serve efficiently its whole constituency.

If the laymen are looking for a definite, worthwhile task, we commend to them the suggestion of Mr. Babson.

THE STRONGEST ARGUMENT.

The strongest argument in favor of Christianity is a life lived in accordance with its principles. The man who is disposed to do so can steel himself against the orderly presentation from the pulpit or in books of the divine character of the religon we profess; but he cannot find fault with or resist a bautiful life that exemplifies the Beatitiudes and puts into practice the Golden Rule. When the world is able to say of all Christians, "Behold, how they love one another," and is able to see that their chief joy is in "going about doing good," it is disarmed against the appeal of Him who came to seek and save that which was lost. Whatever else it may be, Christianity is a life to be lived.

GETTING READY FOR CONFERENCE.

From now until Conference most of our preachers will be busy trying to get things in shape for a good annual report. The time is not very far off, our Conferences meeting, as follows: North Mississippi, at Clarksdale, November 2; Mississippi, at Jackson, November 9; Louisiana, at Baton Rouge, November 30.

As far as reports are concerned, the principal item in getting ready for Conference is to see that all financial claims are met in full if possible. Some churches are so well organized and their habit of paying all claims in full so well established that very little extra effort is required. In a great many cases, however, the collections are put off till the end of the year, and very strenuous efforts are necessary in order to make a creditable showing. It sometimes happens that failure to pay out in full is due to putting off too long the work of making collections.

The paying and the collecting of money for religious uses are religious tasks. Therefore the work of bringing all assessments up in full should be entered upon as zealously as any other part of the church program. The sincere Christian, when approached for his contribution to the causes represented in the budget, should ask himself, not "How little can I get by with?" but, "How much can I afford to give?" And the sincere Christian will not fix the limit of his giving by the amount he has left after supplying all his luxuries. If all church members gave as Christians ought to give, the church would meet all its obligations in full.

THE "MENACE" OF UNITARIANISM.

If we may judge by the statistics just released by the Department of Commerce, Washington, dealing with the census of the churches, there is very little danger of this country's becoming Unitarian in its belief. According to these statitstics, there were 353 active Unitarian churches in the United States in 1926, with a membership of 60,152. These figures are exclusive of 18 federated churches in which a Unitarian unit is combined with a unit of some other denomination. These federated churches report a membership of 2,838. There are 317 Unitarian Sunday schools reported, with 3,025 officers and teachers and 19,722 scholars. The total expenditures for 1926 were $3,418,975, made up of $3,120,816 for current expenses and $255,759 for benevolences.

The population of the United States is estimated to be considerably in excess of 115,000,000. The membership of the principal Protestant denominations of the United States, including only those with a membership of 100,000 or more, was 27,466,470 in 1926. The Roman Catholic Church is solidly Trinitarian. Taking all these figures into account, we cannot see that Unitarianism is making much headway, or that orthodox Christianity is in much danger of being overthrown by Unitarianism. At the same time, it is not well to become lax in the propagation of the gospel of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit.

THE AUTHORITATIVE CHRIST.

By Bishop Warren A. Candler.

A marked and significant characteristic of the Saviour's Sermon on the Mount is its authoritativeness.

St. Matthew closes his account of the wondrous discourse with these words: "And it came to pass, when Jesus had ended these sayings, the people were astonished at his doctrine; for he taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes" (Matthew vii:28 and 29).

Truly, "Never man spake like this man" (John vii:46). Not even the great Hebrew prophets taught as he taught. When they uttered their sublime messages they said as did Jeremiah and Ezekiel and Hosea, "The Word of the Lord came unto me" (Jeremiah ii:1; Eezekiel xxxiv:1; Hosea i:1). Or, they declared "Thus saith the Lord," as did Amos and Obadiah and Haggai (Amos ii:1; Obadiah i:1; Haggai i:2). They referred all their authoritativeness to the Lord, who was indeed its divine source.

Not so did Jesus speak. For support of his teachings he appealed not to the prophets, nor even to John the Baptist of whom he said, "among them that are born of women there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist" (Matthew xi:11). But no less than nine times in the course of the Sermon on the Mount he used with emphasis, and with authority asserted above that of them of old time, "But I say unto you."

In the closing paragraph of the great discourse he represented himself as the final judge of all souls, and declared that their ultimate destiny would be determined by their doing or not doing according to his teachings. His solemn and decisive words are: "Many will say unto me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then I will profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from me ye that work iniquity. Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock; and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock. And every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand; and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell; and great was the fall of it" (Matthew vii:22-27.

Human speech could not express greater authority than these words imply, or assert loftier claims for Him who uttered them.

And no thoughtful mind can treat with indifference what Jesus claimed for himself; for as Luthardt of Leipsic has well said the mystery of his person is solved by what he claims for himself: "What does he say of himself? For this will always have to be that which, after all, makes the final decision. Because so much confidence we can give him in any case—be we never so distrustful in other respects—that he knew who he was, and did not speak differently from what he knew."

He claimed to be the Son of God; who among mortals will dare contest his claims? He affirmed that he is the judge of all souls, and that in the final judgment he will determine the destiny of each by his own teachings. Who will challenge the authority which he thus asserted?

Nevertheless there be some who are reckless enough to say that the day for respecting any and all authority has passed away forever.

A preacher in New York, who claims to be a Christian teacher, is reported as saying in a recent address to the graduating class of a woman's college, the following lawless stuff:

"You are going out into a generation which is witnessing the breaking down of the old well-defined codes of right and wrong by which your fathers lived, into a generation which is rapidly coming to recognize as a criterion for behavior, standards of good taste in all realms and situations, both old and new.

"To try to send a new generation into the world with a definite code of right and wrong is to behave like the mother who said she was bringing her daughter up to think all the thoughts she wanted her to think until she was eighteen years old, and after that the girl could think for herself.

"There is plenty that is rotten and hypocritical in the old codes concerning love and relationship of the sexes. Surely they can be changed and the simple standard can be substituted. Whatever debases personality is wrong and ugly; whatever elevates personality is right and beautiful.

"Finally, the standard of good taste is not a negative thing, merely keeping us from wrong. It is a creative thing. That is why your generation is so fine, so much cleaner, healthier, more promising than my generation. For when a generation discovers that the old codes cannot be used and they set up for themselves high standards of their own, they have much firmer ground on which to proceed.

"The difference between this generation and former ones is the substitution of a high individual standard for the compulsion of an external force."

And so this man, if his words mean what they say, would substitute for the authoritative moral teachings of Jesus, a vague and vain thing which he calls "the standard of good taste," which is "an individual standard" as opposed to any objective authority.

But he fails to give the tenets by which "good taste" is to be determined. The old code of morals he would have replaced by the novel code of "good taste;" but he does not tell by what principles of "good taste" is to be tested and measured.

Doubtless he believes that his anarchistic utterance was in "good taste;" but most sensible people would say that for one professing to be a Christian preacher to talk so foolishly was to violate the proprieties of good taste as well as the principles of Christian morality.

All such rebellion against the Christian code of morality is in its last analysis the rejection of the authority of Jesus. It is not only un-Christian, but it is anti-Christian.

It reveals a lawless spirit which more than once has manifested itself in human history, and which has wrought ruin and revolution whenever and wherever it has prevailed.

Resentment towards all authority was the destructive explosive which made the dreadful conflagration of what is called "The French Revolution." The historian, W. E. H. Lecky, says of that bloody riot of lawlessness:

"Its chief characteristics were a hatred of all constituted authority, an insatiable appetite for change, a habit of regarding rebellion as the normal as well as the noblest form of political self-sacrifice, a disdain for all compromise, a contempt for all tradition, a desire to level all ranks and subvert all establishments, a determination to seek progress not by the slow and cautious amelioration of existing institutions, but by sudden, violent, and revolutionary change. Religion, property, civil authority, and domestic life were all assailed, and doctrines incompatible with the very existence of government were embraced by multitudes with the fervor of a religion."

If this evil spirit of rebellion against all authority prevails in the United States, it will result in the same ruthless radicalism and ruinous revolution. Already it has brought to pass bomb-throwing when wicked and willful men do not agree with the decisions of the courts of the country; and if it be not arrested it will bring to pass still worse deeds of violence.

Men who preach such lawlessness are as wanting in patriotism as they are lacking in piety. Their ministries mean no good to church or State.

What our country needs above all things is a revival of religion that will restore in the public mind the authority of Jesus, that will "cast down reasonings and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bring into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ" (II Corinthians x:5).

It was such a revival that prevented the wild scenes of the French Revolution from re-enactment in England. Of that pestilential disorder in France, from which Great Britain was saved, Lecky, who is notoriously free from any Christian bias, says:

"England, on the whole, escaped the contagion. Many causes conspired to save her, but among them a prominent place must, I believe, be given to the new and vehement religious enthusiasm which was at that very time passing through the middle and lower classes of the people, which had enlisted in its service a large proportion of the wilder and more impetuous reformers, and which recoiled with horror from the anti-Christian tenets that were associated with the Revolution in France."

In this view the Australian historian, W. H. Fitchett, concurs. In his profound treatise, entitled "How England Saved Europe," he says:

"It is not easy to realize how it might have affected English history, if in the middle of the eighteenth century, with its drowsy church, its enervated morals, its laxity of public life, there had arisen, instead of a reformer like Wesley, an English Voltaire, distilling the gall of his skepticism, the acid of his bitter wit into the life of England. In that case the reign of terror in Paris might have been rivaled by one as fierce and bloody in London. Wesley, to the zeal of an apostle and the spiritual ardor of a saint, added the patriotism of an Englishman, and something at least of the intellectual vision of a statesman. And he did something more than crystallize into happy and enduring form the great religious body that bears his name. He affected for good the whole tone of English society. The religious revival of that period had the office of the healthful salt in the national blood. It purified domestic life. It wove bonds of quick and generous sympathy betwixt all classes. It put a more robust fiber into the national character. It gave a new tenderness to charity, a nobler daring to philanthropy, a loftier authority to morals, as well as a new grace to religion. So it helped to cleanse the national life. Among the elements of strength to Great Britain at the beginning of the struggle with revolutionary France is surely to be reckoned the invigoration bred of a revived faith in religion."

We must have soon some such religious movement in the United States to avert the gravest perils to the nation.

Mr. Roger Babson did not speak too strongly when he declared lately that the American people had "an excess of everything but religion."

Pretty preachments of "good taste" cannot restore potent faith and pure morality to the people.

NO LOSS IN CHURCH MEMBERSHIP.

Stirred by recent reports that the churches are suffering severe losses in membership, officials of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America have issued a statement declaring that the real truth is precisely the opposite. Figures are presented for twenty-five leading denominations, showing that they have grown almost fifty per cent in the last twenty years.

This statement was made, according to Rev. Charles S. Macfarland, General Secretary of the Federal Council of Churches, in response to many inquiries as to the validity and significance of the public announcement accredited to H. K. Carroll on July 30 that "the total yearly loss (of Protestant churches) would approximate about half a million."

"This estimate," said Dr. Macfarland, "has been completely misunderstood, because it had to do only with one side of the picture. It made no reference to the additions of new members year by year. For example, Rev. Frederick L. Fagley, of the Congregational Commission on Evangelism, was quoted as saying that about 30,000 members are lost from the rolls of the denomination annually, but no mention was made of the fact that some 75,000 are added to these rolls each year and that the percentage of increase in membership is greater than that of the population of the country. The fact is that the net result for all Protestant denominations has been a gain in membership considerably in excess of the growth in population. No thoughtful person should overlook the disquieting drift from active to inactive membership, to which Dr. Carroll called attention, but any one who thinks this means that the churches are decreasing in membership simply does not know what he is talking about."

The statement gives statistics from the United States Census Bureau and the Handbook of the Churches. It says:

"How utterly false are the impressions that the churches are losing in membership is shown by the figures of the United States Government Census of Religious Bodies in 1906 and 1916, supplemented by the figures for 1926 in the latest Hndbook of the Churches. The twenty-five principal denominations in the United States had a growth in total membership from 18,762,943 in 1906 to 23,638,597 in 1916 and to 27,466,470 in 1926.

"There was never a time in the history of the country when so many people belonged to the churches, never a time when a larger percentage of the population were church members. In the face of the cold figures, how ludicrous is the doleful lament, recently heard in many quarters: 'How long can Protestanism stand such losses?'

"From 1906 to 1916, in twenty-five principal Protestant denominations, the net gain in membership was 4,875,654. From 1916 to 1926 the net gain was 3,827,873. This is a gain of 8,703,527 during the last twenty years. In addition to making up all their losses from death, removal and other causes, the churches have made a net increase in membership of 46.4 per cent in twenty years.

"During these same twenty years, the increase in population of the country was 36.5. The churches, in other words, gained in membership much faster than the population.

"It is true that when the so-called war decade (1916-1926) is taken alone the figures are not so encouraging. For these ten years, the gain in church membership was 16.2 per cent, while the gain in populattion was 16.3 per cent. This condition may perhaps be explained by the diversion of the church's energies during the war years. During the last half of the decade, however, a recovery has been taking place."

"THE GREAT SALESMEN OF THE BIBLE."

(A paper read by J. R. Roy at a meeting of the Wesley Brotherhood, Mangum Memorial Church, Shreveport, La.)

One day while absent-mided in thought, one of the young men of our orgnaization approached me. "Busy, old war horse?"

"Not a bit, my boy," I answered. "Just dreaming a little. What's on your mind?"

He pulled a chair close up to my desk.

"You know, I was thirty-two years old last week. Well, I devoted a part of my birthday to a bit of serious thought and I came to the conclusion that it was about time for me to begin to do some systematic reading. I have made pretty good progress in business for my age. I realize it and it has got me scared a little. I am afraid I'll get too contented and that I will quit growing. I will bet that I could name a dozen men right in our business that have jumped ahead to beat the band between 20 and 30, and then began to get self-satisfied with their good salaries and pleasant jobs and have not moved ahead a single inch. That is what is on my mind. I want you to lay out some reading for me that will make me a bigger business man. Will you do it?"

"Sure, I will," I answered.

"Fine," said Francis. "I am ready to start right now, to-night. What shall I start on? What is the best book ever written on buisness?"

"The Bible," I answered right off the bat. My answer disappointed him. I knew it would, and his face showed it. He did not want to offend me, and yet he did not intend to be put off.

I picked up my hat saying: "Come on out to my house to-night. The folks are going to prayer meeting and I will be all alone. I am going to show you that when it comes to modern business, the Bible is the greatest one-volume correspondence course ever gotten together."

"You and I are salesmen, Francis," I began when we were seated that night. "We interpret salesmanship in the broadest possible way as persuasion. We believe that all the progress the world has made has been by virtue of wise and intelligent salesmanship. A doctor is a salesman, his business is to sell to the world better methods of living. An inventor is a salesman, his business is to sell new and better ways of doing things. The President of the United States, if he is successful in selling his ideas to the people, becomes a great and popular leader.

"Everything must be sold. When you come to look at it in that light, the Bible is a record of the lives of the greatest salesmen who ever lived. For ideas are harder to sell than things. The Hebrew prophets sold their people the greatest idea that it is possible for the human mind to entertain, the idea of God, and sold it so well and so securely that the world has scarcely been able to improve on their salesmanship from that day to this.

"Can you realize what that means? Everything else in human life has altered since the days of Moses, but the idea of God among us is pretty much the same idea that he formed and gave to his people. What a mind the man must have had, what leadership, what salesmanship. No man ever went up against such stiff competition. The world was full of gods, male gods and female gods, wooden and stone gods, iron gods, human gods and animal gods. It was a poverty-stricken tribe that could not boast of at least a hundred.

"There was one 'God'—that was Moses' sale. By interpreting their God to them, by bringing him closer to the people, by convincing them of his special care for them, Moses took the twelve tribes of slaves who had been in captivity to the Egyptians for generations and transformed them into a nation. From slavery to nationality; from dissension to unity; from degradation to a compact, conquering national life. All in the lifetime of a single man.

"Do you know of any bigger job of salesmanship in the world than that? Is it not reasonable to suppose that the salesmen who could land that order is worth study by salesmen even today?

"After Moses, came a splendid succession of salesmen, each with one big idea which he sold in the face of the strongest kind of opposition.

"There followed a salesman named Amos, who added to Moses' 'One God,' God of Justice. If you want to get some notion of what a tremendously revolutionary idea that was, remember the Greek gods—old Zeus punishing mortals because they got in the way of his love affairs, acting wholly on selfish impulse, rewarding those who bribed him with the biggest sacrifice. The Israelites' idea of God at the beginning was not much more advanced than that and they thought that feasts and sacrifices and ceremonies were the essential thing. So long as God was well fed with the odors of many altars, they were all right.

"And into the very complacent center of that idea jumped Amos with a God who could not be bought, a God who could not be bribed by sacrifice to support a bad cause, a God who wanted only justice and righteousness and would reward them whether accompanied by fat offerings or not.

"It was a stupefying idea. Yet Amos proclaimed it and sold it to the world, sold it everlastingly.

"Twenty-five years later, came another salesman. Like a lot of us salesmen who have to be a long time absent on the road, this poor fellow had trouble with his wife. Heart-broken by her desertion, his first impulse was to cast her off. Yet his love for her would not allow it. He went to her and took her back into his home. And the thought came to him that surely as he loved his wife who had wronged him so God must love men even when they break his laws and wander from the paths of their duty; not merely a just God, but a loving God who had power to punish and yet refrained from punishing. If you know anything about the conceptions of God that were current at the time this salesman, Hosea, worked, you don't have to have it proven to you that few salesmen ever sold a bigger idea than he.

"Take the question of 'Proper Approach,' for instance. You and I know how important it is. I'll wager that half the sales our men lose are lost in the first two minutes of their talk. They get off on the wrong foot, they stir up antagonism or prejudice with their first words instead of stimulate interest. Is it not so? Of course, it is.

"I am going to give to you two of the finest examples of superb approach in all history.

"A salesman named Paul arrived in Athens one morning in a very dilapidated condition. He arrived on foot because he did not have car fare and his costume was so ragged that you would not have allowed him to handle our line. Moreover, he had other disadvantages. He was little and homely and somewhat squint-eyed and the line he was pushing was about as popular as German measles in an English army camp. The city was overstocked with the brand that had been used for years and was regarded by everybody as superior. His brand had had no advertising and what few purchasers that were in the city were of the least respected classes.

"Some opposition to go up against, was it not? Was he discouraged? Not he! He pushed his way right up to the center of the city where the wise ones were gathered and just for the fun of it they gave him a few minutes' time. There they stood, the most sophisticated audience of the ancient world, and facing them an unkempt, dusty, little foreign salesman. They were ready to jeer at his first words. If he had said, 'I should like to interest you in something new in religion,' or, 'How are you fixed for religion today?' they would have hooted him out of town. Religions! They had barrels of them unused. Instead he said: 'Men of Athens, I want to congratulate you on having such a wonderful line of religions. As I passed through your city I perceived that you not only had altars erected to all known gods, but that you have even one inscribed to the Unknown God. Now it is a curious coincidence that the very God whom you have been worshiping without knowing him is the God I represent.'

"Can you find in all the world of sales literature a more forceful opening for a selling talk than that? If Paul had stopped at the end of that sentence, they would have begged him to go on. They would have insisted that he show his goods and give his talk.

"Salesmanship reaches its highest achievement when it produces in the prospect a desire to be sold.

"A greater salesman than Paul sat one day on the edge of a well in Samaria. You know who it is to whom I refer. As he sat there, a woman came out of the city with a heavy pitcher on her head for water. Between his people and her people had existed a feud centuries old. They had no dealings with each other. She must have hated the very sight of him. It was a crime according to the standard of his people for him even to speak to her. Pretty difficult situation for a salesman to find himself in, don't you think? Had he said to her even 'Good Evening,' or, 'It's a pretty hot day, is it not?' she would have turned from him in scorn. She might even have broken the pitcher over his head. But sitting there he spoke casually, almost as though talking to himself.

"'If you knew who I am,' he said quietly, 'you would not need to come way out here for water. I would give you living water.' Amazed and interested in spite of herself she cried: 'What do you mean? Do you mean to say that you know a way to get us water in the city without this long walk in the sun?'

"Begging him to go on, you see. And he did go on. She ran to the city and brought out her friends and relatives and they compelled him to remain with them two days. He, the hated stranger, selling a gospel that they would not but regard with suspicion, won a whole city full of prospects to him by his very first words.

"Is there any salesman in the world who would not lift his hat and stand reverently in the presence of a mastership like that?"

NOTES FROM THE ALEXANDRIA DISTRICT.

Brother J. L. Cady, of Pelican, is at the very extreme northern end of the district, and his work, part of it, is nearly in the borders of Texas. He has been busy and has had some splendid revival meetings. Perhaps the most successful was at Pelican, which was led by Brother A. D. George. Brother Cady is serving his first year at this point. He will very likely have a full report.

Brother D. F. Anders put his goal for the number of accessions this year at one hundred, which has been already reached. He held his own meetings at some points, but was assisted by his uncle, General Evangelist Dan Kelly, in a fine meeting at Pleasant Hill. The work took an active interest in the Standard Training School at Natchitoches. The work expects to pay everything in full.

The Provencal charge has reduced its geographical surface this year and the work has increased in productivity. The folks at Oak Grove will build a new church. The work has had splendid revivals with numbers of accessions at all points. The preaching was done by the pastor, Rev. W. E. Anding.

Kurthwood-Alco is again a two-point preaching place, as Montrose was put on the Provencal work this year. Brother Fontaine was in a union revival in the spring that resulted in a number of accessions at Alco. Brother C. K. Smith will do the preaching in a revival at Kurthwood, Sept. 26, that is expected to yield splendid results.

Brother H. L. Johns led the movement of the Standard Training School that was again held in Natchitoches this year. Miss Daisy Davies will conduct a revival campaign in October. One of his members, the Rev. Henry A. Rickey, will enter Candler School of Theology this fall. Natchitoches will send a full report to Conference.

Brother Thomason is serving his second year at Boyce. He had a big revival under the Bouden evangelistic party last winter, but will put on a second campaign in October, assisted by Brother C. K. Smith. The work has had some severe losses. The most marked was the death of Dr. J. A. Sewell, who was not only a strong supporter of the church, but was a close and intimate friend of the pastor and his family. The church will have a good report for Conference.

Brother C. K. Smith and his congregation decided to hold their own revival services, which they did very successfully. He did the preaching and they assisted in every way. They will put on the evangelistic campaign called for by the Epworth League. The pastor will carry the best report to Conference that has ever gone from the work. Brother Smith is serving his fifth year.

First Church is in the heart of Louisiana, and her activities are led by Dr. C. Brooks, who is closing out his third year as pastor, and everything will be in full as usual. The pre-Easter campaign resulted in a number of accessions, and was led by the pastor, supported by the congregation. They will follow the Epworth League evangelistic campaign. The new church is going up rapidly, and will be completed by January, and perhaps sooner.

Brother J. B. McCann lives in Pineville and serves the Rapides circuit. He has had good meetings on the work. Mrs. L. J. Coco and Miss Ella Ruth, of Marksville, assisted him at Holloway's and Pleasant Grove.

Brother W. S. Henry hopes to build a new church at Lecompte. Their building was burned in January. They have selected the old location formerly occupied by the public school. It is a beautiful lot and is a fine selection. Brother Henry held his own meeting at Cheneyville.

Brother Clarence B. White is serving the Evergreen charge. He is one who has suffered greatly on account of the floods. In the building of the new levee system he will have the parsonage and church at Simsport put within the levee. It is very serious and he does not know what is to be done there. In Jacoby the levee will also take the church. Brother White has had splendid meetings at three points and did his own preaching, which resulted in a satisfactory number of accessions. Brother White will make application for admittance on trial at our next Conference. The pastor is working for a full report.

Brother Lastie N. Hoffpauir, Bunkie, has witnessed growth along all lines. The Sunday school has had a big increase, and the congregations have grown steadily. When the officiary of the church discussed the revival outlook, they unanimously decided that they and the pastor could hold their own meeting, which they did successfully. The congregation needs a new building. They expect a full report at Conference.

Brother J. W. Suddith came to us to take care of the Evangeline work until Conference. He has been active in the evangelistic field—besides holding his own meetings has helped the brethren. He has been recommended to the Coference for admission on trial, but is desired by the North Mississippi Conference.

Brother D. B. Boddie is at Opelousas, where he has done a big work this year. He had a great meeting, led by Dr. R. H. Harper, the presiding elder of the New Orleans District, that reached great crowds. Then the water came and Opelousas became one of the largest encampments for refugees in the State. The Methodist congregation did heroic service, led by their pastor. They had a splendid Training School in March. The congregation sent the pastor to Cooper's Wells that he might regain his vitality from his strenuous labors. He has just returned and is feeling himself again.

Brother I. T. Reams is serving his first year at Eunice. He has gotten back in the section near where he wrought so well several years ago, he having served at both Opelousas and Lafayette. Eunice is moving forward and will send a good report to Conference. Brother Suddith was in the big meeting at Petriville.

Brother R. S. Carpenter, Lottie and Point Barre charge, was in the wake of the big flood, his work being largely in Pointe Coupee Parish. He had to leave the parsonage and go with his family to higher grounds. He has gotten back on the work, and is hard at work. The water came up several feet deep in the Point Barre church.

Brother E. V. Duplantis, Oberlin work, had a big revival just before Conference, in which Brother W. E. Thomas, general evangelist, led a successful campaign. Brother C. B. White assisted at Hopewell. The parsonage property has been improved and beautified. This is his second year on the work.

Brother H. B. Hines is in fine favor with the Elizabeth folks. The Culpeppers were with him again this year and did successful work. This is an industrial center, and the pastor took occasion to follow the line suggested by our church, to hold Labor Day services the Sunday before Labor Day, and had a great service. The Sunday school and Epworth League are thoroughly organized and actively engaged.

Brother Bowman is rejoicing over the payment in full of an old church debt that had been embarrassing Oakdale for some time. They are moving along all lines. Dr. Bromley, general evangelist, is booked for a big evangelistic meeting during the month of October. Congregations have been splendid during the year.

Brtoher A. S. J. Neill and his folks, at Glenmora, held their own meeting and had very successful results. The pastor did the preaching and the folks did the rest. They had the co-operation of the other churches. The Sunday school is larger than it has been since Brother Neill's three years at Glenmora. The congregations at the church services have also increased.

Brother Cady had Brother C. K. Smith with him in a big meeting at Melder that touched the community life in a splendid way. Brother Smith will also be with him in a meeting at Fellowship in October. The work has organized a Woman's Missionary Society that is doing fine work.

Brother J. A. Knight and his Melville work were badly hurt. At Melville, the water was several feet deep in the parsonage and church. There was a big deposit left on the floors. Every point went under water. He and his folks have gone back to finish the year as best they can. He did work as a singing evangelist and in the Red Cross during his absence. He can now preach in all of the churches.

The presiding elder closed the third round of quarterly conferences at Opelousas Sunday night, Sept. 18. The fourth round will begin at Pleasant Hill, Oct. 30, and will close in Alexandria, Nov. 28.

The district has had three Standard Training Schools that have done much good, having been held at the following points: Opelousas, Alexandria, and Natchitoches.

One of the interesting facts about our revivals this year is the number of pastors and people who have held their own meetings.

The fourth round will have a touch of romance in the proceedings, as there will be two of our young preachers to enter the married state. On Nov. 2, Brother J. W. Suddith, pastor at Evangeline, will be married to Miss Lucile Sewell, of Bunkie, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. E. G. Sewell, and Brother White, of the Evergreen work, will be married at Glenmora Nov. 17 to Miss Verda Houston, a prominent teacher of Allen Parish.

THIS JESUS.

By Dr. Charles C. Jarrell.

When we open the New Testament, we find ourselves in the presence of a glowing religious life. There is nothing in the world which offers any real parallel either to this life or to the collection of books which attests it. But the New Testament itself must have a cause. The life that is in it must flow from a life. Such forces can come only from a Founder, such Christianity from a Christ. When we ask for the rational cause of this fact, it is not far to seek. The religious life of the New Testament is determined by Christ. It is faith in God through him, and in this faith he is Founder and Finisher. This determines everything characteristic in Christianity. "Its convictions are convictions about him. Its hopes are hopes which he has inspired and which it is for him to fulfill. Its ideals are born of his teaching and his life. Its strength is the strength of his Spirit." (Denney, "Jesus and the Gospel.")

Jesus himself is thus the supreme wonder of the Bible. He is the keystone of the arch. Christianity is founded on the apostles and prophets, but Jesus is the Headstone of the corner. He makes his own impression of divinity; and if he fails to win the worship of the heart, all arguments to prove him divine would be an impertinence. The Bible is divine in that it gives him to the world, and he makes the case for the Bible incontestable. The character of Jesus is absolutely unique in the annals of the human mind. To tell the story of his life is to unfold a character radically different in all essential respects from all mortals, ordinary or extraordinary, man or superman.

This character was among men as a Teacher who impressed his hearers as having spoken as never man spake before. Nineteen centuries have passed; and more than ever men feel that he stands absolutely alone as a religious Teacher, Leader, and Guide. His parables were like miracles of wisdom. His miracles were like parables of power. Deissmann has said that the words and sayings of Jesus are not separate pearls threaded on one string, but flashes of one and the same diamond, the truth and its author not separable. He dared to be the simplest teacher the world has ever known. Out of the simple things the people knew in their daily lives he built parables and illustrations to make his truth plain. He teaches without effort; and his desire is not to make the truth appear deep and strong, but simple and clear. He illustrates from daily life and from nature, the home, the farm, and the street. Yet these words present ideals that are recognized as the unattained heights of spiritual glory for the race, and these simple sentences and homely stories furnish truths which are unfathomable in their depth of meaning for the moral life of men. Of learning, so called, he presents not an echo except his knowledge of the Old Testament; yet he has been the Master of the world's masters and the Teacher of the world's teachers as no other human intellect has ever been.

He is different from other teachers in that he never made a so-called system of thought or body of doctrine. Philosophers, scientists, theologians —they are all alike in this: they are building a system, a philosophy of the universe. He nowhere accounts for things. He has not a word about the "cosmos." In him there seems to be no consciousness of the mysteries of the universe either as to its origin or nature. He did not explain or philosophize about God. He is different from other teachers, again, in the sense that he speaks with a tone of peculiar authority. This caused the people to be astonished at his doctrine. Jesus does not argue; he announces. He does not seek to prove, but to explain. The solemn import of his words, "But I say unto you," is not to be missed; and it is impossible to imagine them without fatal incongruity on any lips but his own.

Jesus' method of thought is native to himself, and is not approached by any other thinker the world has ever had. He never seems to investigate or seek to find or discover truth. Truth seems to be native to him. It is not detached that he must seek, or distant that he must strain his eyes to see, or hidden that he must discover. He seems to know. For him to know himself is to know the truth. There seem to be no processes of knowledge with Jesus, nor strain of achievement as if he were striving to know, nor intellectual heats as men feel when they find and cry, "Eureka!" The mightiest and sublimest revelations of God and insights into duty and destiny he makes as simply as if he were breathing out of himself and as if he were infinitely more than anything he had ever said. His knowledge was native, natural, and inexhaustible, because his thoughts and his life were one. The truth coalesces into the unity of the Speaker and his life.

This Jesus of the New Testament is a Person who performs innnumerable works of power such as no man ever wrought. Each of the four Gospels is a miracle Gospel. If there was a Jesus who simply taught and exercised no miraculous powers and made no claim to such, there is of such a person and such a movement not the trace of a record left. The miracle Gospels have the whole field to themselves. We have no historical connection with a Jesus who worked no miracles. If there was such a Jesus, the true story of him perished, and the miracle Gospels were written down while eye-witnesses of the truth were still living. Men have constructed out of our Gospels a non-miracle Gospel story, as Jefferson did; but the fact remains that the miracle Gospels were in the field first and, historically speaking, have the whole field to themselves.

These recorded works of power, some thirty-three in number, are said to be but a few of his marvelous works, beginning with the wedding at Cana of Galilee, when he began through them to show forth his glory. A study of these selected instances will reveal a reasonable order and a moral meaning such as could not belong to a mere string of marvels. They clothe Jesus with an air of majesty—Master of the forces of nature, the diseases of the body, the maladies of the mind, and over death itself. In the Gospels the word, the work, and worker are so related that neither stands alone, and each bears witness to the other two. They cannot be torn apart without doing violence to the portrait of Jesus as we find it. He expresses himself as naturally and as easily through the works of power as through the parable or sermon. They both inhere in him and seem native to him. They are characteristic of him, and both alike bear the stamp of his personality. They express his purpose and reveal his spirit. They are redemptive acts and words because he is the Redeemer. The miracle fits his hand as easily as the parable becomes his speech, and both serve to reveal the majesty of his love and life. His miracles are ethical acts and have relations to his Person and to the needs of men. They move in the sphere of redemption and serve purposes of revelation. The doctrine tries the miracle, and the miracle seals the doctrine; and both manifest forth his glory, and his disciples believe on him.

The character of Jesus has been before the world for nineteen hundred years. This portrait remains the masterpiece without a rival. He is first in the sense of having no second. Dr. Deissmann says: "Jesus stands out as the One, and Paul as the first after the One; or, to speak more like Paul himself, as the first in the One." Renan says: "The memory of him has been like the perfume of another world, and all history is incomprehensible without him."

With an unaffected majesty and an unstudied spiritual grace this Jesus walks along the awful elevations of a divine perfection. His way leads him through poverty and scorn, agony and death; but he never slips nor falters, he never falls below his sublime claims. In the odd moments and offhand relations, as well as in the dramatic crises of his life, always he bears himself in the same way—it is the one consistent Jesus. This is the character of Jesus as presented in the Gospels. The portrait is not drawn by description. There are no efforts to eulogize. There is no string of epithets. There is not the silghtest trace of dramatic art or of literary skill. The character is allowed to act for himself, and make his own impression. He stands sharply drawn, easily recognized in all the documents, with no one like him, having his own unthinkable touch and tone, and speaking in each circumstance and situation words that are not only appropriate to his character, but words to which there is nothing else in the Gospels that bears the least resemblance.

Behold the face of Jesus, that Form divine, that Character consistent, sustained, transcendent, which is the greatest miracle recorded in the Gospels and which any man can see for himself if he will but read and understand what he reads. "He is such a Person as men could not have imagined if they would, and would not have imagined if they could. He is neither Greek myth nor Hebrew legend. The artist capable of fashioning him did not exist, nor could he have found the materials. A non-existent Christianity did not spring out of the air and create a Christ. A real Christ appeared in the world and created Christianity."—(Van Dyke, "Gospel for an Age of Doubt.")

WORK DAY AT THE METHODIST ORPHANAGE.

Work Day for the Methodist Orphanage at Jackson, Miss., will be Sunday, Oct. 9, this year. Letters and literature will be mailed from this office in a few days to the pastors and Sunday school superintendents throughout the State. We are hoping for a general and generous response. In 1925 we had the largest response on Work Day of any similar day in the history of our Orphanage. Last year, 1926, in spite of the disastrous decline in cotton in the fall, we fell only a few thousand dollars short of 1925.

The receipts for our running expenses during the summer have been greater than ever before in the history of the Orphanage, and we are hoping and earnestly desiring that the friends throughout the State will be as generous in their remembrances of Work Day this year as in the past.

We are exceedingly anxious to make an appreciable reduction in the outstanding obligation on our building, and a response approaching that of 1925 will be a considerable help in this particular.

Do not forget Work Day, Oct. 9, 1927, and make remittances direct to this office in Jackson.

B. F. LEWIS, Superintendent.

NEW BUILDING FOR MISSISSIPPI METHODIST ORPHANS.

Dear Brother Carley: Several months ago Mr. O. L. Biedenharn, of Shreveport, with his brothers, tendered to our Orphanage here in Jackson $20,000 with which to erect a brick building for our boys on the farm five miles in the country, in memory of their mother. The last meeting of the Board of Directors not only accepted this proffer, but tendered the thanks of the Board and the church to Messrs. Biedenharn, appointed a building committee and began at once to make arrangements for this structure.

I have just received a telephone message from the architect stating that the revised plans of this building are now ready for inspection and they will pass under review this afternoon. It is our present purpose, unless we meet with unforeseen complications, to begin wrecking the old building on the farm by the time this letter can be read by Advocate readers, and we hope to be in the new Home at least by the 1st of January, if not before.

Mississippi Methodists will be glad to receive this information and will join in thanks for these good friend of our Home for their deep interest in our work.

Yours very truly,

B. F. LEWIS, Superintendent.

BOARD OF EDUCATION, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The members of the Board of Education of the North Mississippi Conference are called to meet in the Library of Grenada College, Grenada, Miss., on Tuesday, Oct. 4, at 1:30 p.m., for a pre-Conference session of the Board. Members of the Board will kindly meet promptly at 1:30 o'clock, since we want to finish our business that day.

OPENING OF WHITWORTH COLLEGE SESSION.

The 69th year of Whitworth College opened Wednesday, September 14, 1927, under conditions that point to a successful session's work. Notwithstanding the fact that Whitworth in May, 1926, discontinued the Preparatory Department, which had been in operation during all its past history, and notwithstanding the fact that for the present session the junior and senior classes were discontinued, leaving only the two college classes, there is a larger enrollment both of boarding students and local students than has been the case in several sessions.

The placing of boarding students in their dormitory rooms and of classifying every one occupied the first day or two, but all are now getting down to serious and regular work, not only in the college, but also in the special departments. There is a good enrollment of students taking piano, voice, violin, expression, physical education, home economics, stenography, typewriting, and bookkeeping.

The courses at Whitworth are fully accredited for the first two years, and the work in the Fine Arts Department is being done according to standards that allow credit for same; for instance, the students by taking in connection with their practical piano work sufficient amount of theory, harmony, and musical history can get credit for same towards a degree. We have been very strict with our entrance requirements during the last two sessions, and we are determined to make all the work done standard, in order that our credits may be recognized anywhere in the educational world. Nearly every girl graduate of the Brookhaven High School class of 1927 has entered Whitworth College.

The public opening exercises were held in Lampton auditorium on the campus Friday morning, Sept. 16, at which time members of the faculty were introduced to the audience, and talks were made by Revs. P. D. Hardin, W. H. Lewis, H. E. Bush, H. V. Lofquist, A. J. Beasley, and Mr. W. D. Davis. Voice and violin numbers were given by members of the faculty of the Fine Arts Department, and the students sang "America" and the college song. At the Brookhaven Methodist church on Sunday evening, Sept. 18, all the congregations of the town united in attending a sacred concert given in honor of the Whitworth opening. The program was probably one of the best of the kind ever given in the State of Mississippi. The boarding students made a splendid appearance, dressed in their white uniforms, and the occasion was greatly enjoyed by the large audience attending, which included quite a number of visitors from neighboring towns.

PROPOSED INTERDENOMINATIONAL PROGRAM OF EVANGELISM. SEPTEMBER, 1927-JUNE, 1928.

Preliminary Considerations.

We, the representatives in the field of evangelism of our respective bodies, meeting with the Federal Council's Commission on Evangelism and Life Service at Northfield, Mass., June 22-24, agree to promote by such means as we have available and in such ways as are open to us in our various bodies the following general program of Evangelism for the season September, 1927, to June, 1928:

We commend this program to our various churches throughout the land and to our missionaries at home and abroad for such use as each body and each worker may deem best. Let it be clearly understoood that it is in no sense obligatory either to any denominational or interdenominational body or on any local church, but it is offered simply as a suggestion. We venture to send this forth after diligent prayer and earnest conference together in seeking to know the will of God and further the interests of the kingdom of our Lord among men.

We especially invite the churches of Canada to join in this plan of work for the church year as far as possible and request suggestions from them concerning our common task.

I. We are thankful for the fruitful service of Federations of Churches in cities, towns, and States, and suggest that as far as practicable this interdenominational program be given consideration when these bodies plan their own programs in order to help the churches which compose these federations to carry forward the common program of work.

II. We invite the Y. W. C. A., the Y. M. C. A., the Council of Religious Education, the C. E., the L. L., B. Y. P. U., Epworth League, and other like denominational or interdenominational organizations to consider this program when shaping their own that in so doing they may the more fully fashion their work in harmony with that of other denominational forces throughout the country.

III. While these suggestions are only for the months September to May it is understood that the church is, or ought to be, at work along similar and kindred lines throughout the year. We especially invite the attention of churches and Federations of Churches to the opportunities for programs of evangelism, street preaching, young people's conferences, for preaching the Gospel and training the young which are open during the summer season.

IV. Many churches and related bodies are planning to give special attention to a careful study of the Life of our Lord Jesus Christ during the next three years in memory of the corresponding three years of his public ministry approximately nineteen centuries ago. We look upon this as a favorable opportunity to call upon all people everywhere to give themselves with renewed consecration to the study of his life and with wholehearted determination to bring the knowledge of our Lord and his saving grace to multitudes that know him not, and to learn how his way of life may become operative in all the areas of human relationships in our modern world; and further do we commend those movements in our various denominations which seek in organized fashion to make these years particularly fruitful in the spiritual life of the churches and in their ministry to the complex and confused life of the world.

V. The Program:

We believe the work of the church year should be planned well in advance and should have in it two major movements.

(a) A fall program with a well planned church rally, and a program of activities continuing through the fall months with special emphasis on church attendance, care of absentees, church publicity, and membership enlistment.

(b) A pre-Easter or Lenten program beginning early in the new year, and including:

1. A careful cultivation of the devotional life of the people.

2. A definite program of religious instruction by the pastor for the young.

3. The enlistment and training of a body of witnesses for Christ to do personal work in the ingathering of new members.

VI. (a) The Fall Program:

1. That the first Sunday in October be selected for Church Rally Sunday with emphasis upon family church attendance. This rally to be preceded by a thoroughgoing visitation of the parish that newcomers may be given personal invitation and that all the people may be reminded of the program of the church, become acquainted with its personnel, and be given a new understanding of their responsibility for the work and the worship of the church.

2. That this occasion be utilized to give widest publicity to the church and to the Christian program, at home and abroad, in the daily press and through other mediums throughout the community.

3. That following the rally the church give itself to a thorough cultivation of all indifferent members, to looking after absentees, and in every way instructing the people as to the duty and value of regular church attendance.

4. That this period of work shall fruit in an autumn ingathering of new members at the fall communion service or at some other suitable season.

(b) The Pre-Easter or Lenten Program:

1. Careful cultivation of the devotional life of the people. We recommend:

(a) That all people everywhere should read during January, the Gospel of Matthew.

(b) That during the first twenty-one days of February the Gospel of John shall be read.

(c) That from Feb. 22 to Easter day the Fellowship Prayer be used.

(d) That devotional literature and instruction in worship be provided for the people and careful plans made that worship and devotion be everywhere encouraged.

(e) That the people be urged to follow the life of Christ day by day from Palm Sunday to Easter, using one of the many available editions of the Gospel story or the manual prepared by the literature committee of the Federal Council's Commission.

(f) That emphasis shall be placed on the value of individual and family devotions and group and neighborhood prayer meetings shall be organized.

2. We urge pastors to consider their peculiar responsibility for the religious training of their young people and commend most heartily the catechetical classes and the pastor's training class as used in many of our churches.

3. We commend to pastors the growing custom in many churches of enlisting and training a group of consecrated laymen and laywomen as witnesses for Christ, and we urge that those who enlist for this high service be given most careful preparation and guidance that their service may be truly fruitful to themselves and to the cause of Christ.

We are greatly encouraged by the widespread use of the program of Visitation Evangelism, "week-day" Evangelism, and programs of "united witnessing," and like forms of church and community movements, with the use of vocational evangelists where desired, and we urge all our churches to co-operate as far as possible with other churches of the community in such forms of evangelism. And further we request the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A., the Men's Church League, and like organizations to avail themselves of the invitations they may receive from the churches to help in this great work.

4. We commend the growing custom of emphasizing the importance of a suitable reception of new members at the Easter season, or on Pentecost Sunday or other suitable occasion, that all the churches may come to a better understanding of the meaning and value of church membership and that new members may realize the importance and sacredness of public confession of saving faith in our Lord Jesus Christ.

In Conclusion:

The Federal Council's Commission on Evangelism and Life Service and the various denominational bodies welcome most heartily suggestions from pastors and church workers as to the best plans, material, and procedure in this the church's main task, and these bodies offer freely to the churches their personnel, literature, and counsel, and their fervent prayers that God may bless us all with a gracious outpouring of the Holy Spirit in the lives of all mankind.

(In addition to the representatives of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, J. W. Perry, John Paul Tyler, and Henry W. Bromley, this paper is signed by representatives of all the leading Protestant denominations of the United States.—Editor.)

The Home Circle

THE TOWN OF DON'T-YOU-WORRY.

There's a town called Don't-You-Worry
On the banks of River Smile;
Where the Cheer-up and Be-happy
Blossom sweetly all the while.
Where the Never-Grumble flower
Blooms beside the fragrant Try,
And the Ne'er-Give-Up and Patience
Point their faces to the sky.

In the Valley of Contentment,
In the province of I-Will,
You will find this lovely city
At the foot of No-Fret hill;
There are thoroughfares delightful
In this very charming town;
And on every hand are shade trees
Named the Very-Seldom-Frown.

Rustic benches, quite enticing,
You'll find scattered here and there,
And to each a vine is clinging
Called the Frequent-Earnest-Prayer.
Everybody there is happy,
And is singing all the while—
In the town of Don't-You-Worry,
On the banks of River Smile.

CHRISTIAN LIVING VIA THE HOE.

By H. E. Taylor, Missionary, Rhodesia, Africa.

The question is sometimes asked, "Is agricultural teaching really missionary work?"

The answer is given in Rhodesia by the acquisition by one denomination of about twenty thousand acres of land distributed in six farms and the providing for three agricultural missionaries among sixteen pastoral appointments.

This essentially agricultural and pastoral people, to whom we would have a part in bringing the benefits of the Christian religion and among whom we attempt to establish a working Christian civilization, must be aided to rise in all phases of life, if lasting good is to result.

Thus, after evangelism in importance to the people, must follow instruction and demonstration in agriculture, for the people were found sadly in need of it. While, for example, there is shameful waste of natural fertilizers on the part of European farmers, they would be surprised to learn that these black farmers, nearly every one of whom has some livestock, either thought manure useless or harmful. Except for the fact that farm land was grazed over through the dry season, there was no saving of natural fertilizers.

The Use of Manure.

One of our pastor-teachers gave this report, which will illustrate the ideas of the people about the use of manure:

"All the people were in trouble about vegetable, about digging garden, and when I talk to them about manure from the chickens they say, 'We are not dirty people.'

"Jesus said, 'Not all talking, but doing.'

"I took my hoe and digged garden beds. Four beds I did put manure. Four beds I did not put manure.

"People say, 'How you can take manure from chicken's house! Are you not 'fraid 'tis bad smell?'

"So, I plant two beds for shallots, two beds for lettuce, two beds for cabbage, two beds for rapes.

"I ask the people, 'Are you like to see my garden? I want you to see the different you go to find between them.'

"They say, 'Some beds they have poor vegetable. How 'tis happen?'

"I say, 'It is the reason they have no manure. Taste the vegetable in every beds. They bad taste? No, all they are right. You are believe they have different. My teacher did teach me. I did put manure. That manure I did take from chickens' house. If you want, I will teach you!'

"They say, 'We do like you will teach us about gardens.'"

Cattle, Trees and Gardens.

Boys and girls in the schools, established on three of the farms we have, are first taught gardening, and as part of this work learn about fertilizing, deep digging of soil, planting, irrigating, cultivating—and eating the vegetables. They also learn how to prevent erosion, to practice rotation, to use green manures, and to grow diversified crops for marketing off small areas of ground.

At Mutambara, one of our four largest central stations, each boy has been allotted sixteen beds measuring sixteen and one-half feet. The soil, which is a disintegrated granite and very coarse, sandy, and loose, has to be heavily fertilized. It is a type of soil commonly used by the people. We have been able to make very fine gardens, as the boys take a great interest in them. Never before have the boys been so plentifully supplied with vegetables. The rape, onions, beans, cabbage, potatoes, tomatoes, etc., have provided food for themselves, gifts for friends, and some to sell besides.

Because there is so little satisfactory indigenous timber and fruit, we are encouraging the planting of eucalyptus, mulberry, peach, guava, papaya, etc.

The native cattle, while hardy, are small, partly due to inbreeding, and are poor dairy animals. To bring about development along this line, presents a big problem of encouragement and cooperation, more especially as it requires an accompanying instruction in the growing of feed and the proper feeding of improved stock. The same truths apply with regard to sheep, goats, swine and fowls. Poultry raising, in particular, comes in for early attention, since it requires such small initial investment and brings quick returns.

Some Results.

In spite of many discouraging conditions, there is much to hearten us in the work. While many native people have to be helped in time of famine, I have yet to hear of the Christian people needing such help. This is largely due to the fact that our people save their grain, not brewing beer from it, as others do, and experiencing all the attendant evils which make the condition of the non-Christian so pitiable. Also, the Christians are teachable and have confidence in the missionaries, with the result that they farm better and so raise better food in larger amounts than do the heathen.

There are at least thirty men within three miles of Mutambara who raise wheat under irrigation. They all plow their land, using oxen they have trained and plows they have bought in town.

Formerly cattle were simply property and of use principally as being negotiable for wives. Nineteen years ago there were no plows owned by the people around Old Umtali. They had no trained oxen. Now, in one community fifteen miles away, near one of our big outstation schools, there are one hundred and forty plows in use.

Gardening is extensive at Old Umtali. Vegetables are carried into town nine miles away and sold. The resultant income helps support them while attending school.

At Mutambara the boys sell onions, potatoes, and some several other vegetables. A number of boys have sold as much as two shillings and sixpence worth of potatoes from one bed in their gardens. This helps to pay their tax, buy clothing and blankets, and school supplies, when added to what they earn during vacation.

These facts with the increased incomes resulting have caused our people to be cleaner, better dressed, possessed of much better homes, and, also, able to contribute much more to the support of their church. All of which, with the attendant happiness and contentment, is tangible evidence to the un-Christianized. The new converts are encouraged to further better their lives, and your missionaries are heartened to continued effort to improve the economic staus, as well as to seek the soul-welfare of their people.

TEN WAYS OF BEING A BAD PARENT.

1. A parent is bad whose imagination is colored by an uncritical belief in the vague rumors of scandal about young people. Such parents have no sense of proportion, are ready to accept the worst because it fits in with their theories. They are the largest contributing factor to the breakdown of reputation, even of their own children.

2. A parent is bad who accepts "fate" blindly and cannot see behind present handicaps the background of latent strength.

3. A parent is bad who does not realize that with adolescence comes a tremendous pull of loyalty toward friends outside the family group.

4. For a parent to become prematurely stabilized, so that he loses a sense of proportion and cannot distinguish between major and minor values, is to become a bad parent.

5. A parent who makes a faulty characterization of a child is likely to produce bad results.

6. A parent may be bad if the goal placed before the children is too immediate and too easy, or is so concerned with money and "comfort" that the children become bored with life.

7. A parent is bad who is a parent only spasmodically, and then usually at the wrong time.

8. A parent is bad who cannot shield a child from premature exposure to adult anxiety or perplexity.

9. A parent is bad who builds up in the child a feeling of inferiority.

10. A parent is bad who will not let a child grow up; who does all the talking; makes all the decisons, and meets all the issues.—Miriam Van Waters, in The Survey.

SIR HARRY LAUDER AND THE TORCH.

The world generally laughed with Sir Harry Lauder over the attitude of some of the Edinburgh Town Council members who voted against the granting of the freedom of the city to the famous comedian, and especially at some of the reasons these sober Sctochmen gave for their opposition.

The incident led the writer of Methodist Table Talk in the Methodist Recorder, London, to bring forth from his treasury a part of an address which Sir Harry gave on one of his American tours. This is what he said: "Some years ago I was sitting at dusk at the window of a house in Scotland so situated that it commanded the view of an entire street of the city. Suddenly there came out from the alley way near the house a man with a lighted torch on the end of a stick. Going to a lamp-post near by, he thrust the torch to the nozzle of the gas jet, which immediately burst into light. He then went to the next post, about the middle of the square, where the flame from the little torch awakened another blaze of light. I was there watching that lamplighter as he pursued his task, and long after his form became indistinguishable I could trace his movements by the lamps he lighted and the long trail of light that he left behind him. Your business and mine, my friends, is so to live that, after our personalities have become lost in the shadows, we shall leave behind us a trail of light that will guide the steps of those who otherwise may walk in darkness." It is because he has so understood his business in life that honors have been proffered to him and given—not just to the laughter-maker, but to the earnest man who had tried to live usefully.—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. C. A. Parks, our pastor at Greenville, Miss., is giving studies in the parables of Jesus at the Wednesday evening prayer meeting.

Rev. J. W. Price, a superannuate member of the Mississippi Conference, requests us to say that he is now living at Union Church, Miss., where correspondents should address him.

Dr. C. D. Bulla, of Los Angeles, Calif., and Rev. O. L. Simpson, pastor of our church at Brevard, N. C., have been added to the editorial staff of the Sunday School Board.

The Minden Methodist church, Minden, La., is now supporting two missionary specials—one in the foreign field and one at home. Two years ago this church had no special. Rev. Leon I. McCain is the pastor.

At the recent session of the Kentucky Conference, Rev. Roy H. Kleiser, formerly of the Mississippi Conference, was appointed pastor at Danville. This is one of the leading appointments of the Conference.

Rev. J. Cude Rousseaux, our pastor at Algiers, this city, has our thanks for a list of five subscriptions to the Advocate, accompanied by check to cover. Brother Rousseaux is in his fourth year as pastor at Algiers.

Rev. G. P. Fikes, Alton, Mo., formerly of Mississippi, in renewing his subscription to the Advocate, says that he has had a great year and that the charge will have the best report in its history thus far.

Rev. J. O. Ware, of Edwards, Miss., in sending a renewal subscription to the Advocate, states that everything goes well at Edwards and that the second year of his pastorate has been a good one.

The Men's Bible class of the Broad Street Methodist Sunday school, Lake Charles, La., has planned a banquet for Thursday evening, Sept. 29, to be addressed by Dr. R. E. Goodrich, pastor of the First Methodist Church, Shreveport.

Dr. Francis Scott McBride, General Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, will have general supervision of the work of the late Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel and legislative superintendent, pending the meeting of the National Board of Directors at Washington, Dec. 12.

Rev. A. W. Martin, Conway, Ark., has been elected to the position of home extension secretary to take the place made vacant by the resignation of Rev. John L. Ferguson to accept the position of superintendent of industrial work with the home department of the Board of Missions.

Our attention has been called to the fact that we were in error last week in saying that Rev. J. W. Dorman, who is to preach the sermon before the Historical Society of the North Mississippi Conference, has been a Methodist preacher for fifty-eight years. The correct figure is forty-eight.

The following telegram was received from Dr. Albert S. Lutz, Monroe, La., on Monday of this week: "Rev. Dan Barr critically ill from operation, Riverside Sanitarium, Monroe." We have no further news of the condition of this faithful servant of the Master. Let earnest prayer be made in his behalf.

The Ruston District Standard Training School is in session this week at Ruston, La. Dr. W. Winans Drake, pastor at Ruston, is educational director, and Rev. W. D. Kleinschmidt, presiding elder of the Ruston District, is chairman of the board of directors. The faculty is composed of Dr. Cleanth Brooks, Alexandria; Mrs. W. W. Templeton, Memphis; Mrs. G. F. Winfield, Jackson, Tex.; Rev. A. K. McLellan, Louisiana Conference extension secretary.

From the proceedings of the Kentucky Conference as reported in the Central Methodist, we learn that Rev. Fred Sartin was transferred to that Conference and appointed to the Pine Grove and Wesley charge; also that Rev. B. W. Ware, a deacon of one year, was transferred to the Mississippi Conference. From the same source we learn that Dr. U. G. Foote, at one time pastor of Rayne Memorial, New Orleans, was granted the supernumerary relation, and that Dr. D. C. Hull was elected Conference lay leader.

Bishop W. A. Candler has appointed Rev. John M. Norris, of Kansas City, Mo., as assistant pastor of the First Methodist Church, Monroe, La., of which Dr. Marion S. Monks is pastor. Because of the rapid growth of the city of Monroe and the natural growth of the First Methodist Church, it became necessary to secure an assistant pastor. Brother Norris transfers to the Louisiana Conference from the Missouri. He is a graduate of Emory University and is a young man of unusual attainments.

Rev. James W. Sells, our pastor at Pascagoula, Miss., began a series of special services last Sunday. He is being assisted by Miss Carolyn A. Hosford, of Springfield, Mass., who has charge of the music, and who is a soloist, saxaphonist, and director of ability. The first service of the series was attended by a congregation that packed the house. Brother Sells states that Miss Hosford desires one other engagement before going back North, and requests that any preacher who might desire her help communicate with him.

Rev. John L. Williams, whose book, "The Cross of Gold in Social Teaching," was announced for publication during the summer, informs us unforeseen delays have occurred, but that it will come from the press on Oct. 15. Brother Williams purposes to have the book on sale at several of the Annual Conferences. As is well known, Brother Williams is superintendent of the Louisiana Child Finding and Home Society, with offices in the Tulane-Newcomb Building, New Orleans. He was formerly a member of the Louisiana Conference, entering the local ranks several years ago.

The commencement exercises of the Broad Street Methodist Sunday school, Lake Charles, La., were held last Sunday. A fine program was rendered, both at the morning and evening hours, the commencement exercises taking the place of the regular preaching services. At the morning service, eleven infants were baptized. The missionary program at the Sunday school hour was in charge of Mrs. H. B. Huffman, a daughter of the late Dr. I. W. Cooper, of the Mississippi Conference. Dr. R. H. Wynn is pastor of Broad Street, and Mr. A. M. Mayo is the general superintendent.

From the Semi-Weekly Leader, Brookhaven, Miss.: "Mrs. W. D. Davis, formerly Miss Jessie Mounger and a member of Whitworth's faculty before her marriage, has been chosen teacher of Bible and religious instructor at Whitworth. Mrs. Davis is a granddaughter of the lamented Rev. E. H. Mounger, former presiding elder of the Brookhaven District, a resident here at the time and a member of Whitworth's Board of Trustees. He was one of the most cultured and able preachers of the Word of his time, and has left descendants who emulate the example of his splendid life, one of whom is Mrs. Davis. The college is forutnate in securing her services."

The editor of the Advocate had the very great pleasure of spending two days last week with Rev. H. W. Jordan, our pastor at Covington, La. The fish were not in a biting humor, but we had a good time, nevertheless. We enjoyed the hospitality of the parsonage home, being graciously entertained by Mrs. Jordan, Baby Jack, and Miss Nellie Gill, a guest in the home, who had been assisting Brother Jordan in some meetings. We also had the pleasure of dining in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Smith, Mr. Smith being the faithful superintendent of the Sunday school. Brother Jordan has done a remarkably successful year's work at Covington.

The first Standard Training School ever held in the Jefferson Street Methodist Church, Natchez, Miss., came to a successful close recently. Thirty-six credits were awarded, with two more to be given later. Rev. Osmond S. Lewis, the pastor, was the educational director. At the closing exercises the following resolutions were unanimously adopted: "This week has been a mountain top experience—it has been a time of full response to Jesus Christ. His presence has been as real and his personality as living as that of our teachers. To the teachers of the first Standard Training School of Jefferson Street Methodist Sunday school of Natchez, who have so patiently and liberally expended their mental powers, we, their pupils, extend heartiest thanks and appreciation. We express gratitude for the series of inspiring lessons. Our hearts were drawn more closely to the Master because his winsome, divine personality was so forcefully presented to us in every lesson. When Jefferson Street Methodist Sunday school shall become a full-fledged Standard Graded Sunday school, she will look back and gratefully acknowledge that her advancement was due to the constructive work accomplished in this, her first Standard Training School. Then, may we carry forward now the work already begun by becoming a body of trained minds in the buiness of the Sunday school. Therefore, be it resolved, That a Standard Training School be held yearly in Natchez, in Jefferson Street Methodist Sunday school."

More than 2,000 people, including many prominent religious and educational leaders, white and colored, witnessed the dedication on Aug. 31 of a great Negro summer assembly ground at Gulfside, Miss., not far from Bay St. Louis. The project, the success of which seems already assured, was conceived by Bishop Robert E. Jones, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, some three years ago, and has the cordial approval of the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension of that denomination. A very fine property has been acquired, comprising 600 acres, with a beach frontage of a mile and a quarter on the Gulf of Mexico. The present equipment consists of three large buildings and a number of smaller ones. One of the buildings, the old "Jackson House," has unusual historic interest, having been the headquarters of General Andrew Jackson during his campaign against the British at New Orleans in the War of 1812. The purpose of Bishop Jones and the other promoters of the enterprise is to make Gulfside a center of religious training, education, and wholesome recreation for the Negro population of the entire South. In view of the fact that within a four hundred mile radius of Gulfside there is a Negro population of 5,761,000, the potential value of such an inspirational center can hardly be overestimated. The dedicatory address was delivered by Bishop W. P. Thirkield, who emphasized the fact that Gulfside would stand for education, religion, and the spirit of co-operation and good will. Rev. Theodore D. Bratton, Episcopal Bishop of Mississippi, expressed warm commendation of the enterprise. A number of county officials were present, also, to express the desire of the county to co-operate fully in making the enterprise a success.

NOTE.

Rev. J. E. Cunningham and family request us to say to their friends that they are very grateful to them, and to the Good Father, for their assurance of sympathetic interest. Brother Cunningham says, further, that he would like to send a personal reply to the hundreds of letters, telegrams and other expressions of kindness that they have received, but that conditions make it next to impossible for him to do so.

We are quite sure that the friends of the family will understand the situation, and that they will be good enough to accept this note as personal. Personal grief and the sympathy and love of real friends are not things that are merely "conventional," anyway.

MONROE DISTRICT STANDARD TRAINING SCHOOL.

The annual Monroe District Training School will be held in First Methodist Church, Monroe, La., Oct. 9-14, inclusive. This will be a five-day school. On Sunday afternoon, Oct. 9, from 3:30 to 4.30, the enrollment, classification, and organization of classes will take place. The lecture periods will be held from Monday through Friday night. The following faculty has been secured: Mrs. J. W. Nance, of San Antonio, Tex.; Mrs. W. B. Ferguson, of the Nashville office; Dr. N. E. Joyner, of Monroe; and Dr. A. S. Lutz, of West Monroe. The courses to be given are: "Intermediate-Senior Department Administration;" "Primary Worship;" "The Worker and His Bible," and "The Christian Religion."

The churches of Monroe and West Monroe are seeking to make this a district-wide school, and to that end are inviting all within the bounds of the district to enroll in this school. Entertainment on the Harvard plan will be provided for all who enroll. The only condition for this entertainment is that names of those expecting entertainment must be in the hands of Rev. Marion S. Monk not later than Oct. 3. Entertainment cannot be provided for those whose names are not sent in.

GOOD NEWS FROM NATCHITOCHES, LA.

We have just closed the 1927 Standard Training School in Natchitoches. There were fifty-one credits issued: "Life of Jesus," 26; "Organization and Administration of the Sunday School," 8; "Story-Telling," 13; "The Small Sunday School," 4. The school was fine in spirit and work, and the faculty, composed of Rev. A. K. McLellan, Dr. W. W. Holmes, Mrs. W. W. Templeton, and Dr. R. E. Smith, were appreciated and did excellent work. The credits are divided among the churches as follows: Gilliam, La., 1; Pleasant Hill (and Marthaville), 9; Campti, 8; Oak Grove, 3; Natchitoches, 30. The school was not as large as last year, but was the largest in the Alexandria District, and Rev. D. F. Anders and Rev. P. O. Lowrey toiled to make it a success. Only a few State Normal College students attended, but President Roy will co-operate next year at a better season, and we look for a larger enrollment then. Also, there is probability of a Standard Training School held in the Normal College if we can get help to pay for it.

Things are beginning in a splendid way at the Normal. There are lots of Methodist students here, too. Eighty-five freshman girls registered in our Sunday school last Sunday at the end of "Freshman week," and we look for a fine large group there to-morrow. A student meeting today was attended by 114 Methodist students who gave their names for work, and for an hour planned their student organization of committees, etc., and heard plans discussed for their work. Then about forty of them stayed another hour for a hard choir practice, under Miss Emma Werner, an accomplished musician. So we shall have a good chorus choir this year; and Normal will let these young women break "study rules" and sing on Sunday night.

We are getting ready for our revival campaign, Oct. 2-16, with Miss Daisy Davies, and Miss Nellie Gill as song leader. Brethren, pray for us, that this plan will be of great good.

I have accepted invitations to teach in the Shreveport and New Orleans Training Schools, and then will have the good month of November to get in shape for Conference.

A number of parents, and one pastor (Rev. Don E. Dulaney) have written me about young women of our church attending Normal. Thank you. We will do all we can to help your girls. Let us hear from you when we can do anything for them.

Sincerely,

H. L. JOHNS.

GENERAL HOSPITAL BOARD IS FUNCTIONING.

The corner-stone of the annex to the Good Samaritan Hospital, Lexington, Ky., was laid Sept. 15, at 3 p. m. The stone was placed according to the beautiful Masonic ritual, under the auspices of the Grand Lodge of Kentucky, Judge Holland officiating. The main address was delivered by Bishop Dickey.

The General Secretary, Dr. C. C. Jarrell, reports that the annex will about double the private bed capacity of the hospital, and will have on its top story a splendid operating pavilion. The cost of the new building, when equipped, will be around $180,000. This addition will mean that the General Hospital Board has lifted this noble old hospital into amazing prosperity and has more than doubled its permanent values in less than three years. Total values are now over a half million.

The Kentucky Conference assumed the ownership of the property at its recent session. The action was unanimous, and the atmosphere was like a camp meeting.

The newly elected Board organized Sept. 15. Mr. Alfred Combs was made Emeritus President for life, and Mr. H. L. Ott became President.

THERE LIVED A MAN ONCE—

By Rev. H. Walter Ledbetter.

There lived a man once
  Who tilled God's ground and breathed his air;
But the things he made,
  With God he would not share.

There lived a man once
  Who made a name rolled in fame;
Would you think it fair,
  This with God he would not share?

There lived a man once
  Who made a profit when he bought and sold;
It did not occur to him
  To God he owed his soul.

There lived a man once,
  By his honored word he could not lie;
To own his God he would not,
  Though he knew he had to die.

There lived a man once,
  He prided himself on what "I am;"
Yet he kept himself aloof from
  The church, the bride of the Lamb.

There lived a man once
  Who stubbornly said, "I'll have my way;"
He did not seem to know
  There would come a judgment day.

There lived a man once
  Who as usual slept upon his bed;
When morning came they Called him to his breakfast; he was dead.

LO! THE POOR PARSON.

Ministers of the gospel would have a hard time if their happiness depended on popular opinion of their worth. Many business men regard ministers as almost as bad as Socialists, saying they attack big business, while radicals who attack big business say that ministers are always its defenders and apologists. Here is what "they" said of two ancient ministers. "John came neither eating nor drinking, and they say, He hath a devil. The son of man came eating and drinking, and they say, Behold a man gluttonous, and a winebibber, a friend of publicans and sinners."

"They say" occurs twice in the above quotation; and although the "say" is different, the "they" refers to the same people. And the moral is to do what you think is right and not care one franc for what anybody says.—William Lyon Phelps, in Scribner's Magazine.

NULLIFICATION IS WRONG.

"Break the law in the name of patriotism," say advocates of nullification of the prohibition laws. The American system is to repeal the law in the name of patriotism. If you love the principles upon which this blessed republic is founded, you will seek to obey the law until according to the processes of government the people in their wisdom see fit to repeal it.

"If it is wrong, the people will repeal it, as the people do not want laws which are wrong in principle.

"There is no safer judge as to a righteous law than the judgment of the people, that vast mass of intelligence and character upon whom our institutions depend for perpetuity."—Senator William E. Borah in address at Annual Meeting of Citizens Committee of One Thousand at Washington.

He—"I'm going out to the great open spaces."
She—"Where men are men?"
He—"No, where a man can find a place to park his car!"—Exchange.

Obituaries

Obituaries not over 200 words in length will be published free of charge. All over 200 words must be paid for at the rate of 1 cent a word. Count the words and be sure to send the amount necessary with the obituary. That will save trouble all around. We cannot make discriminations. Memorial resolutions are subject to the same rule as obituaries.

When the death angel visited the home of Brother I. N. Doyle and summoned the wife and mother, it took from earth one of the sweetest and choicest spirits the writer has been privileged to know. The summons came to terminate a protracted period of suffering and invalidsm. During all the long months of suffering, she bore her infirmities without complaint and was ever cheerful and courageous. MRS. ANNIE ROSSON DOYLE, wife of I. N. Doyle, was born in Pocahontas, Tenn., on April 8, 1856, the oldest of nine children of Dr. David Warley Rosson and Sara Ann Graves. She is survived by five brothers, Horace, Frank, Joe, John, and Gus. The last named being an invalid, was not able to attend the reunion at the home of Sister Doyle which brought to her so much joy a year ago. She is also survived by her husband and two splendid sons, Harry and Charles. When she had scarcely reached young womanhood, her parents were taken within a few weeks of one another, and upon her fell the responsibility of home and mother. How well she met the duties is best evidenced by the devotion and love of the surviving brothers, to whom she was mother. This same self-sacrificing spirit was characteristic of her through all her years. When she was married to Brother Doyle, on Dec. 23, 1883, she took to her new home the three youngest children, who scarcely knew any other mother. Her attitude toward her church was one of serious earnestness. As faithful in attendance as her health would permit, her presence was always an inspiration, with her courage and cheerfulness. A smiling face and a motherly considerateness were invariable. A visit to the home was like a visit to one's own father and mother. A warm and cheerful welcome that radiated sunshine and joy always cheered in the hour of discouragement. Truly, when the final summons came on July 1, 1927, a handmaiden of him that loveth all was summoned to her reward to meet with those who had gone before and whose memory was to remain in the lives of her multitude of friends to point them to the time and place, where, by his grace, no sickness nor sorrow nor death ever come.

A., a Former Pastor.

MRS. MATTIE JANE LEWIS died June 11, 1927. On the 10th of December, 1849, Mattie Jane was born to Hardy L. and Mary Ann Flowers, in Smith County, Miss., near Silverena. She was married to Forbus Wilson Lewis, Dec. 13, 1871. To this union five children were born, one having died in infancy. Wiggins, the oldest son, died Jan. 13, 1901. Her husband also preceded her to the grave six years. She was always frail of body, but never spared herself anything for her loved ones, and went until she fell suddenly on June 11. She united with the Methodist church in early childhood. In her last years, not being able to attend church regularly, she made special effort to go on Communion Sunday, signifying she trusted not in her own merits but the shed blood of Christ, for, "without the shedding of blood is no remission." It is a sweet memory that she went even on her last Sunday on earth, when the invitation was given as Jesus commanded and as the minister was wont to say: "Take, eat; this is my body which is given for you; do this in remembrance of me. This is my blood of the New Testament which is shed for you." She is survived by two sons, Marvin M. Lewis, Tallulah La.; Hardy J. Lewis, Houston, Tex.; one daughter, Mary M. Lewis, Vicksburg, Miss.; one sister, Mrs. Julia McKenzie, Vicksburg, Miss.; three granddaughters, Mary Katherine, Hattie May, and Mildred Lewis, all of White Haven, Tenn.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, the Kigdom Builders' Sunday school class of the First Methodist Church, of Mansfield, La., has heard with profound sorrow and regret that one of its members, PROFESSOR R. E. BOBBITT, in the late hours of the evening at 11 o'clock, on Sept. 9, 1927, after a long and painful struggle with that grim destroyer, Death, has yielded to his fate, acknowledged his conqueror, and has passed on to that undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveler returns; and,

Now, therefore, be it resolved, That Kingdom Builders' Sunday school class extends and tenders to the family and relatives of the deceased the assurance of its deep sympathy in their hour of bereavement; and,

Be it further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted by the secretary of this class to the family of the deceased.

Signed: W. M. Pollock, T. T. Guy, J. W. McFarland, C. M. Corbin, Committee.
